Some have said in this country that these outbreaks and disturbances in the streets of Berlin have been under the control of the present Government, and they could be brought about any time they might so desire. I can not concur in this opinion, as, to my mind, it would be practically impossible to bring this about when it is taken into consideration that thousands of innocent people had to lose their lives. That night at the Adalon Hotel I was introduced to about 15 American officers, all of whom wore civilian clothes. The Army authorities recognized the fact that any Americans who appeared in uniform on the streets of Berlin were liable to have difficulty, and for this reason, and I think wisely so, permission of this kind was given to those who had charge of the American affairs. During the night an occasional shot could be heard, and the next morning I learned that a mob had killed a French officer. This murder caused a wave of indignation to spread through France, and when the body was returned for interment, accompanied by wreaths of flowers put on by the Germans, the French people were very indignant, because they considered these tokens in the way of flowers as mockery. Afterwards Gen. Foch assessed a heavy fine against the German Nation, which will probably be paid to the heirs of the deceased.

Walking down the main street of Berlin, accompanied by the German officer, my attention was attracted to a number of posters displayed in prominent places throughout the city, and on inquiring as to what they said I was informed they were patriotic appeals to the soldiers of the recent army to reenlist in the national guard so their services would be available in case they were needed by Germany. I then remembered that according to the terms of the peace treaty Germany would only be allowed a small army, and my deduction was that in case the peace treaty should fail or the Government was overthrown, or if Germany should enter another war, the national guard units could be immediately federalized, making available immediately a splendid organized army.

The people in the streets had the appearance of being underfed. The food blockade had not been lifted. The same conditions existed then as during the war. The clothes of the men hung loosely from their shoulders. The faces of the women and children were pinched because of undernourishment, and during the drive of five hours through that city of over 3,000,000 population I never saw a single fat person. The officer accompanying me told me that every adult person in the interior of Germany had lost on an average 20 pounds, and I am informed that statisticians make the statement that 800,000 people died in the interior of Germany because of undernourishment. This, in part, is the price that the Kaiser caused his people to pay when he set out to conquer the world. Many of the German people at that time were wearing paper clothes. These seemed to act as very good substitutes for woolen clothes except when it rained. The people on the streets at different places were lined up in single file in long rows waiting for the opportunity of purchasing some necessity. Many of the shelves in various stores were empty, because it was impossible to secure supplies of certain kinds of merchandise. I did not see any meat, butter, or fats in any of the markets I visited. On the other hand, there seemed to be an abundance of vegetables and black bread. The street agitator in Berlin was getting in his work, and as you visited the various sections of the city you could see him standing on the corner addressing the crowds which were gathered around him. Everything seemed to be in a turmoil. You could see in the people's faces a look of dissatisfaction, and the first appearance of happiness I saw while there was on the day that the bulletin boards carried the news that the food embargo had been lifted.

"GERMAN MEDALS."

The German authorities since the treaty of 1812 have controlled the religion, the press, and have not allowed the people to participate in a representative form of government. One of their forms of propaganda was the issuing of medals upon the happening of any great event, and the medals I have with me were distributed to the various societies and organizations under the control of the Government during the war for the purpose of keeping the minds of the people properly informed.

German medal No. 1: Shows on this side the American people sitting with their backs to the wall. In other words, this medal was used to carry the thought to the German people that the Americans were not interested in the war. On the other side is a picture of President Wilson sucking his thumb and about to be bitten by a German serpent, which was to indicate to the German people that if America entered the war she, as a nation, would be attacked or destroyed by this German serpent.

German medal No. 2: This medal shows a picture of a sailboat, with Uncle Sam sitting astride the bow operating it by himself. This was for the purpose of conveying the idea that America had no ships or sailors to man the same, and for this reason she could not render very much service to the Allies. On the other side is the picture of our President, Mr. Wilson, submarined in the ocean, clinging to a life belt and yelling for help, which conveyed to the German people that the ships would be sunk and those on them destroyed.

German medal No. 3: On one side of this medal is the picture of Uncle Sam sitting on a pile of cannon balls, holding in one hand a cannon and in the other a ship. This medal conveyed the idea to the German people that the United States was not neutral prior to the time it entered the war, and was selling munitions of war to the Allies and none to Germany, when, in truth, we were selling munitions of war to anyone who had the money to buy the same. On the other side is a picture of our President, Mr. Wilson, crowned as king and around his neck is a royal scroll.

German medal No. 4: On one side of this medal is a picture of President Wilson, dressed in armor, with his fists clenched. This represented the time when President Wilson sent the message to Germany stating "Unless you stop sinking our ships it will be necessary that the United States sever diplomatic relations and declare war." On the other side of the medal is to be seen the Kaiser's mailed fists holding a message in German, which in substance says, "Every ship entering the restricted zone will be sent to the bottom of the sea."

German medal No. 5: Shows a picture of President Wilson in contrast with that of Moses, the lawgiver, holding in his hands a tablet with 14 spots on it, which represents his message of 14 points. On the other side are the four points which were claimed would result in proper regulation of the world.

German medal No. 6: When the Argonne Forest was captured our newspapers paid the American soldiers a great tribute and justly so. So this medal shows a rooster standing on an American flag crowing, representing the eulogy paid our Army. On the other side they show in derision what we were crowing for, as they pictured the nations we were fighting for, as the Chinese, Indians, Hindus, and the Negroes.

German medal No. 7: This is the famous Lusitania medal, which was made several days before the Lusitania was sunk. On one side it pictures a scene in New York City, showing a great crowd of people standing before the Cunard Line window for the purpose of buying tickets. The warning given by the German ambassador not to sail on that ship is represented by a skeleton standing in the ticket window. On the other side is the Lusitania submarined, half sunk, and the German inscription stating it was sent to the bottom of the sea on the 7th of May, 1915.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I will be glad to.

Mr. EMERSON. How did you find industrial conditions in Germany?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I wish I had more time to tell of the conditions as I saw them in Berlin. The citizens of Germany do not feel that they have been defeated in the same degree as an army that has made an unconditional surrender. They have to a certain extent always been denied the freedom of thought, speech, and action, and for this reason they have depended largely upon the Government for accurate information relative to every matter. I am constrained to believe that the majority of them have been very patriotic in supporting their Government and that practically all of them would prefer to live under a monarchy rather than a republican form of government. Hindenburg is by far the strongest man in Germany to-day. Former Ambassador Bernstorff is a close second in popularity. Both of these characters are adherents of the Kaiser. In the event the present form of government survives, Hindenburg, if he is a candidate, will surely be elected as the next President. Inasmuch as it is necessary to keep armed guards around the public buildings and at the strategical points of vantage throughout the city, it is very evident to my mind that many of the citizens of Berlin have but little faith in their present form of government. I believe if it were possible for the Kaiser to return to Germany that the present butterfly form of government would not last 30 days. Those who were affiliated with him prior to the time he left for Holland are now held high in the estimation of the people, and this being the case it would be a very easy matter for the Kaiser to be restored to his throne.

LONG-SHOOTING GUNS.

In making a trip from Chateau-Thierry to Soissons I saw the place where the Germans had installed one of their long-shooting guns at a distance of some 45 miles from Paris for the purpose of bombarding that city and destroying the morale of the French. When the Americans took Belleau Wood, and then Chateau-Thierry, the German authorities realized they were up against a different kind of foe and that unless they could be stopped this gun would be captured by the American soldiers. It was hastily dismounted, loaded on cars, and carried back into the interior of Germany. The Germans left the foundation and the carriage intact. It is about the size of a railroad turntable supported by steel ball bearings about the size of bowling-alley balls. Charges of dynamite were exploded on each side, rendering the machinery useless, but leaving it in such a state as to make hasty repairs possible in the event it was necessary to use the gun again. In a conversation with a German officer I requested that if it were permissible he give me some information relative to this great invention in the way of a gun that would shoot a distance of approximately 100 miles. He replied that this gun was operated by a special crew of engineers sent by the Krupp Manufacturing Co., and that screens were placed all around it so it was impossible for anyone to gain any information relative to its operation. He stated he was not in a position to give me any further information or tell me where the gun was at that time. He volunteered the statement that the first time this gun was used was when the Germans were shelling Amiens, on the coast of the English Channel. He said the German officers and the Government authorities considered it a great joke when the English made a report which in substance was that they were attacked from the sea, stating they were shelled from long distances, and that they turned their batteries around and fired a number of volleys which were successful in dispersing the enemy. Continuing, he said the truth of this matter was that they were testing their long-shooting guns at a distance of some 70 miles for the first time on the English, and no newspaper has ever given out a correct report relative to this matter.

This German officer volunteered the information that their army would have been successful in capturing Verdun in 1914 had it not been for the wonderful advances made by the Russian Army in the Carpathian Mountains in Austria. He said the morale of the Austrian Army was breaking very fast, and, the Germans realizing that something must be done to bolster them up, he and his men were immediately taken away from Verdun and carried into Austria, and in four days from that time were firing shells into the Russian Army.

WHO WON THE WAR.

France as a nation is entitled to wonderful praise for the sacrifices she made in this war. The blockade and other assistance by England entitles her to special consideration for the part she played. The early resistance of Belgium, which made it possible for the English and French to mobilize, will always be a bright spot in her history. The armies of Italy in the early days of the war were undermined by German propaganda, but later on she recovered and made a most remarkable record. The United States went into this struggle when the battle lines for supremacy were taut from the Alps to the sea, and it was an American division that first met and stopped the German advance on Paris, causing the German armies to go on the defense and remain there until an armistice was asked for and the war brought to an end. I asked the German officer who, in his opinion, was responsible for the success of the Allies. In substance, he replied as follows:

"Germany never did believe that the United States would enter the war. She always looked upon that country as a commercial nation, a money-mad citizenship, one who was only interested in their own welfare. We believed we could take our submarines and destroy the other fleets of the world. We felt we could keep supplies from getting to England and France and in a short time those nations would be forced to their knees. We never dreamed that the United States would become a participant, and for this reason decided to continue our submarine warfare regardless of the wishes of America. When diplomatic relations were severed the United States immediately began to pour billions of dollars into the money tills of England, thereby making it possible for those countries to purchase such amounts of food and supplies as were needed for the armies. Then in a little while troops began to come over by the thousands, and it was impossible to intercept them with our submarines. A little later a million men from the United States of America were ready for use in the front lines. This bolstered up the morale of the English, French, and Italians and furnished a sufficient amount of men so that a united attack could be made from the Alps to the sea, and when this attack was made it was impossible for the German Army to furnish a sufficient amount of men to make the necessary resistance. Our food supplies were low. In my own regiment I only had an allowance of one loaf of bread to the man for three days. I have seen young soldiers sit and cry because of hunger, and, of course, our army in this condition could not compete very long with the army made possible by the addition of the American units. We would have won the war had it not been for the United States. America did it."

EUROPEAN CONDITIONS.

The European nations have always been more or less suspicious of each other. For a thousand years or more wars have been continuously raging in various sections of Europe. The Governments have always viewed each other with more or less suspicion, and for this reason it has been necessary to keep intact large standing armies and large numbers of reserves. At present 20 or more European nations are engaged in various kinds of difficulties. Some of them are fighting over boundary lines, political questions, and other kinds of internal troubles.

I am constrained to believe that unless some kind of authority is created which will have sufficient jurisdiction and power to adjudicate matters between the different nations, these wars will continue. If the 20 or more nations are allowed to continue to struggle for supremacy it means that in 20, 30, or 50 years one nation will be successful in conquering all of the others, and when this condition is brought about, then that nation will become sufficiently intoxicated with the belief that it can go out and conquer other nations of the world, and then the United States may be confronted with the same kind of a condition that existed in 1914. On the other hand, if there is created an international court which will have sufficient jurisdiction to adjudicate and settle conditions like those that exist at the present time, then the contending countries will be asked to bring their difficulties in for settlement. A decision will be made, and if the countries interested do not abide by the verdict, embargoes, military protectorates, and such other regulations as are necessary can be put into effect to guarantee the people the rights and protection they are entitled to. No nation is going to stand out against the combined armies of the world or a section of the world, and if I had been against the creation of an international court, a league of nations, or a plan embodying these principles, prior to going to Europe, I would have had to change my mind as the conditions existing in these countries are indeed very appalling. Germany has severely complained because of the terms of the proposed league of nations. As a nation she has secretly hoped this plan would fail, realizing if it was carried into effect her country would be forever shorn of its military powers. The section in the league of nations which makes it impossible for the Kaiser to return to Germany is, of course, very obnoxious to the citizenship of that country, who would like to see the old monarchial form of government restored. The section that limits the size of her standing army is very unsatisfactory to the military geniuses who have always striven to make that country the greatest military nation on earth. The section that makes it possible for those who are responsible for the war to be tried by a military court is very obnoxious to the loyal adherents of the Kaiser. The other sections which curtail many of the industries are likewise unsatisfactory to many who are directly interested. I do not believe there is any person who will read the proposed restrictions placed on that nation but will say when they are put into effect Germany must change from a military nation to a commercial nation.

The citizens of Germany in the past have been misled. They have relied to a certain extent on every piece of information given to them by the Government authorities as being true. At this time they are deeply concerned over Germany's future. Their cities and towns are intact. Their manufacturing plants are well equipped. They are ready to supply manufactured products to the world in the event sufficient amounts of raw material can be obtained. The indemnity levied against Germany is large. Some say it will be impossible for her to meet the obligations; however, I am of the opinion if rates of exchange can be equalized and supplies of raw material furnished that nation will be able to meet all of the obligations imposed.

CONDITIONS IN BELGIUM AND FRANCE.

In Belgium it was my privilege to visit many cities, including Antwerp and Brussels. That country, while overrun by the Germans, has not witnessed the destruction that has been brought about in certain sections of France. It is true, the people were compelled to abandon their homes and seek shelter at other places. When I was there it was a pitiful sight to see them returning on foot and in various kinds of vehicles for the purpose of going to their former homes.

In France I visited a great many places, including Ypres, Armentieres, Lille, Chateau-Thierry, Soissons, Fismes, Rheims, Apremont, Romagne, St. Juvin, Montfaucon, Verdun, Commercy, Chalons, Hatton Chatel, and many other places in the St. Mihiel and the Argonne Forest. The scenes of destruction, as witnessed in this section, are beyond description. The English language is inadequate to describe the terrible conditions that were encountered by our brave soldiers. The American Army has lived up to the traditions of our Nation, and on every occasion conducted itself in such a way as to entitle it to receive the highest praise. Of course, some will criticize the action of our Government in dealing with the various situations. However, when it is taken into consideration that we only had an Army of 200,000 at the beginning of hostilities, and that we created an Army totaling over 4,000,000 men in a very few months, it can be readily seen that this is an accomplishment almost beyond imagination. Countless warehouses, thousands of miles of railroad, and hundreds of other kinds of facilities were necessary to make this great body of men function properly.

NEGRO SOLDIERS TAKE WHITE BRIDES.

If I have been correctly informed, no soldier in the American Expeditionary Forces was allowed to marry until he obtained permission from his commanding officer. At St. Nazairre I was informed by the general in charge that there were approximately 100 negro soldiers married to French girls who were very desirous of taking their wives back to the United States. I offered a most solemn protest against allowing this to be done, stating that the people of the United States would not look with favor upon the amalgamation of the white and black races. I called attention to the fact that the white girl who accompanied the negro soldier home as his wife would be looked upon with disfavor by the colored woman; would be ostracized by the white women, and it was only a matter of time until she would be an object of charity. I also stated that the liberties given to colored soldiers in France in being allowed to associate with the white girls on an equality would cause many of them, when they returned to the United States, to seek this same privilege, and this, in my opinion, would cause riots and disturbances which would be serious to many of our communities. In less than five days after I had issued this warning the clash between the whites and blacks occurred in our National Capital. The sacrifice of lives of white citizens in Washington corroborated the statements I had made when I protested to the general against allowing negro soldiers to bring their white wives back to the United States. In my opinion this was responsible for new orders which prohibited negro soldiers from bringing their white wives back to the United States. Similar riots broke out in Chicago, Omaha, and other places, and, if I have been correctly informed, in many cases the colored soldiers who participated in the Army were directly or indirectly responsible for same.

It is true that the American Expeditionary Forces officers would not allow American soldiers to marry white German girls, notwithstanding the fact that Negroes were allowed to marry white French girls whenever they so desired. A white officer who is in favor of the mixing of white and black blood in France is in favor of the same condition in the United States. He may be splendidly qualified to exercise and perform other duties in connection with the Army, but when it comes to dealing with domestic problems he would be the most dangerous public servant that could be trusted with responsibilities of this kind.

LESSONS OF THE WAR.

Mr. Chairman, Gen. Pershing has said it would have been wise for every Member of Congress to visit the battle scenes and the various countries of Europe in order that they might have a more comprehensive view of what took place in this great struggle. I feel that I have been greatly benefited by having had the privilege of viewing many of the scenes at first hand. I am especially proud of the splendid accomplishments of those who carried the flag, and I know I express the sentiment of every loyal citizen of this Nation. The one sad part of my trip was the realization that thousands of our brave boys had to give up their lives in fighting for the ideals of democracy and for the protection of our citizenship. I visited the various American cemeteries where thousands of our brave boys are resting in their last sleep. I stood between the rows of neatly painted crosses in the silent cities of the dead, and as I read the inscriptions painted on those crosses I could think of the prayer prayed by the mother for the husband who never returned when she said:

I only pray that while he is away You guard and guide him night and day, and give me strength to tend his little ones until he comes. O'er land or sea, wherever he may be, God bless my man for me.

The price in part the world has paid for protection from the "human octopus" who had stretched out his long, lean, bloody tentacles in an insane desire to control the nations of the earth has reached gigantic proportions. Over 7,000,000 men were killed and 30,000,000 or more will carry their battle scars with them the rest of their natural lives. The loss in ship tonnage, the destruction of cities and towns and the natural waste that comes with war reaches a figure in money so high that it is practically inconceivable to the human mind. The people of our country have contributed their pro rata part in this great holocaust, and the question that should now be uppermost in the mind of every citizen of the United States is, Will our Nation allow the supreme sacrifices made by our soldiers who gave up their lives fall by the wayside without taking such steps as will be necessary to protect our people in the future? God knows we do not ever want to engage in another war. We do not ever want to be placed in a position where it will be necessary to send another soldier across the seas. We have the opportunity of joining with the other nations of the world in a program which will have supervision over all matters pertaining to war. The United States is the promoter of the original idea. It was through the influence of the representatives of our country that a plan of this kind was finally worked out. If we are to abandon the idea and withdraw our support from the other nations who are willing to join together for mutual protection, in my opinion, the proposed league of nations will be abandoned in less than 10 years. Action of this kind would restore barbaric conditions to Europe. Nations would again engage in the making of secret treaties. Unjust rulers would foist wars on the weak nations, and our posterity sooner or later would become participants in order to keep some tyrant military nation from enslaving the world. The mettle of the American soldier has been tested and found to be pure gold. The patriotism of the American citizen has been tried and found to be equal to every occasion. To-day no nation stands higher in the estimation of the world than the United States. We have always followed the golden rule, and as long as we continue the United States will remain the "land of the free and the home of the brave." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the House for its kind indulgence and to ask unanimous consent that I may revise and extend my remarks. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina to use some of his time.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr HUDDLESTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, in August last Mr. Glenn E. Plumb, as the attorney for the railroad brotherhoods and other railroad workers, wrote a letter to Mr. ESCH, chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, in which he made sensational charges of fraudulent capitalization of the railroads of the country. Among other things Mr. Plumb charged generally that of the total of about $18,500,000,000 of the capitalization of the railroads somewhere in the neighborhood of $8,000,000,000 was water and did not represent any real assets that passed to the railroads.

In view of the fact that we were then considering railroad legislation upon which this matter of capitalization had a direct and important bearing, I felt that Congress and the country ought to know as to the truth of those charges; that if they were true we ought to know it, and if they were false we ought to know it, so that we might deal with the subject intelligently.

To that end I introduced a resolution, House resolution No. 243, which provided for the investigation of those charges and of the capitalization of the railroads. The resolution was referred to the House Committee on Rules. It attracted considerable attention, particularly from the railroad employees, and I received many requests and letters concerning it, all urging that the inquiry be pushed and that the facts be given to the public.

I took much pains to look into the matter and to get up the facts. I had the help of the railroad brotherhoods and of their allied organizations, and with their help I was able to collect a great mass of highly interesting information upon the subject. After considerable efforts, the Committee on Rules gave me, on two occasions, about one hour in which to present the case. I had experts present to testify at those hearings. I had with me an expert statistician, who perhaps knows more upon the subject than any other man in this country, Dr. Warne, who has given much of his life to a study of railroad capitalization. At no hearing were we ever able to get over three members of the committee present. I do not criticize the members of the committee for that. They are very busy men. I do not question their good faith nor their desire to be present when this important subject was being considered. But suffice it to say we did not get them there; we never had a quorum; the members of the committee were not there, and they did not hear the evidence given. I did not get one-tenth of the time I wanted to devote to the subject. I brought suitcases full of material that I wanted to submit to the committee. I brought tables showing interlocking directorates—tables prepared with great care and toil, hundreds of pages of tables and other valuable data. It was of no avail. I could not even get this material looked at. Dr. Warne himself prepared a typewritten statement of over 300 pages, giving the financial history of railroad after railroad and exposing the huge frauds in capitalization. He could not get leave even to extend his remarks so as to give this matter to the public. He could not get leave to state the facts. It was a vast and intricate subject, and about all he or the other witnesses could do in the little time given them was merely to speak of the subject in a general way.

I am satisfied that with the information which we had before the Committee on Rules, and which we could produce to-day if we had an opportunity, a great deal of light could be thrown upon the subject of the fraudulent capitalization of the railroads; information would be given that the people are entitled to have; information given to the Members of Congress, without which they can not hope to deal intelligently with this greatest of all domestic questions, the railroad question.

Well, the members of the committee were not at the hearings. Our side, which already knew a good deal about the facts, were all who were there, and I had hoped that the committee would at least see proper to print the hearings, so that they might be able to read them themselves if they were so busy they could not find time to listen to them. At least I hoped that the facts might be made available, so that somebody who does feel an interest in the matter might take it up. Therefore I made formal application to the chairman of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], and to several other members of the committee that the hearings might be printed. They were not long. It would have been a matter of small expense and the information given would have been of inestimable value in dealing with the railroad question.

Now, I understand it to be a rule of the committee that no hearings are printed except by committee action, and the chairman of the committee informs me to-day that he has consulted with members of the committee, that he has had no requests for these hearings from Members of Congress, and that the members of the committee and himself agree that the hearings should not be printed, and they have not been and will not be printed. The valuable information laid before the Committee on Rules has been put in a pigeonhole and the resolution for an investigation of these railroad frauds has been pocketed. The effort which was made to present the facts upon watered railroad stocks to the public has been absolutely wasted. I do not question the wisdom of the Committee on Rules or the propriety of their decision. "They are wise and honorable men and will no doubt with reasons answer you."

Mr. Chairman, I took occasion to go into the subject of fraudulent railroad capitalization on November 15 last and my remarks then made are found on page 8600 of the RECORD. I then showed that the Interstate Commerce Commission in carrying on its investigation of railroad valuations has placed tentative valuations upon 52 different railroads—in the main the smaller railroads, of course—and that upon those 52 railroads the valuations placed were $304,439,491 for cost of reproduction new, $251,965,179 for cost of reproduction less depreciation, and that they found their book value, their investment account the value as given on the carriers' books, to amount to $512,333,636. So that if that same ratio is carried out in the capitalization of all the rest of the railroads, without any question there is something like $6,000,000,000 to $8,000,000,000 of water in these stocks of the railroads of the United States. This vast inflation I interpret the Esch bill, the Cummins bill, and other bills that are being advocated by the railroad owners and managers to give validity to and place a tax upon the American people to pay dividends upon.

I made these points during the consideration of the Esch bill by the House. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] then thought that the original water which was in the stocks was not important, that all the water had been "squeezed out," and on page 8385 of the RECORD of November 12 last, in referring to the matter of the investigation being carried on by the Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. GREEN is recorded as having said:

> It fell to me to institute the investigation against the Rock Island Railway Co. and, in a humble way, to assist its being carried out by the Interstate Commerce Commission. That investigation showed that the Rock Island Railway had been robbed of millions of dollars, but that robbery did not cost the public at large one cent. The consequence of it, as well as the results of robbery of such railroads as the New Haven, the Frisco, and others, fell upon the unfortunate stockholders and bondholders who had invested their hard-earned money in the securities of these railways. Those were the people who had to make up the difference or suffer the loss. In the case of the Rock Island a heavy cash assessment was levied upon the stockholders in order that the railroad might go on with its proper functions. In other cases, such as have been mentioned in debate by the distinguished chairman of the committee presenting the bill, the stockholders, instead of receiving dividends, have gone for years without a penny of return. Whether they will ever see any returns upon their money is another question.

It just so happened that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], usually accurate and always sincere, was mistaken in that statement. The watered capitalization of the various railroads has been carried forward in practically all of the reorganizations The original water injected at the beginning is, in nearly every case, represented in some form or other in the present capitalization. That is the actual fact.

In partial support of this statement I refer Members of the House to the Commercial and Financial Chronicle for January, 1918, volume 106, pages 230 and 231, where it is shown that in the year 1917 $525,000,000 of railroad stocks were issued, and that the roads received only $220,000,000 in cash, or its equivalent, for those stocks. So that in that year alone there was over $300,000,000 in water carried forward or added to railroad capitalization. It goes on and on. It has come down to us now.

No wonder these great interests are concerned with riveting their systems upon the American people now before they learn the facts. No wonder they are fighting the fight of their lives to insure that in the future this water can not be squeezed out, and that we will have to go on carrying this burden of watered stock, go on paying freight rates and passenger fares so as to provide "a reasonable return" upon all this flood of water put into the railroads at the beginning and constantly injected into them with every reorganization down to this very hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That man is lucky who has a sense of humor. I try to cultivate mine; and so I am able to grin at certain aspects of the present railroad situation. The railroad owners have carried on a nation-wide and expensive propaganda against Government control and against Government ownership of the railroads. They spent money like water to convince the people of the United States that Government control has been a rank and dismal failure and that we must get rid of the railroads and get rid of them now, and the average man has been by these means brought to think that Government control is a failure. There is nothing further from the actual facts. But the funny thing about it is that now that the railroads have got the people and Congress thoroughly in the mind of turning the railroads back to private control and turning them back now, the railroad owners suddenly discover that they are unable to accept them back. They say, in affright, "We can not take them; we do not want them back; we can not afford to take them back," and they are saying it will bankrupt the country if we do turn them back without giving the owners financial help to hold them. They say, "We can not finance them; in order for us to accept the railroads back you must help us to finance them. You must give us money to run them with and you must wait indefinitely on us to repay the public money spent to rehabilitate them. You must guarantee dividends; you must help us to further increase rates."

They are insisting on all these things as the price of taking them back. They have created and fostered the desire of the people to turn the railroads back to private control, and now when we are ready to do so they refuse to receive them back. The roads are too hot a proposition for their owners to handle. The situation which the owners have created is laughable.

The only solution of the present railroad problem is to take a little more time to consider it and to work out a solution. Let us keep the railroads for another two years during peace times and run them with an eye single to the public interest, to the interest of economy and businesslike operation. Let us carry forward these principles in Government control, and at the end of that time let us see whether Government control is such a rank failure. If it is a failure, then we can turn the roads back. Even if it is not a failure and if we want to turn them back we can still do so. The owners will then be in the still water of peace times, and if they can ever finance and run the railroads without a subsidy from the Public Treasury they will be able to do it then. They can not do it now. If we turn the roads back now without giving them financial help and without giving them a large increase in rates, half of them will be in bankruptcy within 60 days and a general financial collapse may result. On the other hand, if Congress should turn back the roads upon the terms that the owners demand such a reversal of public opinion will follow that the rebound will land them permanently in Government ownership. The people of this country are not going to stand for another big increase in rates and for what amounts practically to a subsidy being paid railroad owners out of the public funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will not detain the committee with any extended statement about this bill.

There are two principal items in this bill, one for deficiencies in the Employees' Compensation Commission and the other to supply a deficiency in the Public Health Service. The last deficiency bill was approved by the President on the 4th of November. It was the hope and anticipation that it would not be necessary to report out a deficiency bill before the holiday recess, the other deficiency bill having passed so recently. Quite a number of deficiency estimates are pending before the committee, but after considering them, and in consideration of the desire of the other branch of Congress that they might not have their time encroached upon by the consideration of appropriation bills when they desired to pass the railroad bill and other legislation, it seemed to us that perhaps the entire matter could be deferred until after the 1st of January.

It was discovered, however, a very few days ago, that so far as the Public Health Service was concerned, on the 15th of December they had about $400,000 remaining of the $4,000,000 appropriation, with quite a number of outstanding obligated bills, bills that would consume practically all of the remaining balance to their credit.

The committee, therefore, taking the letter and statement of the Secretary of the Treasury with regard to this estimate, has reported out $2,000,000 of the $6,000,000 that was requested, on the theory that this will at least be sufficient to carry the Public Health Service comfortably until the committee can have the opportunity to investigate the Public Health Service and the estimates for the additional funds as well as the other estimates for the deficiency bill. There can not and will not be monthly deficiency bills.

There was appropriated for this service, as I have stated before, $4,000,000. The expenditures at this time, as stated by the Secretary of the Treasury, are on the basis of a million dollars per month. It is the belief of many that have given some thought to the matter that the Public Health Service is carrying on its rolls a great many physicians and doctors whose services should be dispensed with. We intend to conduct hearings on the estimates, and in reporting this amount it ought to be fully understood that it is not the opinion of the committee which reports the bill that this will be sufficient for the end of the year, because the committee has no information on that subject. We have not investigated the matter and accept the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury as the basis of this action. We know they have used up the funds at the present time; that the number of war-risk patients in the hospitals are increasing; and that these patients require an expenditure necessary to take proper care of them, and that must be provided for before the fund is entirely exhausted.

In regard to the appropriation of $1,100,000 for the employees' compensation fund, the committee held hearings upon these estimates. The estimate was slightly more than the amount appropriated. It is a matter over which the committee can have but little control. The expenditures are paid practically automatically upon the commission's findings that the Government employee is entitled to compensation. In case of the death of a Government employee, the law fixes absolutely how much the widow shall receive during her widowhood or, if there be no widow but children, how much the children shall receive.

The law has not been on the statute book very long; and it can be well understood that where the law provides that payment shall be continued for the time the person injured is unable to work, and as the injuries are increasing, the amount of the expenditure under that law will necessarily increase for some time to come.

The compensation commission had on hand on the 1st day of December a net balance of $138,003.33. Its expenditures by the month amounted to $166,177. It was estimated that on the 24th day of this month the entire appropriation would be exhausted and there would be a deficit at the end of the month of $28,173.67.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not catch the average monthly expenditure.

Mr. GOOD. One hundred and sixty-six thousand one hundred and seventy-seven dollars. That was for December. The amount has been increasing in recent months.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then that is not the average.

Mr. GOOD. That is for December. The amount has been increasing right along. It was anticipated that because quite a number of employees in the navy yards and arsenals would be discharged—they being under the provisions of this law—there would be a falling off, but the commissioner explained that their anticipation in that respect had not been realized, and that there was an increase both in death claims and compensations for injuries.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman stated that the appropriation now available would be expended on the 24th of this month.

Mr. GOOD. That is the estimate.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. How much was the appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. For the fiscal year, $1,000,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is more than the rate named by the gentleman for December.

Mr. GOOD. Slightly more.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Slightly more!

Mr. GOOD. But, so far as compensation is concerned, the $1,100,000 was the exact amount estimated. If it continues at the rate which the commissioners believe, the $1,100,000 will hardly be enough to carry them for the rest of the year.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would not seem to indicate an increase by months if the month of December was less than the average for the last six months.

Mr. GOOD. No; the month of December was more than the average.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman stated the month of December was how much?

Mr. GOOD. One hundred and sixty-six thousand one hundred and seventy-seven dollars.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would not amount to any more than a million dollars for six months.

Mr. GOOD. No; it amounts to just about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would not indicate any special increase. Of course I can understand that it naturally is an increase, because every time anyone is put on the rolls for life, of course that is an increase, unless some one is dropped at the same time; and they are put on faster than they are dropped off, necessarily, at the beginning.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman figure that the Public Health Service will increase in expenses now or decrease?

Mr. GOOD. It is very difficult to say. I understand there are several estimates for increased facilities, to build new hospitals, and if that is done it is going to take a much larger sum to conduct all of these hospitals, all over the country, than if they only have a few.

Mr. TILSON. If the bill amending the war-risk insurance act recently passed through this House, now pending in the Senate, which makes more liberal provision for discharged soldiers, goes into effect, will it not mean that many men who have remained in military hospitals will then take their discharges and go into the Public Health Service hospitals as discharged men? And if so, will it not necessarily mean a considerable increase in the expense of the Public Health Service?

Mr. GOOD. That may be; I have not given any thought to that phase of the question. There is one particular matter in regard to the compensation commission that the House should understand. It was the intention of the commission to assume jurisdiction of all injuries sustained by employees in the shipbuilding yards employed by the United States Shipping Board. This commission has always assumed jurisdiction and has paid the claims to the clerks and the officers of these organizations. It has also paid the claims for damages to persons employed by the Division of Operations of the Fleet Corporation, but the claims for injuries to persons in shipyards have always been paid by the Shipping Board according to the laws of the State where the plant was located and where the injury occurred. Recently a ruling from the Comptroller of the Treasury intimated that these employees were employees of the United States, and therefore were entitled to the provisions of this law, and it was the intention of the commission to take jurisdiction of such injuries and to pay the claims.

An estimate was made for that purpose, but attention was called to the fact that the House had already passed a bill which provided that we should go out of the business of building ships, and it would not be wise to turn over this organization that the Shipping Board has and create a new bureau and pay these claims. Finally the commission agreed that that would be the businesslike thing to do, and so they withdrew from the consideration of the committee the estimate for claims on account of injuries sustained in these shipbuilding yards. That is the explanation of the difference in the amount estimated for compensation and the amount carried in the bill. I think that is all I care to say with regard to the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Are the operating expenses of the Shipping Board paid out of the appropriation made by Congress or do they have a revolving fund of some sort?

Mr. GOOD. The operating expenses are paid under the order of the President out of the operating revenues of the ships. I suppose that is what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman means the Emergency Fleet Corporation or the Shipping Board? We have put it in for the Shipping Board and not for the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And that is the distinction. Do I understand that the comptroller holds that the operating force is entitled under the compensation act to be paid out of the Federal Treasury, where the other operating expenses are paid out of the operating income?

Mr. GOOD. I have not seen the decision. When my attention was called to the matter I immediately took it up with the compensation commission, and they said that they had always paid the employees of the Emergency Fleet Corporation because there was no State law governing the compensation for injuries sustained while at sea. They had also paid, as I recall now, compensation for injuries to clerks in the offices, and had done the same thing with regard to clerks in the Shipping Board, but had never paid, with the exception of one or two cases, the claims for injuries to persons employed by the Shipping Board in the building of ships.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is very difficult to get at the cost of operation of anything which is supposed to pay its operating expenses out of its operating income if you find that a proportion of the operating expenses is paid out of another fund entirely with which the board has nothing to do.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Hurley, I understood, took the position, and I can see the reason for it, that inasmuch as the plants were located in the various States, and the compensation laws of the States applied to those plants, then when an injury occurred in a plant, say, in Pennsylvania, he would pay the claim in accordance with the compensation laws of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As if it were a private plant.

Mr. GOOD. As if it were a private plant. If the injury occurred in California, he paid the claim as though it were a private plant operated under the laws of California. When it came to the operation of ships at sea, if an injury occurred there was no State law that controlled him at all, and so this compensation commission assumed jurisdiction of those employees and has always paid the claims of such employees.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And that operating expense is not charged against the operating expense of the Fleet Corporation?

Mr. GOOD. It would not be; no.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They escape that charge. So in the end if they made a profit they made that profit—a good deal like some of the other juggleries that go on with different systems of expenditures of the Government where the persons interested seek to hide the real facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Employees' compensation fund: For the payment of compensation provided by "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, including medical, surgical, and hospital services, and supplies provided by section 9, and the transportation and burial expenses provided by sections 9 and 11, $1,100,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: On page 2, after the word "expended," in line 21, insert the following: "Provided, That the compensation heretofore or hereafter paid by the United States by the Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to or on account of employees for disability or death resulting from personal injuries sustained while in the performance of their duties shall be in full satisfaction of the claim of such employees or their legal representatives against the United States."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield? What is the purpose of that?

Mr. GOOD. The purpose of that provision is to prevent in the future any person who was paid by the Emergency Fleet Corporation or the Shipping Board for injuries received subsequently making a claim against the United States under the provisions of the employees' compensation act and claiming that he was entitled to the provisions of that act. Unless the matter is absolutely understood and provided for in some such way, we stand a fair show of paying for those injuries twice, once by the Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation and another time by the compensation commission.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is, the Shipping Board could make a voluntary contribution in the way of compensation, and then, after receiving that, the person injured might apply for the legal compensation authorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman has stated it correctly, and this amendment provides that if they receive compensation from the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation for their injuries it shall be in full of all compensation for such injuries under the provisions of the compensation act.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, does the gentleman think that that would give a person the right to choose between the two, or is he required now to take the compensation from the Shipping Board?

Mr. GOOD. I particularly inquired as to whether there was any dissatisfaction among these employees in the various plants, and Judge Payne advised me that there is absolutely no dissatisfaction, that they are all satisfied with the compensation which he has been able to pay and which his predecessor paid, and while the compensation paid in most instances will be a little less than the compensation provided for under the compensation act, yet they are entirely satisfied with it and accept it in that spirit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to ask the chairman of the committee some questions. I notice in nearly all of these deficiency appropriations that are brought in that they are for the real essential features of the service. Now, what I am wondering is that if the large lump sums that are appropriated in each appropriation bill can be used at the discretion of the head of a department are not used to a larger degree for matters that Congress would not appropriate money for directly and the essential parts of the service are left unprovided for, and then later in the year they bring in a deficiency bill and Congress gives it to them, knowing that Congress must provide for these things. Now, in the next place, we have several times, and this is said with due respect to the chairman, cut the estimates of the department and say we are going to run the department on less money for this year, but before the end of the session there is a deficiency bill brought in that provides for a great many things that should have been provided for at the time the bill was passed. I would like to ask the chairman if there is any way this matter can be handled whereby there will not be so many deficiencies and these deficiencies always authorize essential matters that must be provided for in the bill?

Mr. GOOD. With regard to these lump-sum appropriations, these appropriations can not be used for any purpose except to pay for compensation for injuries or death claims——

Mr. SNELL. I did not have reference distinctly to this; but as a general proposition they are brought before us in the way of deficiencies.

Mr. GOOD. When estimates for deficiencies come to the Committee on Appropriations they are usually taken up with the chairman of the committee that would naturally have to do with the matter if the estimate was for a regular appropriation bill; that is, if it was a military matter we take up the matter with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and get his attitude.

The purpose of the Committee on Appropriations in reporting out a deficiency bill is to eliminate wherever we can without injury to the service and reduce them as much as it is possible to do. If the deficiency is to supply a deficiency in a lump-sum appropriation, we have no alternative but to report an item in that form.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SNELL. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SNELL. The point I have in mind is whether or not the large lump sums carried in appropriation bills are not very largely left to the discretionary powers of the chief of the bureau or the man in charge?

Mr. GOOD. That is true now, and I believe it has always been true. Take the next item, hospital service. There is an appropriation for this year of $4,000,000. There is a deficiency estimate——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman tell us what the bill is where we appropriate large lump sums at the discretion of bureau chiefs to expend as they wish, because I do not know?

Mr. SNELL. Are there not large sums carried in nearly every one of these bills?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not think the gentleman should say that. We are not appropriating blank sums generally.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We are doing it right here in this bill.

Mr. SNELL. Right in this bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] asks is, if there are blank sums appropriated to any department, to be shifted to any fund in order to be used, whether Congress directs it or not.

Mr. SNELL. That is not it exactly. It is whether there are not sums that can be shifted to various things, in the discretion of the heads of the departments.

Mr. GOOD. What I had in mind was appropriations like this for the Public Health Service. We do appropriate a lump sum for that, but, of course, that must be all expended, in the discretion of the Surgeon General, for the public health, and he has wide discretion in the expenditure of it. Some of those services have grown rapidly, as the Bureau of War Risk Insurance has. I do not know whether there is any abuse to an extent with regard to the expenditures or not. I only know that, of course, Congress would like to have all lump-sum appropriations eliminated wherever it is possible, and I think that is right. But whether or not lump-sum appropriations can be entirely done away with I have some doubts.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me that we ought to do something so as not to have so many in the deficiency appropriations.

Mr. GOOD. I think, as far as clerks are concerned, it ought to be done away with, and wherever the appropriation of a lump sum can be divided and the appropriation made for a particular part of the service, I agree with the gentleman it ought to be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I renew the motion to strike out the last two words.

As I understand this paragraph now under consideration, the employees' compensation fund, this appropriation can not be used for clerical help?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Clerical help is provided for elsewhere?

Mr. GOOD. It is provided for elsewhere in the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In the next item it could be used for clerical help or anything, in the discretion of the Surgeon General?

Mr. GOOD. That is true.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the cross conversation, or debate, between the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] in reference to lump-sum appropriations recalls to me that I have seen in the papers several times lately that the Commission on Reclassification has proposed, or intends to propose, an abolition of the specific appropriations for clerical help in the Government departments and provide for lump-sum appropriations. I have always been very much, in the past, in favor of Congress making specific appropriations, but I am willing to admit that I am ready to reconsider the subject. I am not entirely sure that it would be wiser for us to make a lump-sum appropriation for the clerks in the War Department and clerks in other various departments or bureaus of the Government, and especially if we can cut them in two, and then let the head of the department feel the responsibility upon him to get some work done by those who remain in the department. As long as we maintain the system of adding annually to the number of clerks specifically we will keep increasing the number without much concern; I will not say that, because they do have a good deal of concern, but without too great concern, about the amount of useless work that is done or the amount of no work that is done by the various clerks in the departments. We have got in some way to reduce the expenses of the Government. I do not know just how it will be done. I think if we could cut all of the appropriations until the men who had charge of spending them felt they had to make every dollar go its furthest, we would get a reduction in expenses without any injury to the public service.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The last item in this bill illustrates very clearly one of the evil ways of legislating into which Congress has fallen. It is not confined to the Appropriations Committee, but it is in the Military Committee, of which I was a member so long, and in other committees of this House. Take the last item in this bill. It enumerates some 20 or 25 different things for which the entire sum of $2,000,000, mentioned in the item, may be freely and legally expended. The language gives no definite information as to how the money is going to be spent, except that it may be spent for any or all of the purposes stated. It might all be spent for medical, surgical, or hospital service, all spent for supplies, or for clerical help, or for equipment, and there are a dozen other things that it might be spent for.

So far as the bill is concerned, Congress has no detailed information whatever as to how the money is to be expended. I say the fault is not confined to any one committee. It is general throughout our legislation. Such an item of appropriation does not furnish Congress any more control over the matter than if we made lump-sum appropriations outright, and permitted the head of each department to spend the money as he sees fit, within the legal limits of the authority of his department.

It seems to me that we might devise some means of stating how much we are going to expend for one thing and how much for another; and if we can not do that we might as well go all the way to lump-sum appropriations, and let the heads of departments be responsible for it. An item like this is a sort of combination makeshift, which is neither one thing nor the other.

Mr. GOOD. This is a lump sum.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Of course, this bill carries a deficiency appropriation, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has stated, pending a hearing as to the amount of money really needed by the Public Health Service.

Mr. TILSON. It is, however, stated in general language, and it does not appear here what it is going to be expended for. Now, probably one or two of these items in this large number of items will consume most of this money. Is not that true?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Probably that is true, but I will say this to the gentleman, that in the majority of bills, the regular annual appropriation bills, there is an attempt made on the part of the committee to set out with some degree of particularity the amount of money that may be expended for certain specific purposes. Of course, when it comes to contingent expenses of the departments, consisting of various items, including the laundering of towels and things of that sort, it is impossible to go into minute details. But I think the gentleman will find that in the regular appropriation bills coming from the Committee on Appropriations there is always an attempt to set out the items with as great an amount of particularity as possible.

Mr. TILSON. I am not contending for great particularity, because if you use a great amount of particularity there will be an effort on the part of the officials of the spending bureau to make sure that they expend everything under each one of the items, so that it will be sure to be appropriated for the next year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I was very much impressed with the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in reference to the matter he referred to in regard to lump-sum appropriations. I favor, whenever possible, definite amounts for definite items, but it does not seem to me that it is possible for the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or for this Committee of the Whole to specify in that last item any definite amount for the purpose for which some of these sums should be expended. The number of patients, for instance, and the number of people to be buried at public expense, and the amount of surgical supplies needed, it seems to me, are absolutely beyond the ken of the human mind. It can not be known in advance what those amounts should be, and from my experience on the Committee on Naval Affairs I am a good deal inclined to believe that sometimes a lump-sum appropriation is better than a specific appropriation, provided we will hold the heads of the departments strictly responsible for the amount intrusted to their care. Too often, when specific sums are named, the departments, for fear of having their next estimates cut if they do not use all the money, will expend it when it is not necessary.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. HICKS. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. There is nothing in this to prevent the officials of the department, if they saw fit, to employ clerks to a number sufficient to use this entire $2,000,000, and then come back here in an emergency appropriation bill to get appropriations for fuel, light, water, and other absolutely essential things for the operation of the department.

Mr. HICKS. I will say to my colleague that it may be possible in that item to specify the amount needed for clerical help, and I think it should be done; but how would it be possible to specify in advance the number of people to be buried at public expense, say, six months from now, or the amount of medicinal material to be purchased, when all this depends on conditions that can not be foreseen?

Mr. SNELL. You can not do it, but in some way a method should be devised to prevent these departments from employing additional clerical help without specific authorization.

Mr. HICKS. I also believe that you should cut them down, but in every provision you can not specify the amount that may be needed in the future when that future is based on fluctuations.

Mr. SNELL. That is true, but a lot of the principal ones should be specified, it seems to me, so that they would not be coming back here for additional appropriations.

Mr. HICKS. I agree with my colleague. I am not disputing what he says on that point.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield along that line?

Mr. HICKS. Yes; gladly.

Mr. CANNON. If you want to see examples where the salaries and the rates of pay are increased under the operation of the lump-sum system, go out and look at the hearings and make some little inquiry and note the delightful salaries and increases of salaries that can be found in the Bureau of Labor and the Public Health Service and the Housing Corporation. Great Heavens! You can not control those expenditures when the appropriations are made in that form. A vast proportion of the aggregate amount is wasted, and it will be so until the condition gets so bad that the people will rise up and turn them out.

Mr. HICKS. I condemn those practices to the utmost. It shows the necessity of holding the heads of departments strictly accountable. Then you will have a chance to hit them and, if necessary, impeach them.

Mr. CANNON. But they are accountable now.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

For medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for war-risk insurance patients and other beneficiaries of the Public Health Service, including necessary personnel, regular and reserve commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, clerical help in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, maintenance, equipment, leases, fuel, lights, water, printing, freight, transportation and travel, maintenance and operation of passenger motor vehicles, and reasonable burial expenses (not exceeding $100 for any patient dying in hospital), $2,000,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In reference to the last paragraph, is there any limitation now in the law as to salaries of the clerks?

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman refer to clerks in the District of Columbia?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The paragraph just read may be expended for clerical help.

Mr. GOOD. In the District of Columbia and elsewhere. So far as the force provided for in the legislative bill for the Public Health Service, of course, the salaries of those clerks could not be increased. I think there is no deficiency so far as that organization is concerned; it is only the Public Health fund of $4,000,000 where there is a deficiency.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What is the most of the $2,000,000 for?

Mr. GOOD. We have over 40 hospitals in the United States under the Public Health Service with a total, approximately, of 6,000 patients. Most of those are war-risk patients. These hospitals are costing the Government about a million dollars a month on the present method of operation. There was an appropriation of $4,000,000 and they are asking for $6,000,000. Now, of course, the expenditures necessary to carry on these great establishments take a rather wide range. If we appropriated for every individual item it would take weeks to prepare and put such a bill through Congress.

The urgency of this matter did not appear until recently. As I stated in the opening, this appropriation is made now to tide the Public Health Service over until the time of the regular deficiency bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, with reference to what was said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] in regard to the burial expenses, the committee will notice that it is strictly limited to $100 for each patient; so there could be no complaint about that.

Mr. HICKS. The grand total is not limited, of course.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman was referring to a matter about which nobody had made a complaint. Here is an appropriation for officers—commissioned officers and clerical help—as to which I do not yet understand whether the money could be expended within the discretion of the bureau——

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman knows that the Secretary of the Treasury would not be empowered to increase the pay of a commissioned officer or a noncommissioned officer; his pay is fixed by law. The Secretary could not increase his pay as long as he holds a position under a given commission.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. These things are manipulated so fast by transfers and assignments and varying conditions.

Mr. GOOD. There is no limit to the clerical help, and neither is there any limit in the appropriation of $4,000,000 made to the War Department for clerical help in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman know how many additional clerks they want to put on?

Mr. GOOD. No; I do not.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It seems to me that the amount to be spent for clerical help might have been limited.

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe out of this appropriation there is expended anything of a considerable sum for clerical help. I should say that the clerical help in the District of Columbia charged to this appropriation does not amount to $10,000. Most of their help was provided for in the legislative bill. If they have drawn on this fund for that purpose, it must be on account of the growth of the service.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it is pretty hard to tell just what extravagant expenditures the Public Health Service will enter upon. Members of the House are somewhat familiar with the legislation relating to what is sometimes called, I believe, the Speedway Hospital in Chicago, which Congress attempted to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, and which would be under the Public Health Service. I am told that the Public Health Service has now informed Congress, directly or indirectly, that if it takes the hospital at Chicago it ought to have half a million dollars to build fine dwellings for hospital surgeons. All the rest of the numerous hospitals in Chicago not government owned, and some of them government owned but not by the United States Government, have no difficulty in taking care of the surgeons within the hospital buildings and permitting the surgeons to obtain quarters outside of the hospital. But this grossly extravagant Public Health Service insists that it shall be provided with a large number of new, fine dwelling houses for the surgeons in the Public Health Service to live in without rent, as an additional perquisite.

Years ago the Public Health Service, so far as its legislation was concerned, was largely under the jurisdiction of the committee of which I was for many years a member and at one time the chairman. I had the honor to procure the enactment of the legislation giving it its title, the Public Health Service, which I think is a very good title. That was one of many pieces of legislation relating to it. I have the most kindly feeling toward the Public Health Service and toward many individual men connected with that service whom I know personally. They have gone crazy with the idea of expending public money, it may be profitably in many directions, but they have gone crazy with the idea of expending money out of the National Treasury for almost every conceivable object. They think it is their business only to find some method of spending money. I wish they had a jurisdiction where they had to raise some of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11223) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Employees' Compensation Commission and the Public Health Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, had directed him to report the same back to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. GOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS GREAT PEE DEE RIVER NEAR CHERAW, S. C.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9947) to authorize J. L. Anderson and H. M. Duvall to construct a bridge across Great Pee Dee River near the town of Cheraw, S. C.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That J. L. Anderson and H. M. Duvall, their successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Great Pee Dee River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between the towns of Cheraw, Chesterfield County, S. C., and Society Hill, Darlington County, S. C., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The following committee amendments were read, considered, and agreed to:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the words "between the towns" and insert "and at or near the."

Page 1, lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "and Society Hill, Darlington County, S. C."

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

By unanimous consent the title of the bill was amended so as to read:

A bill to authorize J. L. Anderson and H. M. Duvall to construct a bridge across Great Pee Dee River at or near the town of Cheraw, S. C.

On motion of Mr. STEVENSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SEWERS AT LITTLE CHUTE, WIS.

Mr. CLASSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10402) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permission to the municipal authorities of Little Chute, Wis., to construct, maintain, and operate sewers on certain Government property and under the United States canal at Little Chute, Wis.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission to the municipal authorities of the village of Little Chute, in the county of Outagamie, in the State of Wisconsin, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate sewers and appurtenant works on United States property and under the United States canal at said village: Provided, That such permission shall be subject to such conditions, restrictions, rules, and regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe, and that the construction of such sewers and works shall not be commenced until plans therefor prepared by the said authorities shall have been submitted by them to the Chief of Engineers and shall have received his written approval: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may terminate the said permission whenever and at such time as in his judgment the public interests require.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, I notice that this bill was reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I do not know why, and I do not know what character of Government land we have there.

Mr. ESCH. This is merely a right of way along the Fox River Canal, and the municipal authorities of Little Chute desire to lay a sewer under the canal, to connect with the Fox River. They desire to do that in the winter time, so that it will not by any possibility interfere with navigation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then I take it that the bill was properly referred to the committee of which the gentleman is chairman.

Mr. ESCH. Yes. The bill was practically drafted by the War Department. It safeguards the Government, and this is really a revocable permit, with the plans to be approved by the War Department.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming what the program for Friday and Saturday is?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we expect to take up the Private Calendar to-morrow, and on Saturday the Committee on Rules, I understand, intends to present a rule for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11224) to amend an act entitled an act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes.

Mr. WINGO. What about the recess proposition?

Mr. MONDELL. The situation is very uncertain, I regret to say, with regard to recess. We still hope that the Senate may pass the railroad bill before Saturday evening. If the railroad bill is passed before that time, and it is sent to conference, I hope that we may secure an adjournment until the 5th of January. If it does not, it would seem to me that it is impossible to secure an adjournment. I do not apprehend, however, that in any event we could do very much of any business in the House after Saturday for a few days.

Mr. WINGO. What is the gentleman's objection to taking up right away the bill that has passed the Senate, and has been reported by the House committee unanimously, to give legal-tender qualities to gold certificates?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no objection at all to doing it.

Mr. WINGO. I think the House could do it in five minutes. Why not do it to-night?

Mr. MONDELL. If the House desires to do that, I have no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Why not do it to-morrow?

Mr. WINGO. This bill ought to be passed right away. It will take only 5 or 10 minutes. In fact, I think if the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] would make a statement of five minutes, the House would pass it immediately.

Mr. QUIN. What time is it intended to meet to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. I shall not ask that we meet at any other than the regular time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would say that the Committee on Ways and Means has authorized the chairman to ask unanimous consent to-morrow of the House to consider a minor bill with reference to the pay of a few laborers in the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would state to the gentleman from Wyoming that I agree with him on the question of adjournment; that I do not think we ought to recess unless the railroad bill should pass, and even if that were possible I could not agree to a recess until the bill I refer to has been passed and been presented to the President.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it ought to be passed. While it is a minor matter, I think it is important.

Mr. WINGO. It is minor, in one sense.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does not the gentleman from Arkansas think, after all, that where a committee brings in a bill one day, it ought to be willing to let the House wait a little while before its consideration, inasmuch as the committee has been waiting months before it has given it consideration?

Mr. WINGO. Oh, the committee has not waited months. We took it up the next day after it left the Senate.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They waited months before they introduced the bill.

Mr. WINGO. I am not responsible for that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, the gentleman might have introduced it. Anybody might have done that.

Mr. WINGO. I am not in the habit of introducing bills unless I think there is some chance to put them through.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, I think the gentleman has introduced many bills that he knew he had no chance to put through. So have I and so has every active Member of the House.

Mr. WINGO. No; I have not. I have usually gotten my bills through, although some of them may not have passed when the Republicans were in power; but generally, with the Democrats in power, I have gotten my legislation and have been satisfied.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No committee has the right to suppose that because they report a bill one day to Congress we are going to stop and take up that one bill——

Mr. WINGO. I had not thought so; but I think the gentleman, if he knew the facts underlying the question——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have examined the bill and know the facts underlying the bill. There is nothing special about it——

Mr. WINGO. There is something new as to conditions existing.

Mr. MONDELL. I think we can pass the bill in less time than it takes to discuss the question.

Mr. MADDEN. I object to it, if it is for to-night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill which the gentleman from Wisconsin presents?

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

Mr. CANNON. Why not ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as read the third time and passed?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLASSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What went with the objection of the gentleman from Illinois?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. He withdrew it.

Mr. CANNON. I did not make objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am not referring to the gentleman, Mr. CANNON, but the gentleman from Chicago, Mr. MADDEN.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission to the municipal authorities of the village of Little Chute, in the county of Outagamie, in the State of Wisconsin, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate sewers and appurtenant works on United States property and under the United States canal at said village: Provided, That such permission shall be subject to such conditions, restrictions, rules, and regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe, and that the construction of such sewers and works shall not be commenced until plans therefor prepared by the said authorities shall have been submitted by them to the Chief of Engineers and shall have received his written approval: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may terminate the said permission whenever and at such time as in his judgment the public interests require.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLASSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REREFERENCE OF JOINT RESOLUTION 46.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution 46 may be rereferred from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution No. 46 be rereferred as requested. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 46, extending until July 1, 1920, the effective date of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement the existing laws against unlawful restraint and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this makes about the twelfth time since I have been a Member of Congress that we have had this performance gone through of sending it to one committee and then having it rereferred——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is, I think, the third time.

Mr. WINGO. I may be mistaken. I thought it was about twelve times. It seems to me in every case it is wrongfully referred and then has to be rereferred. When is the committee going to make a report?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It does not necessarily mean that it will be passed. It belongs to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I think it ought to go there so we can consider it.

Mr. WINGO. Does the Committee on the Judiciary intend to consider the main subject and make the necessary amendments that would be permanent law?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Well, that matter is under consideration. No definite action has been taken so far, but we have consulted the Attorney General——

Mr. WINGO. I have received that same answer——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is all anybody can say.

Mr. WINGO. They keep on promising consideration, but we never get it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. What is the subject matter of the bill, will the gentleman state?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Section 10 of the Clayton Act has been suspended once or twice before, and, of course, during the war it has been suspended——

Mr. DUPRÉ. It is an old friend.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The proposition now is to have it extended until the 20th of July of next year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Reserving the right to object, what is this bill?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is a resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is a resolution extending or suspending the operation of section 10 of the Federal Trade Commission act——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the effect of it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Well, the provisions of section 10 prohibit certain trustees from being on corporations that deal with each other. And pending the process of turning the railroads back to the private owners it has been claimed—I do not know whether it was before that—that for the time being at least it was not put in force. The Interstate Commerce Commission has repeatedly recommended it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is not to pass the bill but to make a change of reference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why did it not go to the right place?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The present Speaker, like the last Speaker, sometimes sends a bill to the wrong committee, and the committees between them know that, and both ask to have this changed. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Are both committees asking for the change?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I withdraw the objection. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of the majority leader just a minute. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming if it would be possible for us to get through a resolution making Pershing's report a House document? We have had such an enormous amount of demands for it, and perhaps every Member of the House has, that it ought to be made a House document.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why not introduce a resolution?

Mr. CALDWELL. When I do so it is always canned.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the matter is worthy of consideration, and I promise to give it consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the Committee on Printing has that under consideration already.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LINTHICUM, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for an indefinite period, on account of important business.

ANGELINE MEDBURY.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of the following privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 361.

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Angeline Medbury, widow of David W. Medbury, late an employee of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months of his compensation as such employee, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the expenses of the funeral of said David W. Medbury.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MATTIE LONG.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I have another resolution for which I would like to ask consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois presents a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 391.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Miss Mattie Long, daughter of Capt. William Max Long, late an employee of the House of Representatives, being a doorkeeper on the "old soldiers' roll," a sum equal to six months of his compensation as such employee, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the expenses of the funeral of said Capt. William Max Long.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

BENJAMIN F. JONES.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I have another similar resolution, and I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 390.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Benjamin F. Jones, brother of Henry T. Jones, late an employee of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months of his compensation as such employee, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the expenses of the funeral of said Henry T. Jones.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM J. DONALDSON, JR.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I have another resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 353.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided by law, increased compensation at the rate of $400 per annum for the services of the superintendent of the press gallery in lieu of the compensation now being paid to him.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question. What is the reason for this increase?

Mr. IRELAND. The gentleman has been an employee of the House for a good many years, and is now drawing $1,600 a year. He has entire supervision of the press gallery. His duties are similar to the duties of the superintendent of the press gallery in the Senate. However, the Senate employee draws $2,500 a year and has two assistants, while the superintendent of the press gallery in the House does all of the work himself. In the opinion of the committee it is a very meritorious resolution, and they believe that he is entitled to it. It was passed by the committee in my absence, but I am in thorough accord with the decision of the committee and the report.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What is his present salary?

Mr. IRELAND. Sixteen hundred dollars.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And he gets in addition to that the $240 bonus?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. SNELL. Which will make it $2,240 a year.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Is the incumbent of that position now an organization Republican? If so, I am for it.

Mr. IRELAND. I believe he is a Democrat.

Mr. CALDWELL. Then I am for it all the more.

Mr. IRELAND. I am not sure about that. I really do not know positively what his politics may be.

Mr. STEVENSON. Is this a unanimous report from the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. IRELAND. I do not know. I was not present at the time it was passed by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, December 19, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Bureau of the Census for additional expenses of the Fourteenth Decennial Census (H. Doc. No. 530); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Department of Agriculture for preventing the spread of the European corn borer, fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 531); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Navy Department and Naval Establishment for the service of the current fiscal year (H. Doc. No. 532); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. DENT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 137) authorizing the Secretary of War to construct a pontoon bridge across the Chattahoochee River at West Point, Ga., and for other purposes, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 510), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho, from the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8864) to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of California, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 511), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FULLER of Illinois, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred sundry bills of the House, reported in lieu thereof the bill (H. R. 11310) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, accompanied by a report (No. 509), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5202) granting a pension to Ewell V. Osborn; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 11125) to increase the salary of the United States marshal for the eastern district of Virginia; Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice discharged, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 46) extending to July 1, 1920, the effective date of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914; Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce discharged, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. STOLL: A bill (H. R. 11299) for the purchase of a post-office site at Timmonsville, S. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11300) for the purchase of a post-office site at Conway, S. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11301) for the purchase of a post-office site at Lake City, S. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11302) for the purchase of a post-office site at Kingstree, S. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11303) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection of a Federal building at Hartsville, S. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11304) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection of a Federal building at Dillon, S. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HARDY of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 11305) authorizing the San Luis Valley irrigation district, Colorado, to purchase certain public lands; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ANDERSON: A bill (H. R. 11306) to create a bureau of agricultural engineering in the Department of Agriculture to provide for the testing and certification of farm tractors, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. RODENBERG: A bill (H. R. 11307) to amend section 5146 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the qualifications of directors of the National Banking Association; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. HUSTED: A bill (H. R. 11308) to amend section 190 of the Revised States of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 11309) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to fix compensation of certain laborers in the customs service; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 11310) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; to the Committee of the Whole House.

By Mr. EDMONDS: A bill (H. R. 11311) providing for the classification of vessels of the United States; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. RIDDICK: A bill (H. R. 11312) to appropriate $4,000,000 for loans to farmers in drought-stricken sections of the United States for the purchase of seed for 1920 spring planting; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 11313) to permit transportation of a limited number of passengers on cargo vessels; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 11314) authorizing the United States Shipping Board to adjust equitable claims of wooden-ship builders arising out of the prosecution of the war; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Resolution (H. Res. 422) requesting information of the heads of departments concerning print-paper consumption; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: Resolution (H. Res. 423) for the immediate consideration of House bill 11224; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. GOODYKOONTZ: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 265) thanking the American coal miner for distinguished services rendered the Government in time of war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, opposing discontinuance of certain lines of work at the Boston Navy Yard; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON: A bill (H. R. 11315) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Rowe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. AYRES: A bill (H. R. 11316) granting an increase of pension to Caroline St. Denis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BEGG: A bill (H. R. 11317) granting a pension to Angeline W. Kelley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BLAND of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 11318) granting an increase of pension to Josiah C. Hancock; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FESS: A bill (H. R. 11319) granting a pension to Fred Stoops; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FOSTER: A bill (H. R. 11320) granting an increase of pension to Lucy M. Bougher; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 11321) for the relief of William Gordon Corporation; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 11322) granting an increase of pension to John Wroten; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11323) for the relief of James Kernan; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HICKEY: A bill (H. R. 11324) granting a pension to Martha Jane Duddleson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULINGS: A bill (H. R. 11325) granting a pension to Tinnie A. Gary; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKENZIE: A bill (H. R. 11326) granting an increase of pension to Charles M. Taylor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RICKETTS: A bill (H. R. 11327) granting an increase of pension to Julia Ruth Bartlett; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SINNOTT: A bill (H. R. 11328) granting an increase of pension to Jesse W. Rigby; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

489. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of Mr. S. Pettingill and 138 other citizens of Chicago, Ill., protesting against the treatment received by miners by the officers of the United States Government; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

490. Also (by request), petition of 100 citizens from different sections of the State of Pennsylvania, protesting against the treatment received by the mine workers by the officers of the United States Government; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

491. By Mr. BABKA: Petition of Lima Lodge No. 54, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, favoring deportation of undesirable aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

492. By Mr. CARSS: Petition of Commercial Club of Hibbing, Minn., for establishment of a hydroaeroplane station at Duluth, Minn.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

493. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of sundry citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring Sterling-Lehlbach bill; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

494. Also, petition of Brooklyn Coal Exchange favoring House bill 10650; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

495. By Mr. DYER: Petition of Thomas McDonough Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, favoring House bill 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

496. Also, petition of Associated Industries of Missouri, concerning railroad legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

497. By Mr. ELSTON: Petition of City Council of Oakland, Calif., requesting additional appropriation for improvement of Oakland Harbor; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

498. Also, petition of Plumb Plan League, of Alameda County, Calif., urging extension of Government control of railroads; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

499. By Mr. EMERSON: Petition of Lima Lodge, No. 54, Lima, Ohio, favoring deportation of undesirable aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

500. By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of Denton and Anderson, of Chicago, Ill., favoring the Madden bill for 1-cent drop-letter postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

501. By Mr. KINKAID: Petition of sundry citizens of Rock County, Nebr., favoring bonus for soldiers, sailors, and marines; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

502. By Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Petition of the Hancock County (Ill.) Farm Bureau, concerning the present industrial situation; to the Committee on Agriculture.

503. By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of Joseph A. Bull and others, of Baltimore, Md., favoring Johnson bill for bonus for soldiers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

504. Also, petition of Carrollton Lodge, No. 2601, Fraternal Aid Union, favoring Sterling-Lehlbach retirement bill; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

505. Also, petition of United Railways & Electric Co., Baltimore, Md., Post No. 61, American Legion, favoring deportation of undesirable aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

506. Also, petition of John F. Reily, favoring approval and passage of appropriation for salaries of Lighthouse Service; to the Committee on Appropriations.

507. Also, petition of Frank J. Uhlenberg regarding railroad legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

508. Also, petition of Baltimore & Ohio and Allied Lines Local Federation, Riverside Local, favoring House bill 10367; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

509. By Mr. McGLENNON: Petition of New Jersey State Organization for Public Health Nursing, favoring the granting of rank to Army Nurse Corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

510. By Mr. MacGREGOR: Petition of Friends of Irish Freedom, Buffalo, N. Y., favoring Mason bill; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

511. Also, petition of Builders' Exchange of Buffalo, N. Y., favoring House bill 10650; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

512. Also, petition of John Mitchell Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, favoring House bill 3404; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

513. Also, petition of Ot-Yok-Wa Club, of Buffalo, N. Y., favoring legislation to subdue radical elements in this country; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

514. By Mr. MAHER: Petition of Brooklyn Coal Exchange, favoring House bill 10650; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

515. Also, petition of sundry citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring Sterling-Lehlbach bill; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

516. By Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan: Petition of League of Compulsory Education, Philadelphia, asking increase in salary of attendant officers in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

517. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of sundry citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring Sterling-Lehlbach bill; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

518. By Mr. THOMPSON: Petition of Lima (Ohio) Lodge, No. 54, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, favoring deportation and punishment of undesirable aliens; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

519. Also, petition of Hiram Loudon Post, No. 155, Grand Army of the Republic, Montpelier, Ohio., favoring Fuller pension bill; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 19, 1919.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, December 16, 1919).

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, a Senator from the State of Arkansas, appeared in his seat to-day.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	McKellar	Smith, Ga.
Ball	Harrison	McLean	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Henderson	McNary	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Hitchcock	Moses	Smoot
Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Spencer
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Sterling
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Sutherland
Cummins	Kellogg	Norris	Thomas
Curtis	Kendrick	Nugent	Townsend
Dial	Kenyon	Overman	Trammell
Dillingham	Keyes	Page	Wadsworth
Edge	King	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Fletcher	Kirby	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
France	Knox	Pomerene	Warren
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Ransdell	Williams
Gay	Lenroot	Robinson	Wolcott
Gronna	Lodge	Sheppard
Hale	McCormick	Sherman

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] are detained on official business.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is detained from the Senate by death in his family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained from the Senate by illness in his family.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 131) making immediately available the appropriation for the expenses of regulating further the entry of aliens into the United States with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 9947. An act to authorize J. L. Anderson and H. M. Duvall to construct a bridge across Great Pee Dee River, at or near the town of Cheraw, S. C.;

H. R. 10402. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permission to municipal authorities of Little Chute, Wis., to construct, maintain, and operate sewers on certain Government property and under the United States canal at Little Chute, Wis.;

H. R. 11223. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Employees' Compensation Commission and the Public Health Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920; and

H. J. Res. 266. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of the bill to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the printing, without accompanying maps and charts, of the final report of Gen. John J. Pershing, commander in chief American Expeditionary Forces, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 1,500 copies of the Journal of the Fifty-fourth National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the year 1920, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REGULATION OF PASSPORTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 131) making immediately available the appropriation for the expenses of regulating further the entry of aliens into the United States, which were: In line 4, to strike out "the act of October 29, 1919," and insert "public act No. 79 of the Sixty-sixth Congress," and in line 9, after "1918," to insert ": Provided, That not more than $450,000 of said sum shall be used during the remainder of the fiscal year 1920."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts explain the House amendments?

Mr. LODGE. This is the bill which was reported unanimously from the Foreign Relations Committee, making the appropriation of $600,000 immediately available for the use of the State Department in regard to passports.

Mr. POMERENE. I remembered that fact; but does this simply reduce the amount?

Mr. LODGE. No; it does not reduce the amount. It makes only $450,000 of the $600,000 available during the year 1920, which I think will be entirely sufficient.

Mr. POMERENE. It is the only change that has been made?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that is the only change. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills of the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 9947. An act to authorize J. L. Anderson and H. M. Duvall to construct a bridge across Great Pee Dee River at or near the town of Cheraw, S. C.; and

H. R. 10402. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permission to the municipal authorities of Little Chute, Wis., to construct, maintain, and operate sewers on certain Government property and under the United States canal at Little Chute, Wis.

H. R. 11223. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Employees' Compensation Commission and the Public Health Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT, GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, etc., That there shall be printed as a House document 1,500 copies of the Journal of the Fifty-fourth National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the year 1920, not to exceed $1,700 in cost, with illustrations, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House and 500 copies for the use of the Senate.

FINAL REPORT OF GEN. JOHN J. PERSHING.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, etc., That the Final Report of Gen. John J. Pershing, commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces, be printed as a House document, without the accompanying maps and charts, and that 100,000 additional copies be printed, of which 30,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 70,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

RAILROAD CONTROL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], on page 73, to strike out from line 14 to the word "court" in line 12, on page 75.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senate to the pending amendment. It is proposed to strike out the language in the bill designed to prevent the construction of new lines of railroad, the extension of existing lines, or the abandonment of such lines until public authority has determined the necessity for such action.

Much as I regret to disagree with my friend the Senator from South Carolina, I feel it to be my duty to urge the Senate to reject his amendment and to retain the provision in the bill. It is in harmony with some of the general and important features of the bill, particularly those relating to the consolidation of railway lines and systems. It recognizes the public right as controlling in the construction of new lines of railroad and in the abandonment of existing lines of railroad. It provides that no new lines shall be constructed, no old lines shall be extended, until a certificate has been issued by a board representing the public—

That the present or future public interest requires or will require the construction or operation or construction and operation of such line of railroad or extension thereof, and no carrier by railroad subject to this act shall abandon any portion or all of its line of railroad or the operation thereof unless and until it shall first have obtained from the board a certificate that the present or future public interest permits such abandonment.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to ask the Senator if his construction of that provision is to the effect that if parties in a State desire to build a line from one place to another in the State and the State utilities commission or railroad board favor such construction, under those circumstances they would still have to get a permit from this board?

Mr. ROBINSON. If the road is to engage in interstate commerce, I feel sure that that is the case; and I think it should be the case. The power of Congress, as the Senator well understands, is limited to the regulation of interstate commerce.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that; but the question I ask is with reference to a road wholly within a State. Although the road might be connected with a line that would take freight outside of the State, by agreement probably with other roads, the road would be wholly within the State. In my judgment, where a road is wholly within the State the railroad board of the State or the utilities commission should have authority to pass upon the necessity of constructing such a road.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator from Arkansas permit me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is one of the main features that I was hoping to eliminate from the bill. The Senator recognizes that the railroads are still partially under private control and we still must depend upon private capital for the construction of the roads. A local community gets sufficient capital to develop its resources. In place of leaving with the Interstate Commerce Commission the regulation of the commerce and the regulation of the securities that might construct the instrumentalities of commerce, you propose to go to the extent of saying that every community under all conditions, when a road is to be constructed that will engage ultimately in interstate commerce, must come to a board in Washington, not for the purpose of knowing whether the securities are properly invested or properly used, but for the purpose of knowing whether the instrumentalities shall be permitted which are for the benefit of the community, and incidentally later on for the benefit of the general community.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, there is no power under the Federal Government to prevent the construction of an intrastate road and its operation in purely intrastate business. The power of Congress, as I started to say a moment ago, is limited to the regulation of interstate traffic. If, however, a road that is wholly within a State is engaged in interstate commerce, it becomes subject to the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from Arkansas recognizes the fact that in the great interchange of business in this country there is no such thing, outside of the physical property of the road, as a purely intrastate road.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; and that is exactly the reason why I think the power of Congress to regulate and control in these matters should be extended as it is sought to be extended in this bill. Commerce, as is implied in the suggestion of the Senator from South Carolina, has become largely interstate. There is, of course, considerable local traffic that may be carried—intrastate commerce—but there are few roads that are engaged in intrastate commerce that do not also engage in interstate commerce.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I desire the Senator from Arkansas to get this point: The Senator recognizes that railroad development is still in progress and that there are communities in this country where roads must be built in order to develop the community, where there will not be a sufficient tonnage in order to meet the 5½ per cent or whatever rate may be fixed by the commission as a just return. My suggestion last night was that in those circumstances it is perfectly feasible that freight originating on the new line and being delivered locally on the new line should bear a rate sufficiently high to remunerate those who constructed the road until such time as the tonnage shall have increased by the development of the community to a point where the road would be self-sustaining. Otherwise the Senator knows that the board, having regard to general conditions and perhaps conceiving that an additional burden would be imposed on the general public, might decline to accept the fact that the benefit of increased development more than offsets the expense incurred in the additional burden on the traffic for opening up a particular community.

The Senator knows that when this provision shall have been adopted all construction of railroads will cease, other than those which pass through communities which are sufficiently developed at least to warrant the assumption that the freight under the rate established will take care of the road.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, with reference to the last statement made by the Senator from South Carolina, I desire to say that there have been during the last 10 years very few miles of railroad constructed in the United States; but the construction——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator permit me to proceed now for just a moment?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That was one of the arguments which I used—and I think it is a good one—to show that it is because of the restrictive Federal laws which have been thrown around the construction of railroads that we have not had any further railroad construction.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, with reference to the first argument presented by the Senator from South Carolina, that the provision of this bill will prevent the construction of railroads which are necessary for the development of localities, I desire to point out to him that, on the contrary, the provision is designed to accomplish that purpose and to accomplish it in a legitimate way. The bill provides that no new line shall be built or extension be made "until there shall first have been obtained from the board a certificate that the present or future public interest requires or will require the construction." The use of the language, "the present or future public interest requires or will require the construction" of the road embraces every possible case where it can be shown that existing conditions in a locality or conditions likely to arise in the future justify or make necessary the building of the line or the extension of the line.

Every Senator knows that one of the great difficulties which we now find in the regulation of interstate commerce and in the proper control of our railroads grows out of the fact that in the past there has been no control over the improvident construction of railway lines or the improvident extension of railroads. We know that throughout the United States there are many lines of railroad that ought never to have been built, that never would have been built, if there had been some intelligent and properly constituted authority to determine the feasibility of the projects.

Some of these improvident constructions proceeded through the influence of promoters who desired to make profits, others in a spirit of competition, and others for reasons that can not be explained or understood; but the fact remains that one of the difficulties that we now experience in properly regulating rates of traffic grows out of the fact that some of the roads were so unwisely constructed or located that to provide for them compensation which will secure their maintenance will give to other railroads wisely located and properly constructed too great a return, excessive compensation.

One of the fundamental principles and purposes of this bill is to so organize the railroads of the United States and to so consolidate them into a number of competing systems that hereafter the rates may be so adjusted that all railroads may be maintained. If you strike out this provision you weaken the consolidation features of this bill. It is true that in all probability in the future there will not be so many miles of railroad constructed the construction of which the public interest does not justify as in the past; but if we are to reorganize the railroads and put them on a sound financial basis we ought not to leave it to the power of anyone in any locality to undo the very thing we are trying to do; and that is exactly what, in my opinion, would result if the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina prevails.

The purpose of this provision in the bill is to recognize as the controlling consideration the right and interest of the public to have reasonable and adequate transportation facilities and to escape payment for transportation facilities that are not needed and are mere duplications of existing facilities.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to inquire of the Senator if, after the consolidation contemplated by this bill has been consummated, there will be any opportunity for any railroad building by any concern other than a consolidated system?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, yes. As to what the practical aspect of the subject will be, that will depend, of course, upon the circumstances of a given case; but so far as the law is concerned new systems can be constructed and operated and old systems extended or new lines built whenever the public authority, termed in this bill the board, finds that the public interest, present or future, justifies and requires such construction.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks that the board would ever conclude that an independent road would be in the public interest? In view of the fact that this bill for the first seven years contemplates voluntary consolidation and thereafter compulsory consolidation, does the Senator believe that the board would ever consent to any independent concern building another railroad which would compete with an existing consolidated system?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, certainly, if the public interest justified or required it. As the law charges it with the duty of acting in the public interest, I think the board would authorize the construction of a new railroad if it found that the conditions justified it. I hope it would not do so unless it found such conditions to exist. That is the purpose of the provision.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The point that I had in mind was that, inasmuch as this bill contemplates the forcible consolidation of all of the railroads of the country into a limited number of systems, the board would construe it as the fixed policy of the Congress not to permit other systems to be created and would, therefore, object to any such company being organized for the building of an independent road.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator were familiar with the language of the bill as a whole, I do not think he would justify himself in any such conclusion. The bill expressly authorizes the construction of new systems and expressly authorizes the construction of new lines and the extension of old lines. The sole limitation on that power and on the right to construct is that the public interest in the present or future shall require the construction.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. In order to give the Senator a concrete case—and of course in using the word "system" I did not mean a system of the magnitude contemplated by this bill—but in the State of New Mexico, I will say to the Senator, as an illustration, at about the time the war began a corporation had been organized for the purpose of constructing a road about 200 miles in length connecting with the Santa Fe Railroad and intended to develop a new section. That road would only be, I repeat, about 200 miles long. In view of the fact that this bill contemplates, perhaps, the consolidation of the Santa Fe Railroad with other roads into a system, does the Senator believe, taking this bill as a whole, that, according to its spirit, the board would be authorized to consent to the formation of a separate corporation to build the piece of road to which I have just referred?

Mr. ROBINSON. In answer to the Senator's question, I will say that as to whether a separate corporation should build the road or an existing corporation, the only consideration that should determine that would be the public interest. If the board found that competition was probable or possible and desirable it would probably authorize the construction by a new and independent corporation, if it could be done. I want to say further, in answer to the question of the Senator from New Mexico, that in my opinion there will be more new railroads built and more old lines extended, and probably fewer existing lines abandoned, if this provision remains in the bill than if it is stricken out; and I want to tell the Senator and other Senators who are interested why I think so.

As already stated, for some reason railroad construction in the United States has been almost completely suspended; and, Senators, it will not be resumed until the railroads are placed upon a reasonably secure financial basis. There is no probability of the construction of any great number of miles of railroad in the future unless some evidence can be presented to those who must furnish the money with which the construction may be carried forward that the project is necessary and feasible. Whenever the certificate called for in the provision which the Senator from South Carolina moves to strike out is issued, that will be almost conclusive evidence of the desirability and the wisdom of the project. It will aid very materially in securing the funds necessary for construction, and it is not likely that the old system of construction will be resorted to in the future. The era of speculation is past. The people are not willing and they will never again be willing, in my opinion, to make large grants of public lands, to give enormous donations, to secure the construction of railroads. The country as a whole has reached a state of development where sanity and sound business judgment, where present and reasonably certain future conditions should and will control in the construction of railroads; and if this conclusion be correct, then the provision which the Senator from South Carolina moves to strike out ought to stay in the bill, because it recognizes the power and authority of the General Government to pass upon the question. It recognizes the controlling interest as the public interest. It does not deny development, because it contemplates that the board shall take into consideration not only present conditions but future conditions which are reasonably likely to arise; and, of course, if any authority is to pass upon that question, the rulings and action ought to be uniform. It ought to be a Federal authority rather than tribunals of the 48 States, for if you relegate the matter to the States you will have just as many different standards as there are States, and there will creep into this new system which we are seeking to establish—a system which is designed to stabilize the roads and their securities—one of the worst features of the old system.

I do not know that there is anything further that I can say upon the subject.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] stated that the public had now arrived at that stage of education in reference to railroad construction where it would not tolerate the excesses that heretofore have existed, such as duplication of railroads, building competitive lines where there was not sufficient tonnage to take care of two or more lines, and so forth. I concur in that statement, and the public has arrived at that point. No board of transportation that you might create could change or add to the public's keen appreciation of the condition that has brought about the very deplorable state of affairs in reference to railroads. We were speaking about certain roads not having sufficient tonnage to support them; and therefore, when we made a rate that would support the weak road, it gave the strong road an extraordinary advantage or an unwarranted return on the capital invested.

Mr. President, any student of this subject who has gone into the question of why these inequalities exist knows that one of the reasons why we have so many so-called weak roads is because the strong lines of this country, upon reaching their termini, have the power and the right to send their freight to a friend, and to freeze out another line that is absolutely essential to the development of the community.

What transpired when this war broke out? When it came to the mobilization of our transportation systems in order to meet the vast demands upon them, we found that this diversion of freight and the establishment of the movement of our commerce had been carried on through certain lines of railroad to certain ports to such an extent that when the movement began these ports that had been favored by the great trunk lines and the lines leading to these ports were so congested that you could not get your loaded cars in nor your empty cars out. Why? Because the facilities that were afforded by other ports and other lines had been ignored by these different companies in transferring or sending their freight in their joint and through rates to those that they favored, leaving the other roads to get what tonnage they might. Every one of us knows that every railroad in America to-day, generally speaking, is needed for the transportation of the commerce of this country; and I maintain that when you have perfected the consolidation provided for in this bill, when you shall have taken from private interests the initiative in constructing railroads and turned it over to a Federal board, the development of any further railroading in this country will have been stopped.

Why should a railroad running into a certain community, with its equipment, invite or favor any other construction, when those who are contiguous to the road, 10, 15, 20, or 30 miles away, in order to get to market, must haul their commerce to this road?

It will have the business, anyhow, if no other road is constructed for the development and convenience of the community. It has a monopoly of that community; and to appear before the board would mean that those who seek to establish the new road must prove that there is sufficient tonnage in the community asking for the railroad to justify its construction. If there is not, if there has been a lack of development because of the lack of the railroad, then under the very terms of this bill it would not be built, because they would claim that it was putting upon the community a burden that the tonnage adjacent thereto did not justify. For that reason, I say, railroad development after the passage of this bill will be a thing of the past, and those communities that have not got them now will have to do the best they can in order to get their commerce to the railroads.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I suppose this is as good a time as any for me to express some views which I entertain regarding one or two features of this bill, and explain some amendments which I have prepared and had printed, and which I propose to call to the attention of the Senate.

The remarks of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] in regard to the lack of railroad building in the past are in entire accord with my own observations. We all realize that for a number of years there has been little, if any, new railroad building in this country. I am sure the cause of that has been the lack of inducement for the investment of private capital in such an enterprise. Just what has brought that about it is immaterial for me to comment upon at this time.

But the thing about which I am concerned now is that, according to my information, there is nothing in this bill which will remedy the situation. The only inducement offered by this bill for the investment of capital in new railroad building is an earning of 5½ per cent, with a possible increase by mere fractions. I want to lay it down as a proposition which I believe can not be controverted that you can not get new capital to be invested in the building of a new railroad through a new country with the only inducement a possible 5½ or 6 per cent in the way of dividend return.

My judgment is that the reason why there has been no railroad building in the last 10 or 15 years comes from the fact that the earnings of the railroads have been limited. They have been regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and regulated upon the basis of what the old-established railroads of the country should earn. It involves a principle of economics to which I have on former occasions referred in connection with the revenue bill.

At the present time that bill puts a flat rate of 8 per cent as an earning which shall not be considered excessive. It applies that rate to every industry of the country, whether an old established national bank or a new industrial enterprise. Whether established in an old, settled community or whether it is a pioneer industry of the West, the same measure is established. I have inveighed against that principle in connection with the revenue bill, and this bill proposes to extend the same principle to the building of railroads.

The railroad system in the East, running through a thickly settled community, where investors are upon every hand, is to have the same rates fixed for it with reference to the invested capital as the pioneer railroads, running through new sections of country and where the return is in no manner guaranteed by economic conditions where the roads exist.

The railroads of this country have all been built by reason of the prospective returns commensurate with the risks involved in the building of the railroads. Five and one-half per cent is a fair return upon the old, settled lines of railroads, in my judgment. I think the committee has perhaps been very wise, and used a figure which will come as near meeting the judgment of the country as any other, when you apply it to the old, established systems of the country. But what I want to say is that, in my judgment, there is no inducement in this 5½ per cent for the building of a new railroad.

The speculative profits which have caused the building of railroads in the past will not be held out under this bill, and to get a meager 5½ per cent, and to have rates for a district fixed so that the value of the new railroad shall be taken into consideration for the purpose of establishing only a return of 5½ per cent upon the investment, will result, in my judgment, in your never getting another dollar put into a new railroad.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am glad to yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. It happens that the western railroads are more prosperous than the eastern railroads. Their returns are larger, taking them all together, than the returns of the eastern railroads. An amendment has already been adopted which gives to the new railroads in any part of the country the opportunity to earn more and retain more than the 6 per cent or the 6½ per cent provided for in the bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have before me the amendment to which the Senator has just referred, and my judgment is that the amendment, while very generously intentioned, will not have the effect of bringing about the inducement which I at least would like to have held out. The amendment which has been adopted provides—

That any railroad corporation proposing to undertake any work of new construction may apply to the transportation board for permission to retain for a period not to exceed 10 years all or any part of its earnings from such new construction in excess of the amount heretofore in this section provided, for such disposition as it may care to make of the same; and the said board may, in its discretion, grant such permission, conditioned, however, upon the completion of the work of construction within a period to be designated by the board in its order granting such permission.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Just a moment, if the Senator will permit me.

That amendment provides that the road may retain such earnings in excess of the 5½ per cent as it may earn; but the Senator must recognize the fact that when the commission proceeds to fix rates for the district in which the new railroad is built, including the new railroad itself, under this bill the commission is required to fix rates on the basis of 5½ per cent. So I would like to ask the Senator how the new railroad could expect more than 5½ per cent, if the commission does the duty which is required of it under the terms of this bill? I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to see if I understood the Senator. If I do understand him his fear that there might not be any construction of new roads to exploit new territory grows out of the limitation in the bill of the dividend and not out of a fear of the operation of a board. Is that correct?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is the view which I entertain, I will state to the Senator, and which I shall elaborate somewhat later on.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I share that view to this extent: I think that in a new country there should be held out to those who are adventurous enough to build railroads a hope, at any rate, of a large profit. In the past that hope has been generally shattered, but the hope existed, and the roads were built. At the same time, I want to prevent construction of venomously built roads—and by that I mean roads that were built by one road more with a view to cutting another road's throat than with a view of exploiting or benefiting the territory. So I think the provision in the bill which the Senator from South Carolina seeks to strike out ought to be kept in it. But I should be very much in favor of lifting this bar of profit, and leaving the railroads in new country with the hope, at any rate, of earning 10 per cent. They generally will not do it, but the hope may build the road.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am certainly glad to know that the views of the Senator from Mississippi coincide with my own, and in the amendment which I have offered I have retained the provision that the project shall have the indorsement of the railroad board created by this bill.

I can see the dangers against which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has inveighed. I can see that it is possible that the railroad board contemplated by this bill might decline to approve a railroad venture which would be thought locally very desirable.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want again to call his attention to a fact stated to me by a very distinguished Member of this body, that up until the time of the appointment of a commission under a Federal law to govern prospecting and opening of mines in the West, the prospecting and development of mines went on, to the benefit of the country at large. He cited one particular case where, in his own State, the great Hercules lead mine was opened after certain geologists said that there was no mineral in that community. He said that after this law was passed and the commission was appointed—and I have had it corroborated by other Senators as to their sections—the development of mines was stopped when those who wanted to take the initiative and spend their money to find the wealth that is contained in our mineral resources had to come to Washington and get a permit and have the commission here pass upon the conditions and circumstances surrounding it. Prospectors would not take a venture under such circumstances, and any further mineral development has been arrested and stopped; so that the great wealth of the West is now lying unavailable simply because of Federal restrictions.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is quite right regarding the results growing out of the fact which he has stated. But it is evident that no geologist can look into the ground and tell what is there. Geologists may have some theoretical information, but for any geologist to undertake to look over a given piece of ground and say whether it is mineral ground or not I think is an idle effort.

That, to my judgment, is quite different from the matter of the building of a railroad. The facts regarding the building of a railroad can be as well known to the board as to the promoters of an enterprise, and while in a way it may be said that no board should pass upon the advisability of these various contemplated constructions or enterprises which are sought to be promoted, yet the Senator from South Carolina must bear this in mind, that whenever anybody undertakes to build a railroad it is necessary that there shall be capital borrowed somewhere. Only in a very few instances in this country have the railroads built by private capital been owned by the parties who were doing the work of construction. We have one or two instances, but only one or two.

When the promoter of the enterprise seeks to get capital with which to carry on the work, if his enterprise has the approval of such a board as is contemplated by this bill, it will be much easier for him to get the capital, and to get it upon very much more favorable terms, than he could if the matter were not approved by such a board.

I remember very well a number of people with irrigation enterprises, who sought in every conceivable way to induce the Interior Department and the Government to put the stamp of approval upon a private irrigation enterprise, for the express purpose of giving confidence to people who would likely invest their money in the enterprise. Thus far the Government has declined to do that, for the reason that it did not want to assume the responsibility of saying to investors that the project was a feasible one. But if the Government could be induced to say that, it would enable the party to obtain money on very much more reasonable terms.

So, with regard to the building of a new railroad, if you can get the approval of the board, the promoters of the enterprise will have a very much easier time in raising the money than if they did not have it. So in the amendment which I have offered I have recognized that provision of the bill which requires that before the road is built it shall meet with the approval of the board established by this bill.

I must say that I have very grave doubts whether the amendments which I have proposed will accomplish the result which I seek, but I am sure that if they will not aid in that direction there is absolutely no hope for new enterprises under the bill as it now exists.

The amendments were prepared with reference to the first print of the bill as reported by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. On page 14 of that print of the bill——

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from New Mexico permit a vote to be taken upon the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina before he offers his amendment?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am not offering it now; I am just explaining it. I have no objection, if it suits the convenience of the chairman of the committee to take a vote now, to presenting the matter later on. I thought this would be a good time to call attention to it, and then to present the amendment later for action.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have, of course, no right even to suggest the matter, probably——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am willing to suit the convenience of the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. But it would tend to clearness of understanding of the amendments which are to be proposed by the Senator from New Mexico if we could have a vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Very well. If that suits the wishes of the chairman, I will withhold my further remarks.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	McKellar	Simmons
Bankhead	Harris	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Calder	Harrison	McNary	Smith, Md.
Capper	Henderson	Moses	Smith, S. C.
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Smoot

Gay	Lenroot	Robinson	Williams
Gerry	Lodge	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gronna	McCormick	Sherman

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I agreed to pair with him during his absence, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. He is absent on official business, and I have the privilege of voting on this bill, notwithstanding my pair. I vote "nay." I ask that the announcement as to my pair may stand for the day.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Notwithstanding my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], I shall vote, as I understand he would vote as I am about to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS. I have a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], which I transfer to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted, but in the absence of my pair, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], I withdraw my vote.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts (after having voted in the affirmative). I find that the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] is absent. Last night, when the bill was under discussion, I agreed to pair with him. I therefore announce my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and withdraw my vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is detained from the Senate by death in his family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained from the Senate by illness in his family.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is absent on official business, and that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is detained on official business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. As that Senator is absent I am obliged to withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Ashurst	Gay	King	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Gronna	La Follette	Smith, S. C.
Capper	Harris	McKellar	Stanley
Curtis	Harrison	Nugent	Trammell

So the amendment of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina was rejected.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I had assumed in the preparation of these amendments that the provision which has just been acted upon by the Senate would not be stricken out, and I do not know that I have very much to add to what I have already said. There are, however, a number of Senators now in the Chamber who were not here when I first called this matter to the attention of the Senate.

The purpose of the amendments which I propose is to put it within the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant inducements to the new railroad concerns for the building of new railroads. There is not a provision in the amendments which is still not brought within the discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The purpose of the amendments, however, is to give latitude to the Interstate Commerce Commission in the fixing of rates and to provide some inducement whereby capital may be obtained for the building of new railroads.

In some sections of the country I suppose it may be said that there are a sufficient number of railroads now; but this country has been developed by the building of railroads, and yet no railroad has been built with the expectation of getting a return of only 5½ per cent, as provided in this bill. The appeal which I make to the Senate is that the Interstate Commerce Commission may be granted some latitude, may have the power in its discretion to offer some inducement for the building of new railroads, for putting money into new enterprises, and to further develop this country of ours. That is the only purpose of the amendments.

I am not prepared to assure the Senate that even if my amendments are adopted they will be adequate to provide the money for the building of new railroads; I am not sure that even with these amendments further railroad building will go on; but, clearly, the amendments proposed will tend in that direction and may bring about that result.

It is still left within the power of the board to say whether or not a railroad shall be built at all. In various States of the Union public-utilities commissions have been created for the purpose of passing upon the advisability of building new railroads, new street railways, and new public utilities of various kinds, and with that spirit I agree. In the amendments which I have offered it is intended that there shall be supervision over contemplated new enterprises. All that the amendments provide, as I have said, is that the discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission may be broadened so that it may permit to the new railroads increased fares and rates for the carriage of freight beyond the amount which would provide a return of only 5½ per cent. It is left in the discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I should like very much if the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge would offer no objection to the amendments, so that they shall at least go into the bill and be considered by the conferees. I realize that the bill which is ultimately to become a law will be written in conference, and I know that the conferees will consider the various matters which are put into the bill by the Senate.

Senators have not had an opportunity to study the bill and the various amendments which have been offered. I must confess that the votes which I have cast upon the bill have been cast with less decision than upon any bill which has been presented to the Senate since I came here. Many members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce have been engaged in this work for years; they are familiar with the various problems; all of the members of the committee for months have been engaged in framing the bill; they have studied its provisions; but the remainder of us, who have had our attention specifically directed to other matters, have not had that opportunity.

This bill is of tremendous importance, in my judgment. I do not know of a measure which has come here, save the treaty of peace with Germany, which will so vitally affect the interests of this country as will this bill. I only regret that I have not had an opportunity to give to it more consideration than I have; but, according to the light which I have, if the bill is passed in its present form there will, I think, be no more railroad building in the West; there will be no more development of enterprises in that great section of the country. I appeal to Senators at least to give the discretion to the Interstate Commerce Commission to hold out some inducement for the building of new railroads.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in my opinion—and I think it is the opinion of all the members of the committee, or nearly all of them—this bill if passed will do more to encourage and promote the building of railroads into undeveloped parts of the United States than anything that has been suggested for years and years. I can only put my judgment upon that question against the judgment of the Senator from New Mexico. I have no doubt he entertains his view sincerely, but it is the opinion of those who have studied longest upon the matter that the chief merit of this bill is that it will have a tendency at least to secure the honest construction of railroads into territories that are not supplied with transportation facilities.

I can not accept the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico; but I say to him that the whole subject will be in conference. It will be just as much within the jurisdiction of the conference committee to present the plan that he has outlined in his amendment as though the amendment were adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, if the amendments are to be voted upon at this time, I should like to say that in order to carry out the purpose which I have in mind I have thought it necessary to amend the bill in three or four particulars. The first amendment which I offer is on page 14, line 25, of the original print. That part of the bill, being section 6, deals with the right of the Interstate Commerce Commission to adjust rates with certain objects in mind; it mentions various objects which should be considered by the commission in the fixing of rates. Beginning in line 17, on page 14, it provides:

> In so changing or modifying rates, fares, charges, and classifications from time to time in the manner provided in the act to regulate commerce, as amended, the commission shall take into consideration the interests of the public, the shippers, the wages of labor, the cost of maintenance and operation, including taxes, the requirements for additional capital in order to enable the carriers to adequately perform their duties to the public, and the conditions under which the same can be secured.

The first amendment which I propose is simply one extending the things which shall be considered by the commission in fixing rates. After the word "secured" on that line I propose to add:

> Also, the requirements for additional capital in order to encourage the construction of railroads in parts of the United States lacking adequate transportation facilities, and the conditions under which the same can be secured.

This amendment simply authorizes the commission, in adjusting its rates and fares, to take that factor into consideration along with the others mentioned in the bill. I do not see how any serious objection can be raised to inserting that additional provision, especially in view of the fact that the chairman of the committee has just stated that it is necessary that something should be done to encourage the building of new railroads.

It is claimed by him that the bill as already framed is better than the conditions which exist at the present time. I agree with him about that; but I honestly believe that the bill as framed does not furnish sufficient encouragement to warrant the building of other and additional railroads, and this amendment only enables the Interstate Commerce Commission to take into consideration one other element when it goes to adjust rates and fares.

I offer the amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 25, after the word "secured," it is proposed to insert the following words:

> Also, the requirements for additional capital in order to encourage the construction of railroads in parts of the United States lacking adequate transportation facilities, and the conditions under which the same can be secured.

[Mr. SIMMONS addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES].

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gronna	McNary	Sherman
Bankhead	Harris	Moses	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Harrison	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Henderson	Nelson	Smoot
Capper	Hitchcock	New	Spencer
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Sutherland
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Townsend
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Trammell
Curtis	Kellogg	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Keyes	Phipps	Warren
Dillingham	La Follette	Poindexter	Williams
Elkins	Lenroot	Pomerene	Wolcott
Fletcher	McCormick	Ransdell
France	McKellar	Robinson
Gay	McLean	Sheppard

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to announce the absence on official business of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask for a division.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] has sent to the desk another amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 18, after line 8, insert the following new section:

SEC. 6a. The commission may, in its discretion, exempt any corporation organized after the passage of this act which shall construct, maintain, and operate any new line of railroad in any part of the United States lacking adequate transportation facilities from any or all of the provisions of this act relating to the adjustment of rates, fares, and charges to yield the designated return in the various rate districts, the disposition of excess railway-operating income, or the consolidation or Federal incorporation of carriers, but only with respect to such new line or lines of railroad, in so far as such corporation shall request such exemption, and in so far as the commission shall, after hearing and under such procedure as it may prescribe, determine that such exemption is consistent with the public welfare, but not for a period exceeding 10 years after the building of the railroad. The property, rates, and railway-operating income of any such carrier, in so far as it is so exempted, shall not be taken into consideration during the continuation of such exemption in determining the aggregate value of the railroad property in any rate district, the rates, fares, and charges to be exacted by the other carriers therein to yield the designated return, or the disposition of the excess railway-operating income of such other carriers, under the provisions of this act.

The commission may, in its discretion, so adjust the rates, fares, and charges of such an exempted carrier, and may, by order promulgated in advance, after notice and hearing and under such procedure as it may prescribe, adjust the rates, fares, and charges of such carrier with respect to any line of railroad under construction or to be constructed by it that such rates, fares, and charges will yield a net railway-operating income for such carrier with respect to such new line or lines of railroad not exceeding 10 per cent of the actual value of its property used for transportation purposes, if and in so far as the commission shall determine that such rates, fares, and charges are necessary in order to encourage the construction of any new line of railroad in any part of the United States lacking adequate transportation facilities: Provided, That every rate, fare, or charge of any such exempted carrier shall at all times be fair and reasonable as compared with those charged for similar services under like conditions by other railroads in the same rate district; and that such carrier, its directors, officers, agents, and employees, shall, except as herein otherwise provided, be subject in all respects to the provisions of the act to regulate commerce and of this act. The commission may at any time alter or amend any order, regulation, rate, fare, or charge prescribed or permitted under the provisions of this section, and may exempt any such carrier or continue such exemption under such conditions as it may by order prescribe.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I just want to add a word. This amendment is in harmony with two or three other amendments which I have offered for the purpose of enabling the Interstate Commerce Commission to liberalize its rulings with respect to new construction. I think this provision is a wholesome one. If new railroads are to be built the Interstate Commerce Commission should be allowed at least sufficient latitude to consider the necessities of the new railroads.

My judgment is that under the bill as framed there will be no more building of railroads in the country. I am not so sure that the amendments which I offer will bring about that result, but they will certainly tend in that direction. They will give the Interstate Commerce Commission power to use some judgment and discretion with respect to a particular road. On this amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] has sent to the desk another amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 74, after line 4, insert the following new paragraph:

It shall be the duty of the board, in exercising this authority, to encourage the construction, by corporations organized after the passage of this act, of new lines of railroad in parts of the United States lacking adequate transportation facilities.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] also offers the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, after the word "carriers," in line 9, insert the following words:

including loans to corporations organized for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating railroads in parts of the United States lacking adequate transportation facilities.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I give notice that I shall ask for the yeas and nays upon these amendments in the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment, to go at the bottom of page 96; and I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee to it. I hope that he can agree to it, so far as he can control the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

Provided further, That no increased rate, fare, charge, or classification shall be filed except after approval thereof has been secured from the commission. Such approval may, in the discretion of the commission, be given without formal hearing, and in such case shall not affect any subsequent proceeding relative to such rate, fare, charge, or classification.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That has been the law for two years past under a provision that limited it to January 1 next, and this amendment would simply continue it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia is an amendment to the present law, not to this bill especially. It simply strikes out the numerals "1920," I understand. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. Amend by striking out of line 14, page 15, the word "one-half" and substituting therefor the word "two-thirds"; also by striking out of line 16, page 15, the word "one-half" and substituting therefor the word "one-third."

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will say briefly that this relates to the disposition of any surplus acquired by the railroads over the rate of 6 per cent per annum on the value of the roads. The bill provides that of any such excess between 6 and 7 per cent, one-half thereof shall be placed in a reserve fund established and maintained by the carrier, and the remaining one-half shall "be paid to and recoverable by the board for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a general railroad contingent fund." This would change it so that the road earning an excess could retain two-thirds of the excess between 6 and 7 per cent, and one-third, instead of one-half, would go into the contingent fund.

I believe in the principle of the bill in fixing a rate above which roads shall not be allowed to retain earnings and that any excess shall go into a contingent fund for other purposes. I am in sympathy with that principle, but I believe that the plan of equalization goes a little too far. I believe that the road ought to be allowed to retain two-thirds instead of one-half of what it earns above 6 per cent and below 7 per cent. I believe that taking away one-half of that excess earning is a little too much discouragement to efficiency of management and careful business methods. It is just a matter of what would be right and best for all concerned, and I believe the division I have suggested is fairer than the one the bill proposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, this was the subject of very prolonged discussion in the committee. It was finally agreed by the major part of the committee that the division should be between 6 and 7 per cent, one-half to the railway company and one-half to the general contingent fund. I very much hope that the action of the committee and its judgment in that respect will not be disturbed.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, on page 71, after line 2, I move to have inserted the following amendment. I may say that this is the same subject matter embraced in the amendment which I offered last night and which after some discussion I withdrew. In its present form it was drawn by the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] except the proviso, which has been added by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. I think there will be no objection to it in its present form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 71, after line 2, insert the following:

The transportation board shall have power to require any carrier subject to its jurisdiction to furnish refrigerator cars for the transportation of vegetables, fruits, and fresh meats, and such other perishable commodities as require a refrigerator service, and may in its discretion expend, if the revenue of the carrier is inadequate for the purpose, a portion of said revolving fund therefor: Provided, That this provision shall not in any wise relieve common carriers from their duty to furnish such refrigerator cars as are required for the transportation of vegetables, fruits, fresh meats, and other perishable commodities.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, I think, serves a useful purpose, and I would be very glad to see it adopted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio whether there is anything in the bill that would require the board to make a survey of the transportation needs of any section of the country with reference to refrigerator cars and then giving the board authority to require of the railroad, in advance of the need, preparation to take care of it?

Mr. POMERENE. The transportation board is required to make a careful study of all the transportation needs of the country. The duties which are imposed upon the board in that behalf are very comprehensive and, I think, would cover the specific question which the Senator has in mind.

Mr. CUMMINS. It not only gives the board the duty of making a continuous study of the transportation needs of the country, but gives the board the authority to require carriers to furnish the facilities that are needed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am very glad to know that, because I have in mind a particular situation in the Northwest, for instance, in the Yakima and Wenatchee Valleys, in my State. The production of apples in my State last year was about 20,000 carloads. Those apples must be handled in a very few months. I know that at one time in the fall our people were very much disturbed over the outlook for refrigerator cars to take care of the fruit. I am glad to be assured that the board has power and is really directed to look into a situation like that and prepare to meet it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have been informed that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has an amendment which he desires to offer. He is not present. I do not know of any other amendment to be offered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the following amendment to section 26 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 7, after the word "repealed," insert the following:

So far as it affects railway corporations, common carriers, or systems of transportation accepting the terms and provisions of this act, but otherwise shall continue in full force and effect until the end of the calendar year 1924: Provided, however, That the regulation of intrastate rates shall, after the repeal, both with respect to carriers electing to remain under the provisions of the Federal control act and with respect to all other carriers, be revested in the several States and the agencies established by law therein.

Also, on page 2, line 1, after the word "any," insert "such," and in line 10 strike out "all" and insert "such."

Also, on page 60, strike out the entire section 26 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 26. The wages and salaries paid to classified employees, including sleeping-car employees, by common carriers accepting the terms and conditions of this act, and the wages and salaries paid to such classified employees of transportation systems remaining under Federal control, together with the hours of labor and all other conditions of employment of such classified employees, shall be at least as favorable to such employees as those paid and accorded for similar services rendered under similar conditions in other industries, taking into account the hardships, hazards, and responsibilities of the employment, the training and skill required, the steadiness and tenure of service, and any provisions for participation in pensions or other benefits. The purchasing power of such wages and salaries shall be stabilized as follows: The scales of such wages and salaries in force on July 1, 1915, shall be considered the basic scales of such salaries and wages. The Bureau of Labor Statistics shall compile and publish on the first days of February, May, August, and November of each year tables showing the current average cost at retail, in the principal industrial and commercial centers, of such supplies of food, clothing, housing facilities, fuel and lights, furniture, and other necessaries in the proportionate amounts reasonably sufficient for the support of a family of two adults and three minor children therein, together with the cost of the same group of necessaries in December, 1914; and the wage or salary paid at each pay day to each such classified employee whose basic rate is less than $3,000 a year shall be at such basic rate for the corresponding service performed in July, 1915, plus the percentage by which the cost of the group of necessaries before mentioned at the industrial or commercial center nearest his place of residence, as shown by the tables of the bureau last published, exceeds the cost of the same group of necessaries in December, 1914: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall operate to reduce the amount of wages or salary of any employees below the amount to which such employee was entitled in December, 1919: And provided further, That the board shall have power, upon the petition of the representatives of any group of such employees, to readjust the basic scale of wages and salaries whenever it shall determine, after such notice and hearing as it shall prescribe, that the actual compensation received by any such employee or employees is less than that paid in other industries for similar services rendered under similar conditions or is inadequate for any other reason."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, yesterday I undertook to point out to the Senate that the bill, while it properly and justly seeks to guarantee a reasonable return to the capital invested in transportation lines, gives no corresponding protection to the invested labor. I contend that we as representatives of the people of the United States have no right to guarantee that security to invested capital without guaranteeing an equal security to the employees of transportation lines who contribute toward the success of transportation.

I am as strongly in favor of legislation which will give us uninterrupted transportation service as any man in the Senate. But we can justify antistrike legislation only if at the same time we put into the bill a sufficient guaranty to labor that it shall have at least a living wage. There is in the bill absolutely no such provision and no guaranty that wages may not even be reduced.

The theory of the committee bill is that the public must be prepared to pay enough for transportation to afford reasonable dividends to present investors and to attract fresh capital for extensions and improvements. If this be true—and few will venture to deny it—it is equally true that the public must also pay enough to afford railroad employees a reasonable living wage at all times, a wage sufficient to command and reward efficient service and to attract a high grade of new employees as the demands of the service increase. This indispensable requirement the committee bill, as it stands, in my judgment, entirely fails to meet. This would be a grave fault even if the bill made no attempt to restrict collective bargaining, the only means by which in ordinay competitive industries labor has been able to assert its rights; but the antistrike provisions of the bill make the omission more serious still. Strikes in connection with public-utility enterprises and in the industries that supply the fundamental necessaries on which industry in general and the very subsistence of the people depend are indeed intolerable; but before we attempt forcibly to curtail the right to strike we must at least, as a matter of sound business as well as of common justice, remove the reasonable causes of complaint from which justifiable strikes arise. This is what my amendment attempts to do.

Mr. President, the justifiable causes of strikes may be divided into two general classes: First, that the wages and conditions of employment are unfair, either because less favorable than in comparable employments or because yielding to the laborer less than a just share in the products of his toil; and, secondly, that wages originally just have been made inadequate by the rise in the cost of living, or, in other words, by the shrinkage in the purchasing value of the nominal wages received.

The first cause I attempt to remove by providing, as the present language of the bill fails to do, that the fundamental rule by which the awards of the wage-adjusting board are to be governed shall be that the wages and terms of employment must be at least as favorable as those in other industries. I think myself that the public would be willing, and certainly ought to be willing, to have them kept a little more favorable than in competitive industries in consideration of relief from the danger of railroad strikes. The second cause of complaint is unquestionably met and automatically removed by the simple expedient, already adopted by a few forward-looking employers, of keeping the purchasing power of the wages paid practically constant by varying the money wages as the cost of supporting a typical family increases or decreases. I hardly think anyone will seriously contend that the wages of railroad employees in 1915 were too high. If not, then they are certainly too low whenever they fail to procure the same amount of necessaries that they procured at that time.

This automatic method of adjustment requires no new governmental machinery and in all likelihood no net additional expense of administration. The Bureau of Labor Statistics already exists, and it already issues from time to time such tables of comparative costs as my amendment calls for. If it be urged that the regular quarterly compilation of the tables would increase the expenses of the bureau, it is fair to offset the equally strong probability that the removal of one main cause of dissatisfaction from the jurisdiction of the wage-adjustment boards proposed by the bill would cut down the number of complaints to be passed upon by them, and would reduce their expenses quite as much as the expenses of the Bureau of Labor Statistics would be increased.

The plan I propose is not open to the "vicious-circle" objection, for as the costs of living are gradually reduced by larger crops, a lessened foreign demand for our food products and raw materials, and by better methods of distribution, together with the checking of profiteering which we hope to see increasingly effective in the near future, the cost of transportation would automatically be lowered also, changing the vicious circle into a benevolent acceleration of the cost-reducing process.

Mr. President, the amendments which I offer to section 1, making the return of the railroads to private control contingent on the acceptance of the conditions of the act, are necessary to make the other amendment constitutionally possible, for Congress can not, in my judgment, compel a private corporation to pay wages that may make the payment of reasonable dividends impossible, unless the corporation, for a valuable consideration has agreed to permit it to be done. The return of the roads by the Government to their owners would be such a consideration, but in the absence of such an agreement the railroad employees, I am confident, would find the wage-adjusting provisions of the committee bill inoperative just where they are most needed, for an award obliging a railroad earning less than 5 per cent, as a considerable part of them under the rate-fixing arrangement proposed in the bill would necessarily do, to increase the pay of its employees would almost certainly be set aside as confiscatory.

The adoption of these amendments would, in my judgment, make the bill not less fair to investors in railroad securities, but much fairer to labor and perhaps as just on the whole to the public as any arrangement short of public ownership can be.

Mr. President, the difference between section 26 of the committee bill and the amendment offered by me as a substitute for section 26 is as follows:

The committee bill merely makes a general declaration that the wages and salaries paid shall be fair, just, and reasonable, and that the transportation board which is established, in determining what is fair, just, and reasonable, shall consider certain relevant circumstances, such as wages paid for similar kinds of work, relationship between the wage and cost of living, and so forth.

The amendment proposed by me goes much further in that it fixes wages for the present and also lays down a fundamental principle which the board will be obliged to follow in readjusting wages in the future, namely, that the wages of railroad employees shall always be "at least as favorable to the employee as the wages paid under comparable conditions in other industries."

In other words, it lays down the fundamental principle that in order to avoid strikes in public utilities the employees must be given at least as fair treatment as organized employees in private industry secure by strikes or the right to strike.

The language of the committee bill is directory only, and still leaves it within the power of the board to fix wages for railroad employees lower than those awarded for similar services elsewhere, and if this happens the employees have no further appeal or means of redress. Under my amendment they would have the right to apply to the court for a mandamus or other order of review, on the ground that the board had failed to perform the duty imposed upon it by the act.

In other words, this language in my amendment puts teeth in section 26 of the committee bill.

My amendment, moreover, takes a long step forward toward insuring the public against strikes. If adopted, it will stabilize for the employees the purchasing power of their wages without obliging them to have recourse to the committee on wages or to the transportation board.

Section 26 of the committee bill specifies that one of the relevant circumstances, by consideration of which the committee and board are to determine wages and salaries, is to be the relation between wages and the cost of living. My amendment removes all responsibility from the board in this respect, and it insures to the employee a wage which shall at all times be based upon the actual cost of living. To accomplish this it provides an automatic method which secures to the wages a constant purchasing power, whatever the fluctuations in the cost of living may be. This portion of the amendment confers upon the railroad employees the legal right to a wage to be determined as follows:

First, he shall have as a basic wage or salary the wage or salary awarded for similar work on July 1, 1915, before the great increase in the cost of living began. I have heard no one contend that the wages paid to railroad employees on July 1, 1915, were excessive, and that rate is to be the basic wage in determining what shall be the wage of these employees in the future.

To this basic wage there shall be added a percentage which shall be equal to the percentage of increase in the cost of living of an average family in the circumstances of the average railroad employee. In order to determine this percentage the Bureau of Labor Statistics is charged with the duty of compiling and publishing on the first days of February, May, August, and November of each year, as it has been doing at intervals for some time past, comparative tables showing the average cost at retail in the principal industrial and commercial centers of food, clothing, housing facilities, and other necessaries in the proportions in which they are required for the support of an ordinary family, and showing also the percentage of increase in that cost since 1914.

To illustrate: This arrangement would give at the present time to every railroad employee the wage which he was receiving in 1915 plus an increase of about 80 per cent. This increase, of course, would vary in the different industrial centers, but 80 per cent would be near the average. Hereafter this percentage of increase over the basic wage would be raised or lessened according to the tables of the bureau showing the current changes in the cost of living.

In taking away from the employee the right to strike, as is done by the committee bill, we would thus be giving him in return a fixed basic wage plus a varying increase to enable him to meet the increased cost of living. In other words, we would be insuring him that the purchasing power of his wage would never be diminished, just as we are insuring the man who invests in railroad securities that his dividends shall never be diminished.

As the purpose of my amendment is to reach only the poorer paid employees, those amongst whom strikes are likely to arise, the limit is fixed to cover employees who are receiving under $3,000 a year.

Mr. President, one would think from what has been said in this Chamber that the wages paid railroad employees are excessive; figures are given us from time to time as to what an engineer or a conductor receives; but is it not true that statistics show that over a million railroad employees, until recently, were receiving less than $75 per month? Who can claim that that sum constitutes an excessive wage?

The determination of the wages of higher paid employees is left to the board as in the original bill.

The basic cost of living is taken to be the cost in December, 1914, which is the base assumed by the Bureau of Labor Statistics in the table of comparative costs found in volume 9, No. 3, of the Monthly Labor Review.

The amendment I offer further provides that the minimum wage of railroad employees shall be the wage that they are now receiving, even though in some instances that wage may already have been increased since 1915 more than the actual rise in the cost of living. The reason why this provision is inserted is that there are a number of cases where employees were grossly underpaid in July, 1915, but have since had their wages increased more than 80 per cent, although their pay is still by no means too high.

For illustration, some men who in July, 1915, received only $9 a week have had their wages increased to $20 or more. If the principle of the amendment were made applicable to these cases, the wage of a man who had been raised from $9 to $20, assuming that the increased cost of living over that in December, 1914, has been 80 per cent, would be reduced to $16.20, or $3.80 less than he is now receiving.

My amendment, though fixing definitely the wages to be paid when the act takes effect, and stipulating that these wages shall not be reduced unless the cost of living shall decline, establishes no maximum rate but only a minimum wage scale. It does not limit in any way the power of the regional board of adjustment to increase wages above that minimum. On the contrary, it obliges this board to keep the wages and conditions of employment at least as favorable to the employee as those in comparable industries, and accordingly to raise the basic rates whenever, upon complaint and investigation, they are found to be too low to fulfill this condition.

The committee bill leaves the railroad employees in uncertainty whether even their present wages are to be maintained or whether they may not in the near future be actually reduced. They have in fact grave reason to apprehend such a downward revision of wages, for the organs of the forces behind this bill are already criticizing the Railroad Administration for having raised wages as much as they have been raised, and are intimating to shippers that coming wage reductions may reduce the necessity of raising rates in order to provide the returns to invested capital which are guaranteed by the bill.

Mr. President, the committee bill distinctly places the rights of capital above the rights of labor. That accusation can not be answered—security and protection for capital; insecurity for labor at every turn. It guarantees to capital a fair return, indeed I might say a most liberal return, while it is taking from labor its only effective weapon for collective bargaining without providing any sufficient substitute. It gives to labor no assurance that it will receive a fair return, and no means of securing it except by pursuing an uncertain, long, and costly process of litigation through a succession of tribunals which are certain to delay and may altogether deny redress.

My amendment places capital and labor upon an equal footing, and lays down the fundamental principle that the public is as much bound to pay for transportation service a living wage to labor at all times as it is bound to guarantee a fair return to capital.

Will you tell me what argument can be made against giving the same security to labor? Labor does not ask dividends, but it asks a guarantee of a living wage; that is all. You say to the Government and to the officials who fix rates, "When you undertake to charge rates to the consumers of the country and to those who use the carriers, you shall keep in mind that those rates must be sufficient to give capital 5 per cent or more return." I say if we are an impartial tribunal, if we are a government of all the people, we are bound to say to these rate-fixing boards, "See that capital gets its return; yes; but also see that labor gets a constant, steady, living wage."

What is the answer to this? The answer the committee makes is: "We will establish boards that will take into consideration certain factors in fixing wages when disputes arise between capital and labor." My amendment, while it eliminates from any special consideration or protection all those railroad employees who earn over $3,000 per year, and provides that this class of employees may go to these boards to have their labor conditions and wages fixed, says to all those paid under $3,000 per year, "You shall have a living wage fixed and guaranteed, and that wage shall be determined, not by a board but by law, so that if the board refuses to give that wage an application can be made to the courts, which will order it to be paid as the law provides.

By adopting this amendment we say to the employees, "You shall not strike, but you shall not suffer. You shall never be in a position where you will not be able to meet the cost of living, no matter how high it climbs, for the public agrees that it will always pay a transportation rate sufficient to give you a living wage."

Mr. President, I agree that this is a difficult problem to solve; that there are many difficulties involved. I would willingly go further than I have done, and include in my amendment the right for the railroad companies to go before these boards and say: "Conditions have so changed that the basic rate in 1915 is too high." The amendment as it stands gives the right to the railroad employees to petition to raise the basic rate, and I have no objection to the railroads themselves having the right to ask that it be lowered.

This amendment, if adopted, will be a convincing answer to every railroad employee who cries out against antistrike legislation. He has been given his protection. He may get better wages if he can, but he never will have cause to strike on the theory that he is not getting enough money to live. Here is the solution of this question—no uncertainty for labor; a fixed, definite wage; a living wage always. Let us give to capital protection, let us give to labor a guaranty of a living wage, and then ask the public to assume the cost of transportation. What can be fairer? What can be more just?

Mr. President, there is in this country to-day an apparent lack of sympathy for the workingman. Foolish and unjustifiable strikes are responsible in great part for this feeling; but who dares to say that this feeling is to go on? Who will dare in a few years, when the atmosphere is clarified, to face a constituency in America and say, "I voted to deny railroad employees the right to strike, and made no provision to give them the guaranty that I gave to capital"?

The employees all over this country—every laborer, every man who works, even the clerks in our stores, men and women—can and will denounce this antistrike provision of the bill as the beginning of a move to pass the same provisions along into every activity of life.

Mr. President, we must prevent strikes, and to be able to prevent them we must guarantee to the employee always—always, no matter how high or how low the standards go—a living wage.

That is the purpose of my amendment. I have tried to study the problem impartially and find a solution which would give absolutely fair treatment to labor, to the men who help to make possible the prosperity and security of our transportation service. Dividends to capital alone will not make it either prosperous or secure. We want contented employees upon our transportation lines. We want satisfied employees. We want employees who know that they as well as capital have the ear of the Government; that they have the same protection as capital. Here is a solution of this long-vexed problem, and the only solution, in my judgment, that will really accomplish the object which the committee bill seeks.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. KING. I have just heard the last few sentences of the Senator's speech. It seems to me, as I understand him and as I understand this amendment, which has just been called to my attention, that if wages were fixed for the coming year upon the basis of this amendment the amount would exceed all the earnings of all the roads for the year 1915, which, as I understand, is the basic year. The earnings of the employees would be so great in amount—I do not say they would be too great—as to exceed for the coming year the aggregate earnings of all the roads for 1915.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. First of all, this only applies to employees who earn under $3,000 per year; and, secondly—well, it depends. If the claim is true that many make, that certain employees have had their wages so increased that they are beyond all that they deserve or are entitled to, then the increase will be very little. If their increase has been very small—a fraction of the increase in the cost of living—then the amount will be substantially reduced.

Mr. KING. Would not the wage be doubled and more than doubled in the aggregate over the aggregate amount paid in 1915?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. No, sir. It would be at least 75 per cent larger—the basic wage of 1915 plus 80 per cent, which is the increased cost of living, as fixed recently by the Department of Labor. It would be 75 per cent larger. But the statement has been made that the wages have already been increased 50, 60, and 70 per cent over the basic wage of 1915, so that in that event there would be a very meager increase. If in some instances the wage has been made more than 100 per cent over that of 1915, then that class of employees would get no increase whatever under the provisions of this amendment.

There is nothing further that I care to say.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I really had not intended to say anything on this bill. It has been discussed at such great length by the distinguished members of the committee who prepared it, and who so thoroughly understand its provisions, that it seemed to me the part of temerity on my part to undertake to say anything that would inform anybody about its provisions; yet, in justice to myself, in view of the fact that I intend to vote against it, I desire to occupy a little of the time of the Senate in giving at least a few of my reasons for opposing the measure.

Mr. President, we have been hearing from time to time of the hardships of the railroads, of the impossibility of their living under present conditions, and I think the suggestion was made more than two years ago that the railroads were likely to be forced into bankruptcy. It was pretty generally understood, and yet I do not know that it can be proved, that the railroads themselves had a good deal to do with their taking over by the Federal Government at the time they were taken over. I voted to take over the roads, Mr. President, because it was impossible to tell what the emergencies of the war might require at the hands of the transportation companies, and it seemed, whatever was required, that the Government was in a better position to operate them than the individual railroad companies under the conditions that then existed.

But it is not only the cry of distress, Mr. President, that comes up to us from the country, it may be, but certainly from the railroad companies themselves. It has come up to us in the past, and is going to continue to come up for the consideration of the Senate whenever these companies want something. It is the cry of "Wolf" in an effort to compel the American people, under the stress and storm of conditions, to come to the relief of the railroad companies, whether it is wise to continue assistance or not.

I propose to show, Mr. President, that if we are going to be called upon year in and year out to go to the relief of railroad companies, as we have been compelled to go to their relief in the days gone by, we might just as well hold and continue to operate them for all time as a governmental agency. But I am not going to discuss that particular question. I am going to show, Mr. President, that this is not a new cry.

We have been going to the relief of railroad companies, in the way of land grants and financial assistance, since the first grant for railroad construction was made, away back in 1825. That was the beginning of governmental aid to railroad companies, and from that time up to 1850 from time to time the Federal Government and local State governments made contributions to railroad construction.

But the wild era of extravagance on the part of Congress to railroad companies began in 1850 and ended in 1871, and in that time empires were given to railroads to aid in their construction, and I am going to call attention to that very briefly.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I know an interruption may be rather disturbing, and I apologize for interfering with the Senator's speech. As I interpret the observations of the Senator I think his criticisms of the railroads to which he refers are not quite just. He refers to numerous grants of lands by the Government, and contributions made by States, counties, and so on, to railroads. Let me say to the Senator that most of the railroads to which he refers were solicited—that is, their construction was urged by the people themselves for the purpose of developing virgin territories and reaching the outposts of civilization. The people had to have the railroads, and the people who would be benefited organized the companies, in some instances. They appealed to Congress, to State legislatures, or to counties for bonuses and for grants, and the people themselves received the benefit of the construction of the railroads. The corporations as such in many instances derived no important financial benefits; it was the people, and the construction of those roads developed our country, made the development of the West possible, made the great State of Oregon, which the Senator represents so ably, one of the great States of the Union.

In conclusion, I want to say to the Senator that it seems to me it would be unjust to lay at the door of railroad corporations all fault and obloquy or opprobrium for those activities many years ago and for the grants which were made of lands which at that time were worthless, or almost worthless, and which made it possible for the building up of those arid and semiarid wastes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not prepared to disagree entirely with the observations of the distinguished Senator from Utah as to the benefits which the whole country derived from those grants. But admitting that the country was developed, and admitting that many of the great States of the West were carved out of the western undeveloped wilderness, yet those grants were gifts to the railroad companies just the same.

Not only were those grants made to the railroad companies in the West, but they were made in practically all of the States that had any public land, either by legislative grant of the State or by congressional grants where the Federal Government still owned land.

Mr. President, in support of what I have to say about that, I call attention to State grants that were made from 1850 to June 30, 1919, and I am referring now to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919, so it is a recent report. Many of those grants were probably disposed of by the railroad companies for amounts insufficient to have constructed the roads, but if they had been husbanded as carefully as they ought to have been, these grants ought to have built the roads, and I doubt not but that in some instances they did build the roads.

For instance, there were grants made to the Oregon & California and the California & Oregon companies of some 6,000,000 acres of land. It was intended that the land should be sold in tracts of 160 acres to each settler at not to exceed $2.50 per acre. The terms of the grant were absolutely ignored. The managers of the companies and of their successors in interest led them to feel that the grant could be entirely defied, so that they sold in larger quantities than 160 acres to each settler, and at prices in excess of $2.50 an acre, and finally got to a point where they refused to sell at all. As a result of that, some of us out in Oregon undertook to make the companies either comply with the terms of the grants and sell to actual settlers in amounts of 160 acres to the individual settler at $2.50 per acre or else forfeit the grants. We met with resistance all along the line, and finally, by a proceeding had in Congress, we procured investigations to be had, suits to be instituted, and finally the grants were forfeited by act of Congress, and 3,000,000 acres of this magnificent grant, covered with the finest timber in the world, were restored to the people of the country because the railroad companies had refused to carry out the terms of the grant.

I am induced to mention this because it has been suggested here that we must carry out our contract with the railroad companies at this time. They ignored the terms of their contract, and notwithstanding the fact that they ignored the terms of their contract they were allowed by the courts $2.50 per acre for every acre of land which was forfeited to the people whom they had undertaken to defraud.

I do not know, Mr. President, how much money was received from that grant or from the other grants made to the railroad companies, but if the grants had been administered properly there is not any question but what those lands would in many instances have constructed the roads for whose benefit the grants were made.

We did not stop there. We went even further than that. Many of those grants were given for, we will say, odd and even sections for 6 miles on either side of the track. In some instances the grants were even greater than that, and wherever for any reason the sections which had been granted had been taken by some bona fide settler, they had the right to go on the public domain and make selections beyond the limits of the grants in lieu of those which had been lost.

I am mentioning this fact, Mr. President, to show that the National Government has been most generous to railroad companies.

Mr. President, I am going to ask to have inserted an extract from the Encyclopedia of American Government, volume 3, page 145, on the subject of Federal aid to railroad companies.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"Railroads, public aid to: The need for domestic markets and for political coherence early caused a demand for aid to railways in the United States. The eagerness of States and cities for trade connections, coupled with a jealousy of the power of the Federal Government and a relatively unimportant interstate commerce, explains why a large part of the aid given came from State and local governments.

"Periods and amounts of State aid: The aid granted by States falls into well-defined periods.

"(1) Beginning in 1815, the development of the West and the spread of cotton culture brought great pressure upon legislatures to subsidize or construct transportation facilites—soon including railways—a pressure which reached its climax just before the crisis of 1837. At first, canals rivaled railways and retarded aid to them, but the rapid improvement of rail transportation and the realization of the limitations of canals overcame this resistance about 1835. In 1827 came the first considerable State aid to railways, when Maryland subscribed $500,000 to the Baltimore & Ohio. Between that year and 1841 this State issued bonds to railways to an amount over $6,800,000. At about the same time (1827) Massachusetts appropriated $10,000 to ascertain the best route westward through the State to the Hudson. The real beginning of aid in Massachusetts, however, came in 1836, when $1,000,000 was subscribed to the Western Railroad (Worcester to Albany); and, by 1841, at least $5,050,000 of the State's credit had been extended to railways. Pennsylvania made her first appropriation of $800,000 for the Pennsylvania Railroad & Canal Co. in 1828; and New York took up the policy with a grant of $3,000,000 to the Erie Railway. By 1840 New York had aided railways to the extent of $4,450,000. The great rush, however, came between 1836 and 1841; then Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Georgia, Tennessee, Virginia, South Carolina, and Louisiana all granted aid to railways. The speculative activity preceding the crisis and the distribution of the surplus Federal revenue may be mentioned as factors.

"(2) In 1841 a period of little aid began. The crisis was followed by a long depression, lasting till about 1850. The period is marked by the constitutional prohibition of aid to improvements in several Northern States.

"(3) 1851–1861: With the renewal of prosperity, about 1850, a new period of State aid began. It was most marked in the South, where such States as Kentucky, North Carolina, and Missouri virtually began the public-aid policy.

"(4) 1865–1870: After the Civil War Alabama, Florida, Arkansas, and Texas had their fling; and several other Southern States resumed the aid policy. By far the largest grants of State aid were made in the South.

"With the early seventies the aid policy may be said to end. By 1907 all but five States had in some way forbidden State participation in internal improvements.

"Altogether, it has been estimated that over $228,000,000 was appropriated or expended by States for the purpose of aiding railways. This does not include land grants made by States, which were of considerable importance in the cases of Texas—a State which retained possession of the public lands within its bounds—Florida, and Minnesota. Nor does it include the item of exemption from taxation or free surveys.

"Forms and restrictions: The chief forms in which aid was granted by States were land, stock subscriptions, and loans of public credit; and under the last head either the bonds of the State might be granted, or the bonds of the railways or of municipalities for railways might be guaranteed. Stock subscriptions were more common in the South.

"The provisions made in the grants of aid, by way of limitations, safeguards, and means of repayment differed greatly. Thus some States, such as Ohio, provided that aid should be given only when two-thirds of the capital stock or of the estimated cost had been subscribed; others—North Carolina, for example (1848–49)—specified $1 of public funds for every dollar of private expenditure; still others, like Georgia, merely provided a maximum amount for each case. Often a maximum per mile allowance was set, as in Tennessee. As to provisions for repayment, sometimes there were none; in other cases the State provided for a lien on the road or parts thereof; and in several instances, sinking funds were prescribed (as in Tennessee, 1852). Too often bonds were turned over to the railways before any real work was begun (e. g., North Carolina); but sometimes it was enacted that aid could only be given as sections of varying length were completed. It is generally recognized that the usual grants inadequately guarded the interests of the State; and, where safeguards were attempted, they were not always enforced. Ohio and Massachusetts were among the more successful States in this regard.

"Federal aid: The Federal Government also gave much aid to railways. Two great periods may be distinguished—that between 1825 and 1850 and one extending from 1850 through 1870. Prior to 1850, aid was given in the shape of surveys made by Federal engineers, remission of duties on railway iron, rights of way over public land, and proceeds of land sales turned over to the States for railway purposes. The first aid was a survey made between the Kanawha and James Rivers in the years 1825–26. In 1832 iron for railways was placed on the free list, where it remained until 1842. The first grant of a right-of way came in 1835, the Tallahassee Railroad Co., of Florida, being the recipient. In 1850 began the epoch of great land grants, when 3,751,711 acres were granted for the Illinois Central, Mobile & Chicago, and Mobile & Ohio Railways. After this hardly a session of Congress passed without some grant till 1871, when the last one was made. The largest donations were made to the Pacific railways. Altogether some 155,504,000 acres were given, though the amount actually received by railways has been somewhat less on account of forfeitures. Land-grant acts generally provided that troops, mails, etc., should be transported free of toll or other charge, but such indirect return was decided against by the Supreme Court in 1876, and the Government merely receives reduced rates of 50 per cent.

"In the case of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific group Congress granted the national credit, loaning 30-year 6 per cent bonds of the United States to the amount of $16,000 per mile through level country and as much as $48,000 per mile in the mountains. This meant a total grant of $64,623,512. After much litigation Congress by 1899 was able to secure or arrange for the repayment of the principal and most of the interest on these loans.

"Difficulties of the aid system: It is a difficult matter to pass judgment upon the expediency of the policies indicated in this brief account. Some grants appear to have been wise; others were obviously foolish. Looking from the long-time standpoint at the vast mass of aid as a whole, one can not but doubt whether any net gain accrues. Aside from political exigency, the urgency and extent of which can hardly be measured, it is doubtful if the Nation would not be as well supplied with railways to-day if no aid had been given, and in the long run it can make little difference whether any particular town or State or region is settled now or 10 years hence. When to these negative considerations are added the clear debits of waste and corruption, judgment must be rather unfavorable, for even granting that it has been essential that the land be settled with a rush and taxable values raised at once the clear losses have been tremendous. Construction has been poorly planned and executed; railways have been built where no economic conditions warranted and two lines where one would do; hasty, cheap construction has been general, necessitating reconstruction almost immediately. Great areas of land, including forest and mineral resources, have been squandered. Lax charters have been granted. Finally, the policy has been the occasion for the most disgusting political corruption.

"Provisions for sinking funds, reductions on Government transportation, etc., generally proved a disappointment to the Government; and at the same time railway stockholders found that the lands rarely equaled their estimated value and were often misapplied."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It appears from this in a general way that altogether some 155,504,000 acres of land were given to railroad companies by the Federal Government. The amount actually received by railway companies, however, has been somewhat less on account of forfeitures. I may say that forfeitures were very small in proportion to the amounts granted.

Note this, Mr. President, that in the case of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific group Congress granted the national credit, loaning 30-year 6 per cent bonds of the United States to the amount of $16,000 per mile through level country and as much as $48,000 per mile in the mountains. This made a total grant of $64,623,512 granted by the Government by way of credit for the building of a road, some of it over lands where it was necessary merely to have the track laid, and therefore at a minimum of cost, while for mountains $48,000 per mile was given, and that ought to have been sufficient to have constructed much of the mileage through the mountains.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I want to assure the Senator that I am not an apologist for the railroads. I never have been their representative or their attorney, yet I feel that everyone and every corporation should have its day.

It must be said with respect to the Union Pacific and Central Pacific that they were built really as a result of the war. The Government felt the necessity of having a transcontinental road for military purposes and as post roads. The Government was deeply interested in the construction of the transcontinental roads.

The two roads referred to by the Senator were built at a time when greenbacks were worth perhaps 35 to 60 cents on the dollar; that is to say, it took $2 or $3 in greenbacks to buy $1 in gold. The railroads were built out on the frontiers beyond civilization, and to get to the men who were constructing the roads cost, perhaps, 20 to 40 cents a pound freight for the things which they ate and for the clothes which they wore. Everything was high. It cost enormously, as the Senator knows, for the construction of those roads, because of the era of high prices incident to that time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I suggest to the Senator that it is largely true that the Government thought it was getting the transportation of troops and supplies and munitions and other impedimenta of war and the land grants provided that the roads should carry those things for nothing; but the railroad companies did not carry out their agreement with the Government, but repudiated the contracts solemnly entered into, with the result that after long litigation the Supreme Court in 1876 simply allowed the Government to receive reduced rates of 50 per cent for the carrying of troops over those railroads.

I want the Senator, whom I admire so much, to understand that I am not inimical to railroad companies or any other aggregations of wealth. I am friendly to them, but they are here crying "Wolf, wolf" when there is no wolf. They have been crying much of the time in the same old way, and it is but fair that what has been accorded to them by the Federal Government in the past should at least have the attention of the public called to it.

Let us take local aid to railroad companies. The same work to which I have called attention says:

"Local aid: Probably the aid given by the States and Nation has been exceeded by the donations of counties and municipalities. No complete information exists, but the census of 1870 showed that these local units had outstanding bonds issued in aid of railways to the amount of $185,000,000, and many had been retired. The 1871 report of the Massachusetts Railway Commission exhibited 171 local bond issues made between 1830 and 1870, which aggregated $2,351,000. An investigation in Illinois in 1873 showed that the bonds and money aid voted and issued to railways in 86 counties out of 102 approximated $16,087,000. In Nebraska, between 1869 and 1892, 43 counties voted subsidy bonds to the amount of $4,918,000. Texas local units began to issue bonds in order to subscribe to railways in 1850; between that time and 1876 Texas municipalities voted $347,000 and the counties over $1,000,000; but in 1875 a clause was inserted in the constitution which prohibited local units from lending to or becoming stockholders in such associations or corporations. Baltimore subscribed $3,500,000 to the Baltimore & Ohio. All this leaves unmentioned the almost innumerable grants of rights of way, terminal facilities, etc. Relatively few counties and towns exist which have not aided a railway."

I might cite other instances of relief granted the railway companies, but I do not want to take up too much time of the Senate. Individuals subscribed. I know of cases in my own State where employees of the railroad companies, attorneys and others, went through the counties and took individual subscriptions for enough to build the road through particular sections of the county without cost to the company. There is no account taken of these things. With these magnificent and munificent grants made to railroad companies in the past, there is no reason except inefficiency of management for the condition in which they have found themselves.

I have sometimes thought that if the water was squeezed out of the stock of the railroad companies and they were compelled only to pay a dividend upon the actual value of the stock there would not be so much talk about the actual needs of the railroad companies. That subject has been gone into by other Senators who have given it great consideration, and I am not going to discuss it; but if a period of bankruptcy comes, there will be a period of reorganization, and if people do have to suffer a while, eventually there will come some form of relief under a reorganized railroad system that will be based probably upon actual value rather than upon fictitious valuation.

But aside from the particular questions which I have been discussing about the liberality of the Nation and of the States to the railroad companies, I am opposed to the bill, because I do not think it is a good time to undertake to put a bill through under whip and spur.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. HENDERSON. Do I understand that the Senator favors continued Government control until a measure could be passed that would take care of the needs of the railroad companies?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Absolutely—at least there is no hurry about it. We are going into consideration of a great railway bill to which the Committee on Interstate Commerce has given its undivided attention for months. I do not criticize them for a moment, but there are other Members of the Senate who have to vote on it, and who have to assume responsibility, and who ought to be fully advised not only from reading the reports here upon the particular bill but from studying the intricacies of the questions involved and arriving at a conclusion which will be best not only for the people of the country, who ought to be the first consideration, but for those who invested their money, so that some safe and sane legislation for the future might be enacted by Congress.

May I call the attention of the Senate to an article in the December issue of the Atlantic Monthly, which is one of the ablest discussions of the whole subject that I have seen anywhere? It discusses the things that possibly ought to be done and some of the things that ought to be left undone. The article is to be found on page 847. It is entitled "Our railroad problem," and is written by Mr. George W. Anderson.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I will state that I think he is a former member of the Interstate Commerce Commission and now a member of the circuit court of appeals at Boston.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then, what he says is entitled to all the more consideration.

After discussing this at great length—and I am fully in accord with him; I think what he says is absolutely unanswerable—he says:

"The year preceding a presidential election is rarely a time for strong and constructive statesmanship. Rather is it a time for maneuvering for political position—a time when men in office are afraid to deal boldly and radically with great problems of which any attempted solution is sure to offend some influential political interest. The temper of the times does not seem constructive.

"Haste makes waste. It would be a calamity to the Nation and to railroad-security holders to have the roads turned back to corporations under any plan now under apparently serious consideration. Moreover, out of the present urgent desire to 'do something, even if crude and merely tentative,' arises another danger too serious to be passed unmentioned. That danger is that the Interstate Commerce Commission will be ruined by being overburdened, not only with an intolerable mass of work, but by imposing upon it functions which it is not, by training, tradition, organization, or personnel, fit to perform. That commission has done work of great value to the country. It commands and deserves public confidence. It is our only present national transportation instrumentality. But, like other human institutions, its capacity is limited. It can not successfully run the railroads or solve problems of organization which require bold and far-reaching legislative enactments. It must be kept to its quasi judicial and administrative tasks, under statutes capable of intelligent and coherent construction and covering all essential principles for rate making, security approving, and other properly delegated regulatory provisions, else it will break under the burden."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Is Judge Anderson discussing the pending bill in that article?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. He is discussing the several propositions before Congress.

Mr. POMERENE. I was attracted by the statement which was just read by the Senator that this is imposing additional duties upon the Interstate Commerce Commission. As a matter of fact, the pending bill relieves them of a large part of the administrative functions and limits their jurisdiction very largely to the rate-making proposition.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the Senator is correct in that. It is a discussion of the whole subject of pending measures for relief.

Mr. President, there could not be a stronger statement made than the statement of Judge Anderson about undertaking to deal with a subject of such vast moment not only to the security holders but to the railroad companies themselves and to the people of the United States at a time when the minds of some of the Senate at least—if we have any minds at all after six or eight months of almost incessant work—are on the Christmas season. It is absolutely impossible. It could not be expected that Congress at this time could do its full duty or work out a solution of this great problem which would be satisfactory to the conscience of any man.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator realize that Judge Anderson has a plan of his own that he desires to have adopted?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That does not make any difference, Mr. President; even a faddist, even a man who has a plan of his own, can make suggestions which are valuable.

Mr. POMERENE. There is not any doubt about that; but I desire to observe that the Interstate Commerce Committee have been studying this problem for years; and in its later stages it was taken up very early in the history of the present administration.

The difficulty with some men is that when a new administration takes up a subject and deals with it, it is charged that it has never had opportunity to familiarize itself with the subject, even though certain branches of the Government may have been studying it for a long time. Of course, I realize that in the minds of some of those gentlemen all of that experience should be cast aside and that the question should wait until there is another election and another Congress. I think it is our duty to take up such responsibilities as present themselves and not to wait for some one else to solve them. We may be wrong; perhaps we are; I have no doubt we are in many of these instances.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the argument that the Senator makes against Judge Anderson would eliminate his suggestions from consideration. There is not any man in the Senate whose suggestions I value more highly than I do those of the Senator from Ohio; but he also has a plan of his own, or he had a plan of his own; he may have yielded in whole or in part, but he had a plan just the same; and, notwithstanding the fact that he had a plan, notwithstanding the fact that Judge Anderson had a plan, I am glad to consider both.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am not objecting to the fact that men may have plans, but I want to impress upon the Senator from Oregon, if I can, the necessity of dealing with this question now with such light as we have to guide us. If we are going to wait until we have a plan for railroad administration and railroad control which is going to be satisfactory to everybody, we shall never have any such legislation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I agree with the Senator from Ohio that it would be physically impossible to get a bill through the Senate that would suit everybody. What I am claiming, however, Mr. President, is that under the act by which these railroads were taken over by the Government they can be retained 21 months after the proclamation of peace has been issued. Why be in such a hurry about legislating, therefore? I am not afraid of the President doing anything radical or dangerous to this country; I am not afraid of his turning the railroad companies over to their owners on the 1st day of January. He may do it; I have no authority to speak for the President; but I have no fear that he will do it, for he realizes, as every man in America realizes, that the situation is a critical one and that cool heads and steady judgment ought to be brought into requisition in the proper adjustment of conditions as they are with respect to the railroad problem.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. I share some of the views expressed by the Senator from Oregon with reference to the pending bill. It is very objectionable to me in many of its particulars; I do not like the theory upon which it is drawn or the fundamental principles upon which it rests; but I disagree with the Senator, if I interpret him correctly, in advocating a postponement of the consideration of the bill. I think that the Senate and the House of Representatives are in better condition to consider this important domestic problem now than they will be in the future. We have the experience of the past before us; members of the Interstate Commerce Committee, both of the House and of the Senate, for months, if not for years, have considered the railway problem. The distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], I regard as an authority upon these questions. I do not follow him in this bill; and yet I believe that if we should postpone this measure for a year we would be in no better condition to consider the question than we are now. I would regard it as a very unfortunate thing—unfortunate for the country, unfortunate for Congress—if there were any postponement of the legislation upon this important question. I think it would be a concession of the impotency of Congress to make up its mind upon domestic problems, upon a question that has been pressing for months at our doors for solution.

The armistice was signed a year ago; we have had a year to consider this question; and I know that many Senators have given it a great deal of consideration. I think in a year from now we would be just as much divided as we are now; compromises would still be necessary; and, while I may vote against the bill, I propose to stay here with the chairman of the committee as long as he pleases, fight it out, pass a bill, and pass it as soon as we can.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I expect to do that, too. I am not going to indulge in any obstructive tactics here.

Mr. POMERENE. I know the Senator is not.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I never have done so and never will do so. What I am undertaking to impress upon Congress is that the demand of the railroads for relief—and this is a demand of the railroads for relief; I do not care where the demand comes from, it is such a demand—will be constantly made, and we ought to find some solution that will relieve the situation which comes up to us every year. I do not believe we can find the solution in a hurry. It is one of the largest problems America ever had to deal with, and, next to the war, one of the most important, and I think we ought to move with great caution.

Judge Anderson said in his article to which I have referred:

> It is broadly true that we have our present railroad chaos because the National Legislature has failed to meet and deal with problems that only it can deal with. If now, in haste and confusion, the burden of solving the insolvable is thrown in indefinite, incoherent fashion upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, a bad situation will be made worse. Congress will destroy the only effective national transportation institution that the country now has.

As the Senator from Ohio has said, the Interstate Commerce Commission will not have much of anything to do with this bill, but a great deal of responsibility is thrown on other commissions.

Mr. President, I promised not to undertake to discuss the features of this bill, but there is one matter which I should like to mention for a moment or two. It will be remembered when the Adamson bill passed that it was passed under the emergency of war, under whip and spur, and I remember that the changes were rung all through the country, in the political campaign that followed, that Congress had been compelled to yield to the railroad brotherhoods at the point of a gun; that the leaders of those brotherhoods sat in the gallery and looked down upon Congress and kept tab on what every Senator and Representative was doing. I never thought that charge was just at all. The brotherhoods were doing what they had a right to do; they were threatening to strike, and they had a right to come to Congress and let their grievances be known; but I did not hear any of them make any threat against Congress as to what they would do if relief were not granted. They took advantage of an opportunity to secure an increase in their pay, which was perfectly legal and proper. If Senators and Representatives proved themselves to be cowardly in the premises, they are responsible for that and not the railway employees. If a gun was pointed at them, they ought to have had the manhood and the courage to have faced it and fought it out to a finish.

Now, what is going to be said about Congress being compelled, under whip and spur in times of peace and at the point of a gun held in the hands not of the employees but of the railroad owners and the security holders, to pass a bill at once and in a hurry, because they insist that it shall be passed? That is the insistence, that if we do not pass this bill the railroad companies will go into insolvency, into bankruptcy. In other words, the situation has been changed, and instead of the laboring men holding the gun and sitting in the galleries looking down upon Congress, the railroad presidents, managers, and their representatives are sitting in the galleries looking down upon Congress and insisting—what? Not only that their rates shall be increased, but that we shall grant them large sums of money out of the Treasury of the United States and out of the pockets of the taxpayers. Whose ox has been gored this time, Mr. President, and who will ring the changes now or in the coming campaign?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, aside from those that have come from those favoring the Plumb plan, the only communications I have received within the last few days opposed to this legislation were from those who own railroad securities. I believe that many of the holders of railroad stocks and of bonds would be very glad to continue the status quo; they would be glad to have the Government guarantee the railroad earnings for an indefinite period and then take over the railroads of the United States at a value that shall be fixed by the Government; in other words, I believe that many of the bondholders and stockholders would be very glad for the Government to operate the railroads and then buy them. I believe that it is the public that are insisting upon the railroads being taken out of the hands of the Government and turned back to the private owners. I believe that the public feel dissatisfied with Government operation and believe that their interests would best be served by the railroads being operated by the owners.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am not prepared to say that I favor governmental ownership and control at this time; I may later, but I am not prepared to admit it now or to say it now. What I say is that Government operation and control have not had a chance to make good or to have a fair test.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NUGENT in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know of a railroad president in the United States who is in favor of this bill and I do not believe that the Senator from Oregon does.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have not taken the trouble to inquire.

Mr. CUMMINS. On the contrary, so far as I know, they all protest against its provisions. It has been asserted here a great many times, I know, that this is a bill made up by the railroad companies; but if any Senator knows of a single railway executive who is favoring this bill I should like to hear him named.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think some of them are too good business men to want this bill to prevail, and I will tell the Senator why. Take the situation out in our western country there——

Mr. CUMMINS. That is all right; I do not care to enter into a discussion with the Senator now about the merits of the bill. He is opposed to it and I am for it; but it has been asserted here all the while—and the Senator from Oregon has just asserted—that railroad presidents were looking down upon the Senate, insisting upon the passage of this bill. Now, that is not accurate, whatever else may be true. It is true that an association of bondholders, or some part of it, believes that this bill ought to be passed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That was probably only a figure of speech, just as it was a figure of speech to say that the railroad employees sat here with a gun when the Adamson bill was passed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree with the Senator from Oregon about that. They did not present any gun to Congress.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly not.

Mr. CUMMINS. And, so far as I know, they never did anything that they did not have a perfect right to do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It was charged on the stump all over the country, however, that they did—the Senator knows that—and I was just replying to the charge which was made at that time against the employees and comparing their action then to the action of the companies now, for I know that whether the railroad presidents are here or not the relief which is asked for goes to the railroad companies and will be administered by the railroad presidents and others.

Mr. CUMMINS. Only so far as necessary to give the people of the country the transportation facilities which the business of the country imperatively demands; that is all.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am not prepared to agree with the Senator that the business of the country demands it. This country has been in worse positions in the past than it is in to-day, and it has always, by the help of Providence, pulled through in some way. We were in a very much worse condition when we got into this war. A more terrible condition could not have existed, and yet America pulled through in a way that astonished the world, and America will pull through the condition which confronts it now, whether this legislation passes or not—and I want to see legislation on this subject passed in due course but not in haste.

I started to speak of the western roads. I think the presidents and managers of some of the roads in my section of the country would oppose this bill with all the power possible, because they are presidents and managers of dividend earners, and I doubt if there has been a time, even during the war, when they lost any money. Under the terms of this bill you are going to destroy the initiative of those men who have successfully operated roads by simply saying, "You shall turn over some of the earnings of your successfully operated institutions to roads that are incapacitated, through inefficiency, from earning a dividend." Those men who are the heads of the roads that are paying institutions, of course, are opposed to this bill. Probably those men who are operating inefficient systems and failing to make returns on their stock would like to see the bill passed.

Referring again to the railroad employees, I voted to strike out from this bill the antistrike provisions of it. It has been suggested in some quarters that those of us who did that were afraid of the labor vote. I am not afraid of the labor vote, but I am opposed to picking out one set of employees who have pursued only peaceful means of bettering their conditions and of securing increases of wages, while men who have been engaged in riot and bloodshed are not controlled or attempted to be controlled in their methods of procedure by this or any other bill.

It is generally conceded that the employees of the railroad companies all over this country are of the most intelligent of the laboring people, and I believe I can safely say that there are a larger percentage of thoroughgoing, patriotic American citizens among them than in any other class of employees. I think I may justly and safely say that every man who is employed by the railroads of this country is an American citizen, loyal to his country, and professing allegiance to only one flag. If there has ever been a lodge of these railway employees that has hoisted the red flag I do not know it. Now, why single out this splendid body of men and prevent them from using the strike while you let red-handed anarchists in some other organizations go unwhipped of justice and without doing anything to undertake to control them?

Mr. President, whenever there is presented here a general bill, not to prevent a strike—because I believe in the right of peaceful strike—but to control and keep within reasonable bounds those who use the strike as a method of benefiting their condition, then I am ready to talk about embarking upon such legislation as that; but I am heartily opposed to singling out one group of employees in this country and saying, "You shall not use the strike as a weapon," leaving every other laborer in the country, no matter to what organization he may belong, the right to go ahead and use it ad libitum, under the American flag or under the red flag, as he may see fit to use it. That is the reason why I voted against the strike provisions of the bill. I think, too, the provisions on the subject contained in the bill are impracticable.

If 2,000,000 of the railway employees of this country see fit to strike, notwithstanding the provisions of this bill, what are you going to do about it? Are you going to incarcerate them in the jails of the country, scattered as they are—as was said here the other day by the Senator from Kentucky—from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico and from the Atlantic to the Pacific? It is an impracticable proposition. I shall not at any time vote for any antistrike legislation that affects only one class of employees in this country, leaving to others the right to indulge in strikes ad libitum.

Mr. President, I have taken more of the time of the Senate than I had any idea of taking. I felt, however, that I owed it to myself and the position I intend to take on the passage of this bill to say what I thought about it, and to give a very few of the reasons that will influence me in the vote I shall cast.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. GAY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that suggestion for just a moment, in order that I may ask that the bill to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act be taken up? I am quite sure there will not be any opposition to it.

Mr. KING. I join my colleague in that request.

Mr. GAY. Very well; I withhold the suggestion. I am very much in favor of that measure.

WAR RISK BUREAU PAYMENTS.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 8778, a bill to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it is understood that the railroad bill is temporarily laid aside for the consideration of this measure alone.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether this is the bill known as the Sweet bill?

Mr. SMOOT. This is the Sweet bill.

Mr. GAY. I am sure there can be no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8778) to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if these amendments that the Senator recommends take care substantially of the suggestions made by the representatives of the service men a few days ago—whether these amendments make the bill satisfactory to those representatives?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that day before yesterday the commander of the organization spent two hours with me, and this bill is perfectly satisfactory to him.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator that as far as I have been able to observe, and speaking for this side, the bill is entirely satisfactory, and I shall be very glad to see it passed as soon as possible.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question applying to a particular case, and see whether or not the provisions of the bill take care of it. I think they do, but I should like to be sure about it.

One of the boys in my office was taken in the draft. He had been living for years with an aunt, his mother being dead. He was taking care of her, and she took care of him. He named no particular person in his insurance policy, but it was paid up. He died, and she was told that she would get it. Will this bill take care of that?

Mr. SMOOT. That is taken care of in the bill, and I will say to the Senator that there are a number of such cases.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well. I supposed that was so, but I had that particular case in mind.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, while the Senator has yielded I want to ask him if the question of dependents has been changed in any particular?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that it is extended to aunts, cousins, and nieces.

Mr. GRONNA. It is not limited?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; it has been extended.

Mr. GRONNA. While I am on my feet, may I ask the Senator if it was satisfactory to the person whom the Senator mentioned a moment ago, the commander of this organization, to have the salary of the director reduced from $10,000 to $7,500?

Mr. SMOOT. We did not discuss the question of the reduction of the salary of the director; but I have talked to the director a good many times, and he has never objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendments of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 1, line 9, before the words "per annum," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,500," so as to read:

That the office of the Commissioner of Military and Naval Insurance and the office of the Commissioner of Marine and Seamen's Insurance created by the war-risk insurance act are hereby abolished, and the powers and duties pertaining to such offices are hereby transferred to the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, who shall hereafter receive a salary at the rate of $7,500 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 17, after the word "therein," to strike out the letter "a" and insert "immediately following subdivisions (4) and (5), respectively, two"; in line 18, after the word "new," to strike out "subdivision" and insert "subdivisions"; and in line 20, before the word "and," to insert "and subdivision (5a)," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 4. That section 22 of the war-risk insurance act is hereby amended by inserting therein immediately following subdivisions (4) and (5), respectively, two new subdivisions, to be known as subdivision (4a) and subdivision (5a), and to read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 2, to insert:

(5a) The terms "brother" and "sister" include the children of a person who, for a period of not less than one year, stood in loco parentis to a member of the military or naval forces of the United States at any time prior to his enlistment or induction, or another member of the same household as to whom such person during such period likewise stood in loco parentis: Provided, That this subdivision shall be deemed to be in effect as of October 6, 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 22, to strike out:

SEC. 7. That the provisions of section 29 of the war-risk insurance act shall not be operative with respect to insurance converted under Article IV of such act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 1, to change the number of the section from "8" to "7."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 17, to change the number of the section from "9" to "8."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 3, to change the number of the section from 10 to 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 15 to change the number of the section from 10½ to 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 5, to strike out:

SEC. 10a. That a new section is hereby added to Article II of the war-risk insurance act, to be known as section 212, and to read as follows:

"SEC. 212. That whenever an application for family allowance has been, or shall hereafter be, presented to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance by or on behalf of any person within class A, and it shall after due investigation be determined that the necessary relationship existed between such person and an enlisted man in the active military or naval service at the time when the application was made, and that compulsory allotment has not been waived or exemption therefrom granted, a family allowance shall be awarded and paid for the full period defined in section 204 hereof or for such part of said period as it shall be shown that the relationship existed, notwithstanding the fact that no deductions from the pay of the enlisted man for compulsory allotment in favor of such person have been made, and notwithstanding the further fact that the enlisted man has been discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States. Any awards heretofore made which are inconsistent with the provisions of this section may upon application be reopened and made to conform herewith."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 3, to change the number of the section from 10b to 10a; in line 13, after the word "misconduct," to strike out "involving moral turpitude"; and in line 19, after the word "of," to strike out "October" and insert "April," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10a. That section 300 of the war-risk insurance act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 300. That for death or disability resulting from personal injury suffered or disease contracted in the line of duty, by any commissioned officer or enlisted man, or by any member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) when employed in the active service under the War Department or Navy Department, the United States shall pay compensation as hereinafter provided; but no compensation shall be paid if the injury or disease has been caused by his own willful misconduct: Provided, That for the purposes of this section said officer, enlisted man, or other member shall be held and taken to have been in sound condition when examined, accepted, and enrolled for service: Provided further, That this section, as amended, shall be deemed to become effective as of April 6, 1917."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 4, after the word "furnish," to insert "transportation, also," so as to read:

(9) That the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is hereby authorized to furnish transportation, also the medical, surgical, and hospital services and the supplies and appliances provided by subdivision (6) hereof, to discharged members of the military or naval forces of those Governments which have been associated in war with the United States since April 6, 1917, and come within the provisions of laws of such Governments similar to the war-risk insurance act, at such rates and under such regulations as the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 21, after the words "war-risk insurance act," to strike out "unless from the records of the Navy Department or War Risk Insurance Bureau it appears that he has applied for insurance in a less sum," so as to read:

Provided further, That each officer and enlisted man attached to the U. S. S. Cyclops on the 4th day of March, 1918, and every officer and enlisted man who on said date was a passenger on said vessel shall be deemed to have been granted insurance in the sum of $5,000 permitted under the war-risk insurance act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 7, before the word "herein," to strike out "This section shall be deemed to be in effect as of October 6, 1917: Provided, That nothing," and insert "Nothing," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 13. That the permitted class of beneficiaries for insurance as specified in section 492 of the war-risk insurance act is hereby enlarged so as to include, in addition to the persons therein enumerated, uncles, aunts, nephews, nieces, brothers-in-law, and sisters-in-law of the insured. Nothing herein shall be construed to interfere with the payment of the monthly installments authorized to be made under the provisions of said war-risk insurance act, as originally enacted and subsequently amended, up to and including the second calendar month after the passage of this act: Provided further, That all awards of insurance under the provisions of the said war-risk insurance act, as originally enacted and subsequently amended, shall be revised as of the first day of the third calendar month after the passage of this act, in accordance with the provisions of the said war-risk insurance act as modified by this amendatory act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 21, after the word "insured," to strike out "an amount equal to the commuted value of"; in line 22, after the word "installments," to strike out "of yearly renewable term insurance granted" and insert "payable and applicable"; in line 24, after the word "act," to strike out "payable and applicable, calculated on the basis of interest at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 14. That if no person within the permitted class of beneficiaries survive the insured, then there shall be paid to the estate of the insured the monthly installments payable and applicable under the provisions of article 4 of the war-risk insurance act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 15, after the word "class," to strike out "an amount equal to the commuted value of"; in line 16, after the word "remaining," to insert "unpaid"; and in the same line, after the word "installments," to insert "calculated on the basis of interest at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 15. That if any person to whom such yearly renewable term insurance has been awarded dies, or his rights are otherwise terminated after the death of the insured, but before all of the 240 monthly installments have been paid, then the monthly installments payable and applicable shall be payable to such person or persons within the permitted class of beneficiaries as would, under the laws of the State of residence of the insured, be entitled to his personal property in case of intestacy; and if the permitted class of beneficiaries be exhausted before all of the 240 monthly installments have been paid, then there shall be paid to the estate of the last surviving person within the permitted class the remaining unpaid monthly installments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 25, after the word "insured," to strike out "an amount equal to the commuted value of"; on page 18, line 1, before the word "monthly," to insert "remaining unpaid"; in the same line, after the word "installments," to strike out "payable and applicable, calculated on the basis of interest at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum"; in line 6, after the word "beneficiary," to strike out "an amount equal to the commuted value of"; in line 8, before the word "monthly," to insert "remaining unpaid"; and in the same line, after the word "installments," to strike out "so payable and applicable, calculated on the basis of interest at 3½ per cent per annum," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 16. That if no beneficiary within the permitted class be designated by the insured as beneficiary for converted insurance, granted under the provisions of article 4 of the war-risk insurance act, either in his lifetime or by his last will and testament, or if the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured, then there shall be paid to the estate of the insured the remaining unpaid monthly installments; or if the designated beneficiary survives the insured and dies before receiving all of the installments of converted insurance payable and applicable, then there shall be paid to the estate of such beneficiary the remaining unpaid monthly installments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to say, as a member of the Committee on Finance, for the minority members of that committee, that the committee, in the adoption of these amendments to the present law, acted with absolute unanimity. I do not think there was a member of the committee who did not think that these deserving objects of the consideration of the Government are entitled to the increased benefits that these amendments bestow upon them. I do not think there ought to be any hesitation upon the part of the Senate in passing this measure without discussion, and passing it unanimously.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I simply want to add a word to that which has just been spoken by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I, too, am a member of the Committee on Finance, which had charge of the original bill providing for the relief of the disabled whom we had reason to expect would be deserving of the consideration of the country at the conclusion of the war.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that this country can do too much or, within reason, be too generous toward those who have suffered by reason of their participation in the war, and I am glad to state that in the committee that thought was unanimous. We all wanted to do everything that could be done within reason to alleviate suffering and make the legislation which has been enacted by the Congress as favorable to those who deserve the benefits of this legislation as could be done.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to have printed in the RECORD the report upon this bill. I will not take the time to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report submitted by Mr. SMOOT is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 339, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session.]

WAR-RISK INSURANCE ACT.

December 16 (calendar day, December 19), 1919.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Finance, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 8778:

The Committee on Finance of the Senate, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8778) to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act, having considered the same report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass with amendments.

Page 1, line 9, insert $7,500 in lieu of $10,000.

Sections 2 and 3 eliminate certain restrictions as to the child being included within the definition of "child" under the war-risk insurance act, viz, the requirement that it must have been adopted before the soldier entered the service, or, if illegitimate, that it shall have been born in the United States or its insular possessions after a given date.

Section 4, page 2, amend to read as follows: "That section 22 of the war-risk insurance act is hereby amended by inserting therein immediately following subdivisions (4) and (5), respectively, two new subdivisions, to be known as subdivision (4a) and subdivision (5a), and to read as follows:"

Page 2, line 23, add subdivision 5a, to read as follows: "(5a) The terms 'brother' and 'sister' include the children of a person who, for a period of not less than one year, stood in loco parentis to a member of the military or naval forces of the United States at any time prior to his enlistment or induction, or another member of the same household as to whom such person during such period likewise stood in loco parentis: Provided, That this subdivision shall be deemed to be in effect as of October 6, 1917."

Section 4 adds to the other definitions in the war-risk insurance act a definition of the terms "father," "mother," "brother," and "sister."

The terms "father" and "mother" include stepfather, stepmother, fathers and mothers through adoption, and persons who have stood in loco parentis to a member of the military or naval forces for a period of not less than one year.

The terms "brother" and "sister" include the children of a person who, for a period of not less than one year, stood in loco parentis to a member of the military or naval forces of the United States at any time prior to his enlistment or induction.

These provisions are made retroactive from and after October 6, 1917.

Section 5 relates to persons who may be confined in an asylum or hospital for the insane maintained by the United States, where no guardian or curator of their property has been duly appointed. The director, after due investigation, may order all moneys payable to him to be held in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of such person. It also provides that funds so held may be disbursed by the director at his discretion, to the chief executive officer of the asylum or hospital in which such person is an inmate, to be used by such officer for the maintenance and comfort of such inmate, and account to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Section 6 provides that section 29 of the war-risk insurance act (which declares that a discharge on certain grounds will forfeit the insurance carried by the soldier) shall not be applicable to converted insurance. It does not interfere with the application of that section to the present war-time term insurance.

Page 4, lines 10, 11, and 12, strike out all of section 7.

Page 4, line 13, change 8 to 7.

Section 7 as amended adds a new section to the war-risk insurance act which is designed to dispose of the so-called "inducted" man problem. The section declares that a person is not in active service within the meaning of the war-risk insurance act until he has been examined at the camp or other place of mobilization and "accepted and enrolled for active service." The first proviso covers the case of men who are injured in line of duty, etc., after induction and prior to final acceptance, and the second proviso covers cases where an inducted man makes an application for insurance prior to being finally accepted.

Sections 8 and 9 provide that family allotments and allowances shall be discontinued at the end of the fourth calendar month after the termination of the present war emergency, as declared by proclamation of the President of the United States, and thereafter all allotments of pay shall be voluntary and shall be made under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively.

Page 6, line 3, change "Sec. 10½" to "Sec. 10."

Pages 6 and 7, strike out all of section 10a from line 19, page 6, to line 15, page 7, inclusive.

Page 8, line 7, strike out the word "October" and insert in lieu thereof the word "April."

Section 11 relates to the compensation to be paid disabled persons and the members of their families. The rate of compensation has been increased, and, in order that a comparison may be made with the present law, the provisions of the present law are hereby inserted, followed by the provisions of the proposed bill:

PRESENT LAW.

(1) If and while the disability is total, the monthly compensation shall be the following amounts:

(a) If the disabled person has neither wife nor child living, $30.
(b) If he has a wife but no child living, $45.
(c) If he has a wife and one child living, $55.
(d) If he has a wife and two children living, $65.
(e) If he has a wife and three or more children living, $75.
(f) If he has no wife but one child living, $40, with $10 for each additional child up to two.
(g) If he has a mother or father, either or both dependent on him for support, then, in addition to the above amounts, $10 for each.

PROPOSED BILL.

(1) If and while the disability is rated as total and temporary, the monthly compensation shall be the following amounts:

(a) If the disabled person has neither wife nor child living, $80.
(b) If he has a wife but no child living, $90.
(c) If he has a wife and one child living, $95.
(d) If he has a wife and two or more children living, $100.
(e) If he has no wife but one child living, $90, with $5 for each additional child up to two.
(f) If he has a mother or father, either or both dependent on him for support, then, in addition to the above amounts, $10 for each parent so dependent.

Disabilities shall be rated by the department as total and temporary, partial and temporary, total and permanent, and partial and permanent, and the monthly compensation shall be a percentage of the degree of reduction in earning capacity resulting from the disability, but no compensation shall be payable for a reduction in earning capacity rated as less than 10 per cent, except in case of total permanent disability, in which case the compensation shall be $100 per month. Ratings shall be based, as far as practicable, upon the average impairments of earning capacity resulting from such injuries in civil occupations, and not upon impairment in earning capacity, in each individual case, so that there shall be no reduction in the rate of compensation for individual success in overcoming the handicap of a permanent injury. The bureau shall from time to time readjust the schedule of ratings in accordance with actual experience.

The director shall allow an additional $20 per month to a disabled person who is so helpless as to be constantly in need of a nurse or attendant.

In connection with section 11 of this bill, a tentative schedule of ratings for partial permanent disability is herewith submitted. This tentative schedule was arrived at by the advisory board with surgeons in New York who went to the hospitals and prepared it after due investigation.

The injured person shall also be furnished by the United States Government such reasonable governmental medical and hospital services and such supplies, including artificial limbs, trusses, and similar appliances, as the director may determine.

The Bureau of War Risk Insurance shall also furnish transportation, governmental medical and hospital services and supplies and appliances to discharged members of the military and naval forces of the Governments which have been associated in war with the United States at such rates and under such regulations as the Bureau of War Risk Insurance may prescribe. The Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is authorized to reimburse said Governments or their agencies for services, supplies, and appliances furnished to members of the military and naval forces of the United States who live within the territorial limits of such Governments. This provision is for the purpose of establishing reciprocal relations between the Governments which have been associated in war with the United States since April 6, 1917, relative to furnishing medical and hospital services and supplies and appliances to discharged soldiers who may be living within the respective territories of the Governments associated with us in the war. The Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is authorized to prescribe necessary regulations to carry out this provision of the proposed bill.

Section 302 of this act as amended shall be deemed to be in force and effect as of April 6, 1917.

(The schedule referred to follows:)

DEAR SIR: In accordance with instructions from Assistant Secretary Love we now submit the following additions to the schedule of ratings for partial permanent disability:

Ratings for permanent injuries to hearing.

REMAINING HEARING—OTHER EAR.

Remaining hearing—1 ear.	0	25 per cent.	50 per cent.	75 per cent.	100 per cent.
0	50	43	35	26	15
25 per cent	43	38	31	21	9
50 per cent	35	31	25	16	5
75 per cent	26	21	16	9	2
100 per cent	15	9	5	2	0

For example, if the remaining hearing in one ear were 50 per cent and in the other ear 75 per cent, i. e., 25 per cent impairment, the rating would be 16 per cent.

	Per cent.
Mental deterioration	10–80
Hernia, ventral, where hernia can not be kept in place effectively by an orthopedic appliance	50
Where hernia can be kept in place by an orthopedic appliance	20
4. Epilepsy:
Fits occurring daily	100
Fits occurring periodically at intervals of from 2 to 4 days	80
Fits occurring periodically at intervals of from 5 to 10 days	60
Fits occurring periodically at intervals of from 11 to 30 days	40
Fits occurring periodically at intervals exceeding 30 days	20

Ratings for permanent injuries to vision.

REMAINING VISION—OTHER EYE.

Remaining vision—other eye.	0	20/200	20/100	20/70	20/50	20/40	20/30	20/20
0	100	100	95	75	65	60	50	30
20/200	100	100	95	70	60	55	45	27.5
20/100	95	95	70	65	55	50	40	22.5
20/70	75	70	65	60	50	45	35	17.5
20/50	65	60	55	50	45	40	30	12.5
20/40	60	55	50	45	40	35	27.5	10
20/30	50	45	40	35	30	25	20	5
20/20	30	27.5	22.5	17.5	12.5	10	5	0

The foregoing ratings measure the disability after the best possible adjustment of lenses has been applied to the eyes.

The international system of noting visual values has been used in the foregoing table. The numerator indicates the distance in feet of the object from the eyes of the observer, and the denominator the distance (also in feet) at which the object should have been seen. For example, 20/200 means that the individual is seated 20 feet from the object, but sees only that sized object which should be seen at 200 feet. We are assured by authorities in ophthalmics that these fractions serve all practical purposes and that it would be inadvisable to adopt any other than the accepted standard for estimating visual power.

In the following table appear the ratings for paralysis of extrinsic muscles:

Permanent injuries to the eyes—Paralysis of the extrinsic muscles.

All extrinsic muscles of one eye paralyzed:	Per cent.
0 muscle of other eye paralyzed	15
1 muscle of other eye paralyzed	18
2 muscles of other eye paralyzed	20
3 muscles of other eye paralyzed	25
4 muscles of other eye paralyzed	30
5 muscles of other eye paralyzed	60
All muscles of other eye paralyzed	100

It is assumed that the foregoing disability remains after the best possible adjustment of prisms has been applied to the eyes.

The following schedule would apply to permanent injuries to the eye which impaired the visual fields:

Permanent injuries to the eyes—Impairment of visual fields.

	Per cent.
Loss of nasal halves of both fields	0
Loss of nasal half of one field	0
Partial defects of one field	10
Loss of temporal half of one eye	10
Loss of full field of one eye	10
Concentric contraction of one eye	10
Loss of temporal half of both eyes	15
Small concentric contraction of both eyes to 60°	15
Concentric contraction of both fields to 30°	30
Concentric contraction of both fields to 5°	100

Yours, very truly,

Section 12 amends the automatic insurance provisions in section 401 of the act by extending the automatic insurance provisions so as to cover all men (except those who actually refuse to apply for insurance) who were finally accepted for service and were in service between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918.

Under the present law only those who were in the service between October 15, 1917, and February 12, 1918, and died or were totally disabled during that period, and did not apply for insurance, were entitled to automatic insurance.

Page 15, line 9, add a period after the word "act" and strike out the rest of the paragraph.

Page 15, line 17, strike out all of line 17 and down to and including the word "that" on line 18, and commence the word "nothing" with a capital "N."

Page 16, amend section 14 to read as follows: "Sec. 14. That if no person within the permitted class of beneficiaries survive the insured, then there shall be paid to the estate of the insured the monthly installments payable and applicable under the provisions of article 4 of the war-risk insurance act."

Section 14 provides that in case, at the death of the insured, there is no one living within the permitted class of beneficiaries, the insurance shall be paid to the personal representatives of the insured; and the Senate amendment provides that the payments shall be made in the same way as to the original beneficiary—that is, in monthly installments.

Page 16, line 25, beginning with line 25, section 15 is amended to read as follows: "persons within the permitted class the remaining unpaid monthly installments."

Page 17, section 16, is amended to read as follows: "Sec. 16. That if no beneficiary within the permitted class be designated by the insured as beneficiary for converted insurance, granted under the provisions of article 4 of the war-risk insurance act, either in his lifetime or by his last will and testament, or if the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured, then there shall be paid to the estate of the insured the remaining unpaid monthly installments; or if the designated beneficiary survives the insured and dies before receiving all of the installments of converted insurance payable and applicable, then there shall be paid to the estate of such beneficiary the remaining unpaid monthly installments."

FINAL REPORT OF GEN. PERSHING.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present at this time the final report of Gen. John J. Pershing, the commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces, and to say very briefly to the Senate something with respect to it. I present it in a private capacity, of course.

The War Department has been able to print something like 2,500 of the report, and a tremendous demand has arisen for it, to such an extent that it was quite impossible for the War Department to meet that demand. The demand very largely arises from Members of Congress, who are anxious to secure additional copies of it.

Needless to say, it is exceedingly interesting. It contains not only a description of the operations of the American Army in France and this country, covering nearly the period of hostilities, but also a very excellent set of maps, showing the operations in the different countries.

I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing, and let me urge at this time, if I may be so impertinent, that that committee be as generous as possible in the treatment of the report, because it is highly important.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so referred.

RAILROAD CONTROL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gronna	Lodge	Sherman
Bankhead	Hale	McCormick	Simmons
Brandegee	Harris	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Harrison	McLean	Smoot
Capper	Henderson	McNary	Spencer
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Moses	Sterling
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Sutherland
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Thomas
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Trammell
Dial	Kellogg	Nugent	Underwood

Elkins	King	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Fletcher	Kirby	Poindexter	Williams
France	Knox	Pomerene	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Ransdell
Gay	Lenroot	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee to an amendment which I wish to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 82, lines 7, 8, 9, and 10, strike out the words "substituting for the words 'maximum joint rates' in the paragraph designated (b) the words 'joint rates, or maximum or minimum, or maximum and minimum joint rates'; also."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the words sought to be stricken out by amendment are in the House bill, and the subject will be in conference. I do not make any objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask leave to submit a further amendment, to which I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee. On page 82, following line 13, I move to insert the following:

The commission shall have no authority to establish any route, classification, rate, fare, or charge when the transportation is wholly by water.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection to the amendment. I do not think the commission has the power now to establish such a rate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The SECRETARY. On page 82, section 41, after line 13, add:

The commission shall have no authority to establish any route, classification, rate, fare, or charge when the transportation is wholly by water.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment which I sent to the desk last evening be read and placed before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada offers the following amendment. The Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. On page 77, line 11, strike out all of lines 11 to and including line 17, page 78, and insert the following:

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers, or of like kind of property, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, or to charge any greater compensation as a through route than the aggregate of the intermediate rates subject to the provisions of this act; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge or receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, however, That upon application to the Interstate Commerce Commission such common carrier may in special cases, not due to or arising out of conditions of water competition, actual or potential, direct or indirect, after investigation, be authorized by the commission to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section: Provided further, That no authorization for a change of existing rates under the proviso of this section shall be granted within six months from the approval of this act, nor in any case where application shall have been filed before the commission, in accordance with the provisions of this section, until a determination of such application by the commission; but in exercising the authority conferred upon it in this proviso the commission shall not permit the establishment of any charge to or from the more distant point that is not fairly compensatory for the service performed.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, this amendment is not proposed with any hostility to the railroads. Its purpose is to place the present law in such language that it can not be misunderstood or misinterpreted.

It was the intention of the Congress in 1910, when it adopted the amendment now sought to be amended, to afford relief to the Intermountain and Southern States relative to the discriminatory rates which had been charged them by the railroads. The provisos and exceptions in that section became the rule, and the unjust practices were continued. Very little relief, if any, was afforded the inland States which had suffered so long from these discriminatory rates.

I believe it was Burke who said that if the Government of Great Britain was going to command and have the respect of all the people of that Empire the laws should be enforced with equal justice and fairness to the Hindoo who lived on the Ganges as well as to the Englishman who lived on the Thames. The same principle is true in this country. The laws should be administered with the same equal fairness to the people of the Intermountain and Southern States as they are to the people along the coast.

I understand that as a matter of fact the railroads are not opposing an amendment of this kind so much as the coast jobbers. The coast jobbers wish to control distribution, and therefore they are paying little, if any, attention to the development, growth, and prosperity of the Intermountain States, which are so seriously affected by the present act.

I have a telegram which I received this morning from the president and secretary of the Reno Chamber of Commerce, which I desire to read, as follows:

RENO, NEV., December 18, 1919.

Hon. CHARLES B. HENDERSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Chamber of Commerce of Reno, which has a membership of more than 1,200 business men, by action of its direction board and traffic committee, submits the following in regard to pending railroad legislation:

First. We favor the unconditional prohibition of a higher charge for a short than for a long haul. This we consider the most important point involved.

Second. We favor the complete regulation of water transportation and rates between American ports by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Third. We do not believe that necessary capital for railroad development can be attracted or that efficient and economical operation of railroads can be encouraged if the earnings allowed to be kept by any road are limited to a 5 percentage of a valuation as yet undetermined, and surplus earnings above this percentage are diverted to other uses, as provided now in Cummins bill. Railroads should be allowed to earn and keep a fair return on value of investments, and we favor the principle of the rate-fixing plan originally contained in Esch bill when introduced in the House but later cut by amendment.

Fourth. We favor legislation permitting voluntary consolidation of railroads into competing systems under appropriate regulation and supervision, but do not favor compulsory or arbitrary consolidation of strong with weak roads until time shall have determined its necessity or advantage.

RENO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By CHAS. S. KNIGHT, President.
HARLIE R. NORRIS, Secretary.

The most essential thing to the Intermountain States is the matter to which they refer under number one, and that is the amendment which I have offered and which is different in some respects from the amendment that was offered the other day by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. The amendment contains practically the language of the present act, the only change being with reference to water competition.

Every Senator understands the nature of these unjust rates. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] very fully explained to the Senate on Wednesday how these rates operated and how seriously they retard the progress of the Intermountain States in their industrial development. I shall not, therefore, take up the further time of the Senate in discussing this matter. The importance of the adoption of the amendment can not be overstated.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if I understand the purpose of the Senator's amendment, it is to secure relief from that practice hitherto prevailing in his section of the country and mine, and which probably still prevails, of charging the shipper living at Reno or Denver a greater rate than is charged the shipper living at San Francisco or Portland on a shipment from the East, and which generally consists of the through rate to the Pacific coast plus the local rate from the Pacific coast back to the interior point of shipment. Am I correct?

Mr. HENDERSON. That is correct.

Mr. THOMAS. Any scheme of legislative relief for the railroads which does not prohibit that practice is unjust, indefensible, and outrageous. The effort made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to secure some relief from the intolerable evil commanded very small support in the Senate, I am sorry to say. I could not help wishing when the vote was announced that those who voted against his proposition might suffer from the same situation for a few weeks that they might understand how oppressive and how utterly indefensible such a condition is.

It was my good fortune to spend several months in the State of Nevada some years ago, when the mining camps of Tonopah and Goldfield were in the heyday of their activities. The demand made for materials of all kinds by those two growing communities was abnormal and apparently unlimited. I know that on several occasions shipments of needed machinery were hurried into Goldfield in 1906 at freight rates in excess of those charged on the same machinery from New York by way of San Francisco to South Africa. The discrepancy consisted very largely in the addition to the shipment of the freight rate from San Francisco back to Goldfield. It should be borne in mind that the freight did not go to San Francisco at all, but went direct from New York or Chicago to Goldfield, but the charge to the shipper was the rate from New York to San Francisco plus the rate back from San Francisco to Goldfield. The remarkable fact was that the addition of the two amounts exceeded the established rate, as I said, from New York by way of San Francisco to South Africa.

The only possible excuse given for that outrage, because outrage it is, is what the railroad authorities call the fear of potential ocean competition, which was about as dangerous to the railroad companies as the toy cannon of a 2-year-old baby to the German Empire. In the first place, all possible competition was controlled by the railroads. They controlled the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. and all competing lines of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. At that time, in order to prevent any haulage at all, they were paying the owners of the Panama Railroad Co. every year an annual sum in excess of what they could earn if they hauled freight across the Isthmus. Of course, the freighters and shippers of the Rocky Mountain West paid the bill. Yet the railroads had and still have the audacity to defend that levy of contributions upon the helpless people of the West by pretending that ocean competition justified it. No man ever contemplated any act deliberately without finding some sort of excuse for it.

We suffer relatively from the same evil, and always have. I frequently refer to the Rocky Mountain region as the stepchild of the country. It is treated as such not only by those who control the transportation of the continent, but by the Government itself in many instances. I had hoped that some relief might come from that intolerable situation through the action of the Congress in placing conditions upon the restoration of the railroad systems to their owners.

The fact is that wherever there is no possibility of water competition the railroads have hitherto acted practically without any limitation except what the traffic would bear, and unfortunately all efforts to obtain relief at the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission have so far proven abortive. We got three or four decisions, but they have been so interpreted and so applied as to leave the evil practically undetermined.

I have had occasion several times to emphasize the fact that the people of the State of Colorado, who live in one of the greatest sugar-producing States in the country, can buy Colorado sugar at Omaha and Kansas City and ship it back to Denver and other common points cheaper than they can buy it from those who manufacture the sugar at the very doors of that city.

We are, perhaps, about a thousand miles from Galveston; it is downhill from Denver all the way to the Gulf coast; but freight rates are so arranged that it costs more to ship freight downhill from Denver to Galveston than it does to haul it uphill from Galveston to Denver. I might mention other similar instances.

The fact is, Mr. President, that this is an intolerable burden, an unjust burden, a most oppressive practice of discrimination against a vast section of country occupied by citizens of the United States who pay their taxes and who deserve equal treatment at the hands of the transportation companies; yet the very commendable effort of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to obtain relief from it finds the support of about a third of the Senators from the other States. If this bill is enacted into law without regulating that difficulty, it will be an imperfect bill and one which we can not justify to our constituents. For my part I do not propose to justify it as to that particular feature.

Mr. President, notwithstanding the fact that comparatively few Senators are here, I certainly hope that heed will be given to this amendment. To what extent the same discrimination has obtained during Government control I do not know; we have all been too busy to pay much attention to that feature of it. To what extent discriminations exist in other parts of the country I am not fully advised, but I certainly hope they are treated better than our section of the country has been. They can not be treated any worse. I am sure of that.

Mr. President, I know that time is precious; we want to get through with the pending bill as soon as possible; and I am sure I can not add anything to what was so well said on yesterday in the consideration of a similar amendment and to-day by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, everything that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has just said is true, and more. I could take the time of the Senate for hours in citing specific cases of discrimination in rates in the intermountain region, but I shall not, as it is apparent to every Senator that these discriminatory rates are unjust and unfair, and that the Intermountain and Southern States should not be called upon to bear them any longer. I believe that the amendment is thoroughly understood.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON]. [Putting the question.] The Chair can not decide the vote.

Mr. HENDERSON and Mr. KELLOGG called for a division.

The question being put, on a division the vote was declared to be a tie.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is lost. The Senator from Nevada can reoffer it in the Senate, where a vote may be taken on it.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope the Senator from Nevada will reserve the right to reintroduce the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes; I was just going to give notice that I would bring the matter up again. I understood I had the right to do so, anyway.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada will have that right. The Chair has not read the amendment and will not vote on an amendment he has not read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS rose.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator from Colorado desire to speak on the question just under discussion?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I desire to present an amendment, but I can do so later.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 23, on page 95, it is proposed to insert a new section, to be known as section 47½, as follows:

A board is hereby created and established, to be known as the railroad control adjustment board, which shall be composed of five members, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall likewise fill by appointment all vacancies which may occur in said board.

The duty of said board shall be, and it shall have jurisdiction to receive, examine, and adjudicate all disputes between the United States or the Director General of Railroads and the several carrier corporations growing out of any contract entered into under the Federal control act between the Director General of Railroads and such carriers, or out of any provision of said act, or out of the possession and use by the United States, under the acts hereinbefore referred to approved August 29, 1916, and March 21, 1918, of the property of said companies, respectively. The said board shall adjudicate said claims according to the merits thereof and the principles of equity, and is empowered to make all necessary and convenient rules and regulations of practice and procedure for the transaction of its business. It may appoint a clerk, a messenger, and one or more stenographers and typewriters. The annual salary of each member of the said board shall be $10,000, payable in equal monthly installments, and the annual salaries of the several employees of the said board shall be the same as the salaries of persons holding similar positions with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Any amount awarded by the said board to any carrier shall be paid out of any funds in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated upon the presentation of a certified copy of the judgment. Either party shall have the right to a review, in the district court of the United States for the district in which the principal office of the carrier is located, of any question of law that may arise, with appeal from the said district court direct to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The powers and jurisdiction hereby granted to the said board shall be in force and continue for the period of five years from the date of the approval of this act: Provided, That the President may from time to time extend said period not exceeding six months in each instance when, in his judgment, such extension is necessary, to enable the board to complete its work: Provided further, That in case the board shall have completed its work before the expiration of said period of five years, the President may, by order, dissolve the said board.

The Department of Justice is hereby directed to provide the said board with all necessary and suitable rooms and offices for holding its sessions and transacting its business.

Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to affect or interfere in any way with any authority conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission in any contract hereinbefore referred to as to the adjustment or determination of matters of controversy between the parties to such contract.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, that is a mere skeleton draft, intended to bring before the conference committee the idea proposed by the amendment. The Government has had control of the railroads of the country now for two years, or whatever the time may be. It has made contracts with various railroads; there are many questions arising under those contracts; there are many unadjusted claims by the railroads. The amendment seeks to provide an adjustment board of five members, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, which shall primarily adjust differences between the roads and the Railroad Administration. A review is provided upon any question of law presented under any contract or claim of which the proposed board may have jurisdiction to the district court of the United States and an appeal from the court to the Supreme Court of the United States.

I have no desire to enter into the details of the proposal. As I have stated, it is intended to be simply a suggestion to bring the subject before the conference committee and to be disposed of in their wisdom.

I am informed that a suggestion was made to the committee about this matter and the hope expressed that such a provision might be included in the bill. I do not find it in the bill, and it seems to me at least worthy of the consideration of the conference committee. I do not express a final opinion in favor of it, and I do not ask that the Senate may go on record as favoring it as a finality; but if this amendment is not introduced, the subject can not be considered by the conference committee.

I have submitted it to the chairman of the committee. I do not understand that he is ready to advocate it, and I understand from him that he did not feel like actively opposing it, but he is here and will state his own attitude. I submit the amendment for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I assume that this amendment has come in some way from a suggestion made on the floor when I made the opening statement with regard to this bill. As Senators will remember, I remarked that, in my opinion, the litigation growing out of the relations between the railroads and the Government would not be finished in 25 years.

I think some Senator rose at that time and suggested that it might be well to have a board established, something like the Army boards which have been created for the purpose of settling differences between the Government and various contractors in connection with supplies, munitions, and the like.

I express no opinion with regard to the wisdom of doing the work that must be done in this way or doing it in some other way. I am perfectly willing that the amendment shall be adopted and carried into conference, although I do not pledge myself to do anything to retain it in the law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think there is no question that some board will have to be created, unless there is some organization now which would adequately perform this important work. I was about to ask the Senator if there was not some board or agency of the Government now that could properly, in consonance with its organization and duties, discharge the obligations which would be required in settling controversies between the Government and the railroads?

Mr. CUMMINS. Is there any such board now?

Mr. KING. Yes; does the Senator have any in mind?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not, but I think the President has the power to retain from the employees of the Railroad Administration a sufficient number of men to settle these controversies—that is, to represent the Government in the disputes.

About the only thing, as I heard it read hastily, that the amendment would do would be to require the persons so selected to be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make just a suggestion?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have been told that this subject has been called to the attention of the Director General of Railroads, Mr. Walker D. Hines, and that in case this amendment is sent to conference he expects to advise the conference committee of his views upon the question, of course retaining full liberty of opinion to express any views that he may at that time entertain. I do think, however, that this should be considered by the conference committee.

We have frequently appointed boards and commissions to adjust claims after all great events where questions of damage were presented—the Spanish Claims Commission, the Alabama Claims Commission, any large subject where from congressional action or from war it was perfectly manifest that there was a novel situation, and that some special tribunal, appointed in a way by the Government, which would command the confidence and respect of the parties to the dispute, and especially where the claims are to be against the Government, should be created temporarily to take jurisdiction of that class of cases. As I say, it is simply a suggestion that I desire to bring to the conference committee, and then it is for the wisdom of the conferees to adopt it or reject it or modify it, and afterwards it will be for the Senate and House to approve of it or for the President to do so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator accept an amendment to strike out "five" in two places and insert "three," so that it will be made up of three members and last for three years?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes. As I say, it is a mere skeleton. I care nothing about the terms or the details. I would just as soon make it three or two or seven. I will modify my amendment and make the board three instead of five. I will say to the Senator also that I had to put in some suggestion for their salaries, and I inserted $10,000 because I think men of this class, who would have to be men of legal minds and capable of being judges of high courts, would be worth that; but the conference committee can reduce it to $5,000 if they want to. I had to put in something. It is a mere suggested experiment; that is all.

Mr. KING. The Senator has acceded to the suggestion that the board shall be three in number?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Three instead of five; yes.

Mr. KING. And will the Senator limit the duration of the board to three years instead of five?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes. It provides now that they shall be abolished inside of five years if they finish their duties.

Mr. KING. If we should say 25 years, they would not finish their duties in that time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, I would be willing to make it one; but let us say three years.

Mr. KING. I think it ought to be three years, because it is clear that they can not finish in less than three years the vast amount of work which will have to be performed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, the Senator will realize that when I modify my proposed amendment to this effect it is of no account, because the conference committee will do as they please about it.

If those modifications have been made, I will ask for a vote, unless there is further discussion.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, it seems to me very clear that this amendment ought not to be adopted. We ought not to throw into conference a matter of this magnitude without the Senate having any opportunity to consider the details of it.

Let me just call the attention of the Senate to two things that are found in this amendment:

> Any amount awarded by the said board to any carrier shall be paid out of any funds in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated upon the presentation of a certified copy of the judgment.

It appropriates no one knows how many millions of dollars, or possibly hundreds of millions of dollars, although at the very time of this award the carrier may be indebted to the United States Government for amounts much greater than the award, and the award may be upon capital expenditures; and yet this provision would compel the payment out of the Treasury of no one knows how much, when if there was any award it ought to be offset against amounts owing by the carriers to the Government.

Then immediately following we find this provision:

> Either party shall have the right to a review, in the district court of the United States for the district in which the principal office of the carrier is located, of any question of law that may arise.

Will anyone tell me how we can create such a board as this, upon a matter that is wholly judicial in its nature, and make the finding of fact by this board absolutely conclusive upon the courts? No one ever heard of such a proposition. Of course, if the Senate could have an opportunity, when this conference report comes in, to consider this matter and offer amendments, it would be a very different proposition, but when the conference committee agrees we all know that the exigencies of the situation will be such that in all probability we will not vote to reject the report of the conference committee, and the Senate never will have an opportunity to consider the details of this proposition. This is a matter of such magnitude that it ought to be a separate bill, and the Senate ought to consider it and the House ought to consider it in the ordinary way.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I simply want to suggest to the Senator that if the Government has a claim against a road I assume, of course, that it will be set off against the claim of the road.

Mr. LENROOT. Not under the provisions of the bill, unless it arose in that dispute.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, it certainly should be, of course.

Mr. LENROOT. But the claim might not be a matter of dispute at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I assume that the conference committee, in the consideration of the matter, will insert such a provision.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator assumes that, and that is just what I object to, and it is no reflection upon the members of the conference committee, of course, in the slightest degree. The conferees are going to have enough work imposed upon them in the consideration of the parts of the bill that necessarily do belong in this scheme without taking up these tremendously important matters that can be and should be considered separately.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the purpose of this bill includes the intention of giving all the courts of the country jurisdiction of disputes and controversies which may arise under its operations. When the Senator from Iowa was presenting the bill for the consideration of the Senate, immediately after he concluded I asked him whether that was the case. He replied that it certainly was, and that if the bill was ambiguous upon the subject it should be corrected. Since that time I have not had much opportunity to examine the text of the measure, but I have gone over it superficially once or twice, and I think that the question is at least a matter of doubt. For the purpose of removing that doubt, if my apprehension is well founded, I want to suggest to the chairman of the committee the propriety of two amendments, the first occurring on page 45, line 16.

The clause there found reads as follows:

First. To adopt a corporate name, and to sue and to be sued in any court having jurisdiction over corporations organized under an act of Congress and of the subject matter and parties to the controversy.

Very few corporations outside of banking corporations have been organized under Federal laws, except those in the District of Columbia; but national banking corporations, by the recitals of the national banking act, are made subject to the jurisdiction of the State courts where located. My suggestion, therefore, is, first, to insert, between the words "over" and "corporations," on line 16, the words "national banking," so that the clause will read:

To adopt a corporate name, and to sue and be sued in any court having jurisdiction over national banking corporations organized under an act of Congress—

And so forth.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, so far as I am authorized to do so, I accept that amendment. I have not had an opportunity to discuss it with the other members of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Now, on page 51, line 15, as a supplement to the amendment just accepted, I suggest the addition of the following:

The board of directors of any such incorporation shall also designate an agent or agents resident in each and every State in which any part of its system of railroads may be situated upon whom service of all judicial process may be made.

I think that is also essential to clarify the ambiguity.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is quite satisfactory to me. The committee assumed that the corporation would be compelled to do that under the laws of the States without any express direction, but I am quite willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Whether or not the State law upon the subject would apply to an incorporation of the United States, I am not certain. Of course it applies to corporations of other States and to foreign corporations. Doubtless it might include the other, but the recital would certainly remove any question about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 51, after line 15, as a separate paragraph, it is proposed to insert the following:

The board of directors of any such incorporation shall also designate an agent or agents resident in each and every State in which any part of its system of railroads may be situated upon whom service of all judicial process may be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Now, Mr. President, I offer as an additional section of the bill the matter which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. Tickets for transportation of passengers, except tickets at special rates for excursions, conventions, or other specific occasions, shall not be limited, and shall be honored when presented in payment for passage by any lawful owner thereof.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection whatever to that amendment. I think it is a very good provision.

Mr. THOMAS. I may say that I discussed the matter with the Senator from Iowa before preparing it and found that he was agreeable to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], which I ask may be read and laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 88, line 17, it is proposed to strike out the sentence beginning "And in establishing such through route," and ending on page 89, line 6, in the following words:

And in establishing such through route the commission shall not, except as provided in section 3, require any carrier by railroad, without its consent, to embrace in such route substantially less than the entire length of its railroad and of any intermediate railroad operated in conjunction and under a common management or control therewith which lies between the termini of such proposed through routes, unless such inclusion of lines would make the through route unreasonably long as compared with another practicable through route which could otherwise be established: Provided, That in time of shortage of equipment, congestion of traffic, or other emergency declared by the commission it may establish temporarily such through routes as in its opinion are necessary or desirable in the public interest.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I can not accept that amendment, for, whatever may be its merit, there is a great difference of opinion with respect to the subject, and the members of the committee, I am sure, are in a great majority, at least, against a change of the law in that respect.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I would like to ask whether that has not already been amended? Was not an amendment adopted with reference to water routes?

Mr. CUMMINS. On motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] there was a provision inserted with reference to joint routes, partly by rail and partly by water.

Mr. LENROOT. Was that in connection with this paragraph?

Mr. CUMMINS. It would modify to some extent this provision, but not to the extent that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada would modify it.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand that; but my question is whether it has already been amended.

Mr. CUMMINS. It has been partly amended. I did not think of making the point of order.

Mr. LENROOT. I was not intending to make a point of order.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have taken it for granted that the Senate was not ready to change the law in that respect more than it had been changed by the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to know in what respect the amendment of the Senator from Missouri changes the language of that portion of the section I have sought to have stricken out. In what way does the amendment that was offered by the Senator from Missouri change that section?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will turn to it and read it.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator will permit me, I will state the effect of the amendment. It permits the commission to make joint water and rail hauls so as to give every community the benefit of a water haul.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 89, line 3, strike out the word "provided" and insert the following:

Provided, however, That this restriction shall not operate to hinder or prevent the commission establishing or maintaining a through route where one of the carriers is a water line.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, which do you want—a vote or for the Chair to sustain the point of order?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not see that that makes any change in the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I have prepared an amendment to be introduced, on page 88 of the bill, after the word "therein," line 9, which reads as follows:

Strike out the period, insert a colon, and the following:

"Provided, That nothing herein applicable to joint rates shall authorize a water carrier to receive as a proportion or division of a joint rate an amount in excess of its port-to-port rate, or to authorize the commission to prescribe the minimum rate to be charged for transportation by a water carrier."

I ask the chairman whether section 44, in which the matter referred to appears, relates at all to water carriers. If it does not, I do not wish to take up time by trying to get this amendment put in.

Mr. CUMMINS. My understanding is that it does not.

Mr. RANSDELL. Then the matter I have in mind would, I take it, be the subject of conference, inasmuch as the House bill has already included a provision which does include water carriers.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is correct in regard to that.

Mr. RANSDELL. Then I shall not press the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. At this point——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that I agreed with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] that at this point in the procedure I would suggest the absence of a quorum. The Senator from Iowa is about to ask unanimous consent to substitute one bill for the other, and I want to save time by not requiring him to repeat the statement he is about to make.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I desire to give notice that I may choose to call up in the Senate my amendment which was defeated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. You have that right.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Frelinghuysen	Kirby	Sherman
Bankhead	Gay	Lenroot	Smith, Md.
Borah	Gerry	Lodge	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Gronna	McCormick	Smoot
Calder	Hale	McLean	Spencer
Capper	Harris	Moses	Sterling
Colt	Harrison	Myers	Sutherland
Cummins	Henderson	Nelson	Thomas
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Trammell
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Underwood
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Wadsworth
Edge	Kellogg	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	Kendrick	Poindexter	Warren
Fernald	Kenyon	Pomerene	Williams
Fletcher	Keyes	Ransdell	Wolcott
France	King	Sheppard

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in order that the Senate may know precisely the meaning of what I ask, I desire to suggest that at this point I intend to request unanimous consent to take up House bill 10453.

Following that I shall ask unanimous consent, or make a motion, as the case may be, that in lieu of the amendment proposed to be inserted in said bill—the same being the portion printed in italics—there shall be substituted the Senate bill, which we have been considering, and as amended up to this time.

In connection with that I desire to ask unanimous consent that when the said House bill reaches the Senate those Senators who have reserved amendments made to the Senate bill in the Committee of the Whole for separate votes in the Senate shall have the same rights as respects those amendments incorporated in the House bill, or the same as they would have possessed had the Senate bill continued on its passage.

With that explanation, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of House bill 10453, Calendar No. 280.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that in lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted in the House bill, H. R. 10453, there shall be inserted the text of the Senate bill, S. 3288, as amended up to the present time, and that reservations concerning amendments can be made in the Senate upon House bill 10453 in the same way and to the same extent as though Senate bill 3288 had continued on its way to final passage.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If the Senate unanimously agrees to take up the House bill, as requested by the Senator from Iowa, will we then be excluded from voting in favor of the House bill as against the Senate bill, or will that settle the question as between the House bill and the Senate bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. Is the Senator from Florida propounding that question to the Chair or to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I propounded it to the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will not make an answer to the question when a unanimous consent request is pending. The Chair will state what he understands the unanimous consent request to be.

The Senate has now by unanimous consent proceeded to the consideration of House bill 10453. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to insert in lieu of the text of the House bill the Senate bill as now amended, with the understanding that the same may be further amended in Committee of the Whole, with the understanding that votes taken in the Committee of the Whole may be reserved for a separate vote when the bill passes finally to the Senate, and with the further reservation that the bill when it comes into the Senate may be amended.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I do not desire to object to unanimous consent to take up the House bill, but I do object to the latter part of the request for unanimous consent—to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill, striking out all after the enacting clause in the House bill and inserting in lieu thereof the Senate bill as amended.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Florida that this can be done by motion, but if done by motion it would cut out the separate vote in the Senate upon the amendments that have been made. As I understand the proposition of the Senator from Iowa, when we get into the Senate there will then be an opportunity for a vote upon the Senate bill as amended as against the House bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. The purpose of asking unanimous consent rather than making the motion is to open the door to the reservations to which I referred. It is evident that we must in some way act upon the House bill if the subject is to go to conference.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit a suggestion?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The point is whether or not at some stage in the parliamentary procedure we may express our preference for the House bill over the Senate bill, and the Senator from Florida is only interested in having an opportunity to express his vote upon the House bill as against the Senate bill.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is really my position, I will state to the Senator from Iowa. I desire to have an opportunity to express my preference between the House bill and the Senate bill. If we take up the House bill and substitute the Senate bill by unanimous consent, the question arises with me whether I would have that opportunity in subsequent proceedings.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator from Iowa whether it would be possible to offer the House bill as a substitute for the Senate bill after the unanimous consent has been granted?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not a good enough parliamentarian to answer the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair supposed that the Senator from Iowa was trying to help out on the matter. If a motion be made to insert in lieu of the House bill the Senate bill as now amended, and if it be not amended further and comes into the Senate and is agreed to, that is the end of the discussion, because it is simply a motion to strike out and insert. But the Chair understands that the Senator from Iowa is trying to reserve separate votes for Senators on amendments that have been agreed to and also to reserve the right to introduce amendments in the Senate.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LENROOT. After the amendments have been acted upon separately, will not the question then be on the adoption of the amendment in the form of a substitute in the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ordinarily the question would be on concurring to the amendment as made in Committee of the Whole——

Mr. LENROOT. So that will give the opportunity which the Senator seeks?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Which if agreed upon would preclude a separate vote on the amendments that have been made to the Senate bill. The Senator from Iowa is trying to make it easy for Senators, as he ought to do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to give the fullest opportunity for expression, not only on the part of the Senate as a whole, but on the part of every Senator. I assumed that the proposal I made would give every opportunity of that sort.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I want to get the matter clear in my mind. What difficulty is in the way of going on and perfecting the Senate bill up to its completion in the Senate and then substituting it for the House bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. The difficulty is that it can not be done under our rules. The House bill, which must be finally acted upon in order to go into conference, must be taken up in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It must go through the same procedure as the Senate bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes. It is the understanding that the Senator from Florida objects?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa. If we agree to take it up by unanimous consent in the way suggested by the Senator, will we then have a right when we get the substitute into the Senate to have a vote in the Senate on the entire substitute?

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall be very glad to add that to the unanimous-consent request. I do not want to prevent that vote by any arrangement that is made.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I withdraw any objection with the understanding that we can have a vote on the entire substitute in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. At the proper time I wish to offer an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause of the bill and providing for a continuance of Government operation for a period named in my amendment. I do not want to be precluded from an opportunity to offer that amendment, and I inquire whether I should offer it now before the unanimous consent is given or whether I may offer it afterwards, either in Committee of the Whole or after the bill has reached its last stage of amendment in the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumes it is simply an amendment proposing to amend what, for my purposes, I call the Cummins bill. The Senator can offer it in Committee of the Whole or in the Senate. He can offer it in Committee of the Whole, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I can offer it in the Senate, I shall defer offering it until all amendments to the bill have been passed upon. Then I would move to strike out all of the bill, as amended, after the enacting clause and propose the amendment or the substitute, or whatever it may be.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not certain how far the unanimous-consent agreement of the Senator from Iowa goes. Ordinarily, if the amendment made in the Committee of the Whole is concurred in, the Senator from Wisconsin can not do that in the Senate; it would be too late.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to ask if the right to offer a substitute is not a right that exists in the Senate and does not require any unanimous consent? Can not a substitute be offered for the entire bill? That has been the practice, I think.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I was doing.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not know the Senator was making a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LODGE. I tried to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thought the Senator made a statement.

Mr. LODGE. No; I tried to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been the invariable practice since I have been here, and I think it is correct. We are getting into a parliamentary situation where without unanimous consent there would be only one question, and that would be to concur in the amendment as made in Committee of the Whole. Right there the Senator from Wisconsin can offer his amendment. If he fails to offer it then without the unanimous consent, and the Senate concurs in the amendment made in Committee of the Whole, it is an end of the controversy.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to offer my amendment, I call it; perhaps it might more properly be called a substitute. It is to strike out all after the enacting clause and provide that the roads shall continue under Government operation for a period of time fixed in the amendment. I prefer to offer that after all the amendments have been made to the bill, whether it be the House bill or the Senate bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will be in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As well in the Committee of the Whole as in the Senate, and to preserve that right I am going to object to unanimous consent to anything, for I know I have that right in the Senate.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to my colleague that the right would not be preserved by this arrangement. The motion would be to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, and the question then would be in the Senate on concurring in the substitute. I think the ruling of the Chair would be the same in either case.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that he include the matter in his unanimous-consent agreement, so as to obviate any doubt that when we get into the Senate a substitute may be offered striking out all after the enacting clause, and so forth.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is entirely agreeable to me. I do not want to preclude any parliamentary right which any Member of the Senate has.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not desire to be captious, but I want to offer my proposition after the Senate has gotten through with the legislative consideration of either the House bill or the Senate bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. It is agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement, does any Senator desire a separate vote?

Mr. MOSES. In Committee of the Whole I reserved a separate vote upon the proposition whereby the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to add a new section to the bill to be known as section 44½, was rejected. I ask for a separate vote upon that amendment. Prior to that vote I ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. The amendment in the bill would be section 50, at the end of the bill, just preceding the last section, and reads as follows:

SEC. 50—

In the printed copy it is section 44½—

It shall be unlawful for any United States carrier or carriers by rail or water to participate in the continuous or interrupted transportation of passengers or property from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, or from or to any place in the United States to or from a foreign country, where the through rate or through charge by combination of rates for such transportation, whether by rebate, by absorption of storage charges, wharfage charges, or any other charge or charges, or in any manner whatsoever is less than the through rate or through charge by combination of rates between such points on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Shipping Board or the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Shipping Board, applying at such time for like transportation by United States carriers by rail or water or by rail and water.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, this amendment was adopted when the attendance in the Chamber was very thin, and upon studying the RECORD to ascertain the reasons actuating the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] in offering the amendment, I find a reference to the hearings held before the House committee on which certain unfair or secret practices, rebates, or other discriminatory form of rates were alleged to have been made use of to the detriment, as the Senator believed, of the interests of certain shippers in his section of the country. Upon reference to that portion of the hearings which the Senator cited, I discover that the complaining witness before the committee did not point out an amendment to this bill in this form as a remedy for the evil of which he complained. He said that the foreign carriers against whom he made the complaint would continue the methods of which he complained "until Congress shall have again restored the status quo of American coastwise protection." So, in offering the amendment as a remedy for the conditions complained of a general proposal has been made which probably would take care of the difficulty which the Senator from Washington has in mind, but which, in addition, would most certainly work incalculable harm to a very great section of the country.

It is inevitable, Mr. President, possibly unhappy, that discussion of this question must be approached from the angle of the section of the country which a Senator happens to represent; certainly the complaint which the Senator from Washington has presented has been made from that angle; and in opposing the amendment which has been agreed to, I shall necessarily have to approach the subject from a similar angle, namely, that of the New England interests which are affected by the amendment.

New England, Mr. President, has a peculiar geographical situation, being located in the extreme northeastern portion of the country, and it has also a peculiar economic situation. It has no great natural resources except a diminishing supply of lumber. It is far removed from all of the sources of supply for raw material for manufacturing purposes; and yet, in spite of those handicaps, the enterprise and the initiative and energy of the people of New England have been such that there has been built up there a great manufacturing community with a more highly diversified industry than can be found within similar territorial limits anywhere in the United States.

That development has been made possible, as I have said, by the enterprise, the ingenuity, and the energy of the people. With those attributes has gone a thrift from which have resulted great savings, which have flowed out from New England into all sections of the country to help in the promotion of industrial and other enterprises.

This development, Mr. President, has been made possible in another sense by reason of certain conditions affecting transportation. So long as New England has to bring cotton from Alabama, hides from Texas, wool from Wyoming, and coal and iron and steel from Pennsylvania into New England and there transform them into the shoes and textiles and fine machine tools and other products and then ship them back throughout all the country, and at the same time is compelled to bring the larger portion of its food materials from other portions of the country, it is evident that no such development as has taken place in New England could have been possible except by taking advantage of every avenue of transportation.

It so happens, Mr. President, that in the development of the New England industries what are known as the Canadian differentials have grown up and have been made use of. Those Canadian differentials consist in a lower rate for the combined charge of transit on the route from the Northwest to the eastern seaboard. The route is longer, since it runs, in no small measure, over Canadian territory; there is more delay; the service is not so valuable; and necessarily its cost has been made lower. Because of that New England and the eastern seaboard generally, by making use of the Canadian differentials, have brought into that section of the country grain, flour, beef, and many of the articles entering into the manufacturing enterprises of the section. In return it has shipped to other sections of the country, over the same route and by use of the same differential rates, its finished products, to the benefit both of New England and of sections far removed.

Mr. President, there is a physical as well as an economic and financial reason for this. New England has but one railroad outlet or inlet for its western business; the Hoosac Tunnel is the neck of the bottle through which everything will have to come into New England and through which everything will have to pass out of New England. If we are not permitted to make use of the Canadian roads all freight will have to be brought into Rotterdam Junction, which is now a sink hole of freight cars. It will there have to be sorted out, because the bore of the Hoosac Tunnel is such that large cars can not pass through it, which will necessitate a still longer and more expensive detour. Further than that, Mr. President, hardly a standard road in the country can now take care of the freight committed to it, and if the Canadian roads are shut out from the carriage of freight either coming into the East or going from the East to the West there will be a still further clogging of transportation over the American lines.

I am well aware that the object sought by the Senator from Washington is to do away with secret and unfair methods in railroad competition; but the amendment as it is drawn does far more than that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MOSES. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator knows that I have suggested some amendments which, in my judgment, confine the operation of the amendment to those things and, while the Senator has not stated to me that that was entirely satisfactory, I should like to know what serious objection the Senator has to the amendments which I have suggested?

As I told the Senator, all that I want to do is to get at—not the open, public, and regular rates of the Canadian roads, be they low or high—if they are lower, very well; but what I am trying to get at are secret rebates and unfair methods. So I suggest——

Mr. MOSES. I was just on the verge of touching that very question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator just said that the amendment as drawn went further than that.

Mr. MOSES. I think it does.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to suggest to the Senate in this connection that the amendments I have suggested to the Senator from New Hampshire take care of that situation.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator undoubtedly will have plenty of time to do that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was making the suggestion in the interest of saving time. If the Senator will not agree to the amendment as I propose to amend it, of course that is his perfect right, but I thought I might save some of the time of the Senate.

Mr. MOSES. I thought that I had made it clear to the Senator in the course of our conversation that the amendments he suggested did not remove the objections which I had to the amendment as it has been drawn. I further understood that the amendment which I had suggested to him did not meet with his approval. Therefore, Mr. President, we had come to an impasse, and necessarily it was up to somebody to explain the situation to the Senate.

As I was about to say, the Senator's chief objection, as I discovered in conversation with him, was not that the practice of using the Canadian differentials had been of benefit to somebody that he wished to deprive of that benefit, but that somewhere, along entirely different lines from those which I have been describing and with which I am most familiar, there had grown up some unfair secret practices with which he wished to do away.

The amendment which we have adopted seems to me to go much further than that and to imply a detrimental result to many sections of the country, for it is not only New England that will be affected by the loss of these differentials; it is not only the port of Boston and the port of Portland; but it is the port of New York, the port of Philadelphia, and the port of Baltimore to which the Canadian differentials equally apply.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield further to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MOSES. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely wish to make a suggestion to the Senator, in the interest of saving time and of getting the bill passed and in the hope of having this proposition go to conference, in order that it may be considered by the conferees and there either framed in the way they think is proper and adopted or finally rejected. I frankly told the Senator yesterday afternoon that I was not familiar enough with the technical phrases and details of the interstate-commerce acts to appreciate fully what his amendment really provided.

Mr. MOSES. And, Mr. President, I made an equal confession of ignorance to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes. I think that the language I used in the amendment is perfectly plain, but I wish to say to the Senator that I am willing to accept his amendment, if that will end the discussion, and let the matter go to conference and be considered by the conferees.

Mr. MOSES. That is absolutely satisfactory to me.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well.

Mr. MOSES. And, if in order, I offer the amendment as a substitute.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator did not propose it as a substitute when he spoke to me.

Mr. MOSES. It merely puts a single phrase into the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is that the phrase the Senator showed to me yesterday afternoon?

Mr. MOSES. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well.

Mr. MOSES. I ask that it be read.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am perfectly willing to allow it to go in that way.

Mr. MOSES. I will say to the Senator that in order to simplify the drawing of the amendment I prepared it in the form of an amendment to strike out and insert, because it would require much more copious language to do it otherwise.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well, if it accomplishes the same purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington it is proposed to strike out the words "to participate in" in the second line of the amendment as printed, and to insert "except as may be provided by tariffs lawfully published and filed."

Mr. MOSES. No; nothing is stricken out, but after the word "water" a comma is inserted and the words written in are then to be inserted. The amendment is to strike out and insert. I did that in order to save verbiage in drawing the amendment; but the only change that is made is the insertion of one phase, as will be shown by following the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Secretary understands the situation, although the amendment did strike out the words indicated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "water," it is proposed to insert the words "except as may be provided by tariffs lawfully published and filed."

Mr. MOSES. That is the only change made in the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. MOSES. I yield the floor.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator a question. The amendment which he proposed to insert—"except as may be provided by tariffs lawfully published and filed"—I take it will apply only to tariffs that are required to be filed by the Interstate Commerce Commission and therefore will apply only to tariffs filed by United States railroads. If that is true, I think that the amendment, so far as New England is concerned, makes it very much worse for that section of the country than it was before.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I certainly had no intention of producing that result for New England, and I hope I have been well advised in the framing of the amendment. I will add that I have taken counsel with former members of the public-service commissions of New Hampshire and of Massachusetts and with a present member of the Interstate Commerce Commission who was once a member of the Massachusetts Public Service Commission, and with traffic men in New England, whose opinions are unanimous that the amendment which I propose brings out into the open every tariff under which shipments will be made, does away with the secret and unfair practices which are complained of, but still enables the differentials as I have described them to be made use of.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, if the amendment is coming to a vote, I should like to explain to the Senate what it means.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before the Senator begins, may I ask him a question? Does the proposed amendment meet the wishes of the Senator from Washington without producing the result suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. KELLOGG. I should not like to say without giving it careful examination, which I have not done; but I can state in a moment just what these rates are.

There exist from all the eastern country certain differential rates to the western country. When I say "differential rates," I mean rates which are less than the standard direct railroad rate. For instance, the Pennsylvania and the New York Central have a direct railroad rate to the West. There is a differential by way of the railroads and the Great Lakes. There is a differential by way of the ocean and Norfolk and Newport News and Charleston, going to the West. There is a differential by way of the Lakes and the Canadian railroads and back into the United States, and there is a differential by way of the Canadian roads into the West. Those differentials have been in existence for years, and have been arranged by the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in their judgment, to equalize the difference in the length of haul, the slowness of the operation, and so forth.

All through the West, clear to the Pacific coast, those differentials operate; and it is not alone New England that is concerned but it is all the northern part of the country, and, in fact, the traffic coming up from the southern ports having those same differentials. This would cut out all Canadian roads participating in that either by rail alone or by rail and water.

Now, I say, the Interstate Commerce Commission has power over that whole subject. These differentials have been continued by the Railroad Administration and by the Interstate Commerce Commission. There have been many hearings as to the reasonableness of those differentials, and they have been fixed by the commission. Years ago they deprived the Canadian roads of their differentials on passenger business, but on freight which may go by a slower route, a water route, they permitted those differentials, and the people have had the benefit of them, not alone of New England but clear to the Pacific coast. It seems to me that the commission has full power to prevent a Canadian road which ships with an American road from getting a differential, either by rebate or in any other way, and I think this is an extremely dangerous thing. Why not legislate out the differentials by lake and rail in the United States?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the status of the bill? Is it before the Senate or before the Committee of the Whole? Are we in the Committee of the Whole or in the Senate?

Mr. KELLOGG. In the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). The present occupant of the chair was under the impression that the bill was in the Senate, but, on consulting with the officers at the desk, there seems to be some doubt about it.

Mr. McCORMICK. There seems to be some confusion at the desk.

Mr. LODGE. The Chair certainly announced that we were in the Senate, and this amendment was reserved.

Mr. McCORMICK. I asked just to get a ruling. The bill is in the Senate, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is disposed to rule that the bill is in the Senate, although the record seems to be incomplete in that regard.

Mr. LODGE. It is a rather important matter. I think we had better find out. I sat here and heard the Vice President say, as I thought, that we were in the Senate, and he made some statement about agreeing to amendments and took up a reserved amendment. This amendment could not have been taken up unless we were in the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the Secretary undoubtedly read the title of the bill as presented to the Senate, reporting it from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I asked for a unanimous-consent agreement, and part of that agreement was that there should be a right of reservation as though the Senate bill had gone on into the Senate for passage, and this amendment had been reserved under the Senate bill.

Mr. LODGE. But the fact is we are in the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. We are in the Senate, and this amendment has a right to a separate vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair rules that the bill is now in the Senate. The only doubt that was in the mind of the present occupant of the chair is that the records do not seem to show that the Vice President formally announced that the bill is now in the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. He announced the unanimous-consent agreement which took it into the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that it is not the purpose of this amendment to strike at these open, regular, and generally recognized rates, whether differentials or otherwise. It is the purpose of this amendment to strike at secret practices by which they arrange with shippers ostensibly to ship by the regular rate, but, in order to get the shipments, there is an understanding that they will remit to the shipper a part of the rate, or that they will absorb wharfage charges that he otherwise would have to pay; that they will take care of these and charges like them. That is what the amendment is intended to strike at.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. MOSES. On the very point the Senator speaks of, this absorption of wharfage and lighterage charges, if the proposal of the Senator is to obtain with reference to rates in this country, a thousand rates will be affected by it, because the absorption of wharfage and lighterage and storage charges is one of the most common practices in rate making in this country. Every pound of freight going into the city of New York, for instance, has to be lightered, and the lighterage charge is included in the published tariffs. It can not be separated out. It is absorbed. It is there, just like these other absorptions.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator is not getting at the point. He is leading the Senate off, not intentionally, but as a matter of fact he is.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I think I understand the point of the Senator from Washington. The trouble about it, however, is that the amendment as drawn, in my opinion, is not confined to differentials produced by secret rebates or absorption of charges at all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me read to the Senator the provision that I suggested to the Senator yesterday, which I thought was better than the language that he suggested.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am familiar with that provision, and I still do not think that provision removes the objection to this amendment, because this amendment prohibits any such differential by combination of rates for transportation, whether it be by secret rebates, by wharfage charges, or other charges absorbed in any manner whatever, and striking out——

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. KELLOGG. Wait a moment; I am coming to that—and striking out the words "in any manner whatsoever" still leaves the combination of rates by tariff.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, wait, now; let me make a suggestion to the Senator. I not only strike out the words "in any manner whatsoever," but I insert "or by any other secret or unfair means or methods." Those are the words that I suggested to the Senator from New Hampshire that we insert in place of the words stricken out.

Now, I am not sufficiently acquainted with the technicalities of the law in this matter to argue with the Senator from Minnesota. He is far better able to determine what the language should be than I am. I am assured by those who do know that this language simply covers what I desire to get at. The Senator expresses doubt. The suggestion of the Senator may be right; but, if that is correct, it seems to me that it can be taken care of in conference, because the conferees will know what we are trying to get at, and they will put in the language to cover it. I have accepted the language of the Senator from New Hampshire, and he knew what my position was, and the expert to whom he has referred this matter evidently was informed as to what I wanted to get at, and that expert suggests no other language except this. Now, it seems to me that that ought to warrant the Senate, at any rate, in order to meet the practices that we all condemn, in letting this matter go to conference in that shape, so that it can be worked out.

That is the way it seems to me.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that if the Canadian roads in connection with American rail lines or American water lines establish tariffs and then secretly make rebates to shippers in order to get a greater differential than the tariffs provide for it should be prohibited by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I have no objection to legislation which will prohibit it; but I am not a tariff expert by any manner of means.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Neither am I.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. Has not the Interstate Commerce Commission the power now to do that?

Mr. KELLOGG. I think it has absolute power.

Mr. NELSON. It has absolute power to do what the Senator from Washington proposes to do.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think my colleague is correct.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, they claim themselves that they have not the power. They have no jurisdiction over foreign lines.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, in view of the evident confusion about the situation and the mixed deductions which are being drawn from the various forms of language employed in seeking to remedy this evil, I want to simplify the matter in one degree, at any rate, by withdrawing my substitute and leaving the vote to be taken separately in the Senate upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington. Following that vote we may then possibly know how to proceed, and possibly obtain a form of language which is suitable, if it is still open to that procedure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire will be withdrawn.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely desire to say a single word about this amendment. It is very vital to New England, but it is by no means a local question. These differentials affect Chicago, they affect Minnesota, they affect Wisconsin, they affect the port of New York, the port of Baltimore, and the port of Philadelphia. It is a very, very important matter, and I do not think that we ought to take the risk of putting in any such sweeping legislation with an amendment about which there is so much difference of opinion as we have already heard. I trust that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that this is a very important matter. If the doctors such as we have—and we know they are of the best—disagree as to what is going to happen to the patient, I think we had better go slowly. If the Senator from New Hampshire expects that after the Jones amendment is adopted he can then amend it, I think he will find himself mistaken. The only thing to do is to vote down the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. MOSES. Oh, no, Mr. President; my motion was that the amendment in its present form on a vote would not be agreed to, and then it might be possible, before the thing ended, to get some form of amendment adopted, if Senators desire it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I want to state that if this amendment remains in the railroad bill, it will upset the differential rate for New York and New England that has been in existence for 40 years. Not only that, but it means that there will be a call from every commercial interest in New England to defeat this bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] has withdrawn his amendment, I want to offer an amendment to the amendment so as to make my position perfectly clear as to what it is desired to meet. I think the amendment that I have proposed will take away any basis for the fears of New England. I do not want to injure New England, but I do want to protect American interests from the fraudulent, deceitful, secret, and unfair methods of foreign competitors. I want to protect American interests, and when I say that I mean protect New England interests. I do not think that New England wants to ask upon the floor of the Senate that the Senate shall vote down a proposition to protect the American people, New England as well as other sections of the country, from secret and unfair methods that are condemned and denounced by legislation in this country. Surely the prosperity of New England does not depend upon the secret, unfair methods of foreign carriers. I do not believe that New England desires, by our legislation, to favor Canadian railroads and Canadian interests in preference to American railroads and American interests, and all in the world that this amendment seeks to do is to prevent the secret and unfair methods of the Canadian railroads. It will not, in my judgment, affect injuriously the industries and interests of New England.

So I want to offer an amendment that will make my intention perfectly clear, and that is, by inserting, in line 10 of the printed amendment, after the word "other," the word "such," so that it will read "or any other such charge," and so forth; and after the word "or," in the same line, strike out the words "in any manner whatsoever" and insert the words "by any other secret or unfair means or methods"; and after the word "is," in line 11, insert the word "made." I think that ought to go in there, and I think that will make clear what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] had in mind.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, what through rate or through charge does the Senator think would be referred to, then, the through charge of the foreign railroad and the domestic railroad or the through charge of the all-American railroad?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of the foreign and the American.

Mr. LENROOT. The language is:

> Through charge by combination of rates between such points on file with or approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let the Senator read the first part, "on file with or approved by." The first part of it reads:

> It shall be unlawful for any United States carrier or carriers by rail or water to participate in the continuous or interrupted transportation of passengers or property.

This is from one place in the United States through a foreign country.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. "To any other place in the United States." That must be by both American and foreign railroad or carrier. It can not be otherwise. It continues:

> Or from or to any place in the United States to or from a foreign country.

That can be only over American and foreign railroads. So the only rates that are affected are rates over American and foreign carriers.

Mr. LENROOT. No; they are rates between two points in the United States.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Over foreign and American carriers.

Mr. LENROOT. No.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It could not be any other sort of a rate under the language.

Mr. LENROOT. That is my point, less than the through rate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; "where the through rate or through charge by combination of rates for such transportation," which must be over different carriers, American and foreign, "whether by rebate, by absorption of storage charges, wharfage charges, or any other charge or charges," reading it as I propose to amend it, "or by any other secret or unfair means or methods, is made less than the through rate or through charge by combination of rates between such points on file with or approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission."

Mr. LENROOT. Now, let us see. Here are two points in the United States connected by an American railroad. They are also connected by a railroad going through foreign territory, and there are rates on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission upon American railroads connecting those two points, and under the language of the amendment, if the rate is less than the through rate or charge, by reason of these means, on the all-American railroad, it becomes unlawful.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am informed, although I do not know whether it is true or not, that there are through rates filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission by, for instance, the Canadian Pacific Road.

Mr. LENROOT. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Those are the combination rates that are referred to, and those are the only charges that are referred to here, and the only thing that is made unlawful, the combination of charges over the foreign line and the American line between the two American points. We are having nothing to do with the through rates on American lines between American points.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator assumes, then, that there can be no shipment from a point in the United States through Canadian territory and back into the United States, unless the rate is filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I do not think that is true.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know whether it is true or not. But there is the purpose that I want to meet. Of course, we all differ, and we have experts differing about these things. I take it the conference committee will work it out, or try to work it out, to meet what we want to meet. It is simply a question as to whether we want American roads and American interests to be protected against the secret and unfair methods of other countries. No section of this great country should make its prosperity depend upon the unfair methods of foreign roads and which are prohibited on our own roads. I offer the amendment which I propose, and I am willing to come to a vote and let the Senate pass upon it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me a question, I do not understand that there is any complaint that these differentials that are spoken of have been secret.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No.

Mr. NELSON. They have been open and above board?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Without doubt.

Mr. NELSON. And there has not been any practice such as you referred to——

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. NELSON. About secret rates on these Canadian differentials.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if there are no secret practices, then this amendment will not hurt anybody. But there are secret methods and secret practices with reference to shipments to our country. Whether that is true up in New England or not, there is not any question about it in our part of the country.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I want to say just a few words about this question. We in the northwest, in the great grain States, the great dairy States, have derived great benefits and great advantages from this system of transportation. The shipments of our products have been over American lines connecting with Canadian lines, and through them entering into American lines in New England and the East. That has been of immense value to our producers.

The way I look at it is that these through roads, that is, the transcontinental roads, want to wipe out this differential, and deprive us of what we have been working for and earned in one way or another. I think it is entirely unjust both to the great northwest and to New England.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if we sought to do what the Senator says, I would agree with him; but we do not seek anything of the kind.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will ask the Senator from Washington if it is not a fact that by some arrangement made by the Canadian Pacific for through shipments, the tonnage between Alaskan ports and Seattle was not entirely destroyed because they could not compete with the secret rate that was made over the Canadian Pacific?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I know that they had to take steamers off. I looked up the question a year or two ago, and there was a very serious condition which existed. They were building up ports on the British side of the line by these secret differentials and rates. I do not know just what they were.

Mr. JONES of Washington. For instance, there is one rate of $7.50 a ton for transportation, and then a rebate of $3 down to $4.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, those are exactly the conditions which were brought out in the testimony before the committee by the complaining witness whom the Senator from Washington adduced, and his remedy, as stated in his testimony before the committee, was the restoration of the status quo of American coastwise protection, not to strike down differentials.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that is a suggestion with reference to the particular shipping, the water transportation. The Senator has not read all of the testimony.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I should like to read, for the benefit of the Senator from Washington, an extract from a letter sent me by one familiar with the interstate-commerce law and connected with that department, in which he points out that not only are existing rights of interstate commerce observed but they are extended by the Cummins bill, so called, to meet the situation which the Senator from Washington describes. This letter gives the history of these differential rates, and proves conclusively how injurious the amendment presented by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] will be to the northeastern part of this country.

A part of the language of the letter referred to is as follows:

"For more than 40 years a somewhat lower scale of rates has prevailed from New England to so-called 'differential territory' in the West via the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific routes. The traffic is hauled from a point of origin in this country through Canada to a point of destination which is also in this country. These lower rates apply only on westbound business, and they are in effect, I believe, from New York City as well as from New England territory. They resulted from the rate wars which took place many years ago, and the Grand Trunk Railroad, I believe, was the responsible party. Having a long and circuitous route, it could only share in the western traffic by offering lower rates, and this it persisted in doing. Finally, the trunk lines agreed that it should have a fixed differential below the standard trunk-line rates."

"The whole situation is described and explained on pages 2 to 4 of the memorial which the six New England commissions sent to Director General McAdoo on August 1, 1918, and in Appendix B of this memorial, which I am sending you herewith, you will also find an account of the origin of these differential rates.

"The companies like the New York Central and the Pennsylvania, controlling the standard trunk-line routes to the West, have, of course, always disliked these differentials and have persistently tried to get rid of them. The New England shippers, however, and, I think, the New England railroad lines also, have with equal persistence endeavored to preserve them, and so far they have been successful. Early in the period of Federal control, as you will see from the memorial, an effort was made to take out these differentials, but the vigorous protest which it aroused led the Railroad Administration to abandon the idea. It is now apparently proposed to accomplish the same object through the medium of the United States Senate.

"These differential routes have been valuable to New England shippers, not only because they afforded somewhat lower rates on western traffic but also because they have provided a means of competition in service with the standard trunk lines. In times of heavy traffic the standard lines have frequently been congested, and the opportunity to ship over the more circuitous routes has been of great value to New England. I am confident that no move could possibly be made which would be more unpopular with the commercial interests of that section than the amendment which Senator JONES proposes.

"I may also say that the provisions of the act to regulate commerce in its present form (see sec. 1) apply to the transportation of persons or property, and so forth, 'from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States,' and I do not understand that these words are changed by the Cummins bill. Furthermore, the Cummins bill, in sections 43 and 44, gives the commission the power to fix minimum as well as maximum rates. At present we have power only to fix maximum rates. These provisions, if enacted, would, I assume, give us power upon proper complaint to raise minimum rates applying from a point in the United States through Canada to another point in the United States, if it should be found that the existing rates were unreasonably low or prejudicial. There would, therefore, seem to be no occasion for Senator JONES's amendment if any such rates exist which can not now be justified."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Suppose the Interstate Commerce Commission had brought to their attention that there are these secret rebates, an absorption of wharfage, and so on. How will they prevent the Canadian roads from doing it? What jurisdiction have they over the Canadian roads?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not suppose they have any.

Mr. JONES of Washington. None at all.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. They have jurisdiction over rates.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is exactly what this amendment is intended to meet.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. At the same time that you attempt to remove the secret rates of Canadian roads you do away with the preferential rates that the New England section of the country has had for 40 years.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If they persist, of course, in going on with these secret rates.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. You do not say these preferential rates are secret?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; the preferential rates are not secret.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. You are not seeking to wipe out the present preferential rates?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; not at all. It is these secret practices I am trying to prevent, and I believe that is an effective way to do it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. At the same time your amendment would exclude the present preferential rates, which have been in existence for 40 years.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think it does not.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am sorry I did not have occasion to look this up; but a year or two ago I addressed myself to the subject with reference to the northwest halibut fisheries.

As I recall the situation, there was an American fleet engaged up there in the halibut-fishing industry. The product, which was dried, was shipped by the American fleet to Seattle, Wash., and thence across the continent by the Northern Pacific on their transcontinental trains. By decrees in council of some kind—and we have not the power to enact legislation overnight like they have there—they granted to vessels which were registered under Canadian or British registry at Prince Rupert rights and privileges which the American steamers could not have. The result was that many American steamers gave up their American registry and went over and registered at Prince Rupert to take advantage of the arrangements there, terminal facilities as well as rates, which were given to them to land and unload their products at Prince Rupert that American steamers going by way of Seattle could not get. The result was that our ships left us and our freight went over the Canadian railroads instead of our American roads.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator is correct. All we ask is to be given a chance to correct this. I do not wish to take any further time of the Senate on the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to remind the Senators, and particularly the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], that the Senator from New Hampshire is exercising his right under the unanimous-consent agreement to call for a separate vote upon the amendment or that portion of the bill which constitutes the amendment originally proposed by the Senator from Washington. The Senator from Washington now proposes, as the Chair understands it, to amend the text of his original amendment by way of offering, perhaps, what might be called a perfecting amendment. The Chair understands that would require unanimous consent, as it will change the question as to which the reservation was made.

Mr. MOSES. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Washington perfecting the text of the bill to that effect? The Chair hears none. It is agreed to. Does the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] desire a separate vote?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand the Senator from New Hampshire withdrew his perfecting amendment?

Mr. MOSES. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. The perfecting amendment has been adopted. The vote is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator from Massachusetts oppose the perfecting amendment which I proposed?

Mr. LODGE. I do not care about that. I propose to vote against it, anyhow.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair endeavored to make it clear that by unanimous consent the perfecting amendments suggested by the Senator from Washington were agreed to. The question recurs upon the amendment as perfected, for which a separate vote was requested.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On that I request the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I am paired with him during his absence. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I see he is not in the Chamber at this time and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], who is absent from the Chamber at this time. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement concerning my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I am informed by his colleague that if he were present he would vote "nay." As a consequence I feel at liberty to vote the same way. I vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. KING. On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and let my vote stand.

Mr. DIAL (after having voted in the negative). I am paired on this vote with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to report the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 52, as follows:

YEAS—11.

Chamberlain	Hitchcock	La Follette	Ransdell
Fletcher	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Thomas
Gronna	Kirby	Poindexter

NAYS—52.

Ball	France	Lenroot	Sheppard
Bankhead	Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Simmons
Brandegee	Gay	McCormick	Smith, Ga.
Calder	Gerry	McKellar	Smoot
Capper	Hale	McLean	Spencer
Colt	Harris	Moses	Sterling
Cummins	Harrison	Myers	Townsend
Curtis	Henderson	Nelson	Trammell
Dial	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Kellogg	Nugent	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	Kenyon	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	Keyes	Pomerene	Williams
Fernald	Knox	Robinson	Wolcott

NOT VOTING—32.

Ashurst	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Kendrick	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Borah	King	Phelan	Stanley
Culberson	McCumber	Pittman	Sutherland
Fall	McNary	Reed	Swanson
Gore	Newberry	Sherman	Underwood
Harding	Overman	Shields	Warren
Johnson, Calif.	Owen	Smith, Ariz.	Watson

So the amendment of Mr. JONES of Washington was not concurred in.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the other day I offered an amendment which had the approval of the chairman of the committee and was agreed to in Committee of the Whole. The amendment related to the nomination of directors by the employees in the event of the reincorporation of a company. In addition to the reincorporation of companies under the act, companies which have consolidated their lines, the act also provides for the incorporation of new companies under the provisions of the act, and the same language in regard to the nomination of directors by the classified employees of the company is used as in the case of reincorporated companies. In order that the bill may be consistent throughout in this particular the amendment should be made to apply to cases of that kind as well as cases of reincorporated companies. So I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, in line 13, after the word "offices" insert the following:

Provided, That all classified employees, without other distinction, shall have the right and opportunity, through proper notice, to participate in such nominations.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have no objection whatever to the amendment on its merits, but I do not want by acquiescence to appear to waive the order which we have made.

If this is in order, I have no objection to it; but I doubt whether an amendment of that kind can be offered at this time. I had hoped the Senator would offer it in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STERLING. I had supposed, Mr. President, that the bill, being in the Senate, was open to amendment. I made the discovery later that I had omitted offering the amendment in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the opinion of the Chair that amendments are now in order under the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CUMMINS. All I desire is that the amendment shall observe the unanimous-consent agreement which we have made. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I thought that ordinarily it was proper to offer such an amendment in the Senate, and surely under the agreement made by the Senator from Iowa the amendment is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, line 13, after the word "offices," and before the period, it is proposed to insert a comma and the following proviso:

Provided, That all classified employees, without other distinction, shall have the right and opportunity, through proper notice, to participate in such nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I desire to call up the amendment which I offered in Committee of the Whole and which I reserved for a separate vote in the Senate. The amendment has already been discussed and I have nothing to add to the comment I have already made on it. I ask that the yeas and nays may be had after the amendment shall have been read.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, very briefly I desire to present some reasons which address themselves to my mind why the Senate should not agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK].

The pending bill, in so far as it affects labor controversies, creates Government tribunals—a committee of wages and working conditions and three regional boards of adjustment—and empowers those Government agencies to determine all disputes between railroads and their employees which are not adjusted under existing provisions of law or otherwise adjusted. Under present conditions no tribunal exists with authority to determine controversies of this nature. It would therefore be manifestly improper, according to my view, to deprive the railroad employees of the right to strike for the purpose of enforcing their demands as to wages and working conditions. It is of very great importance that just tribunals be created to determine these questions.

Notwithstanding the criticisms that have been made in the Senate respecting the provisions of the bill touching this subject, I believe that we have provided for tribunals which can and will fairly determine such questions. It is the duty of the Government in exercise of its power to regulate commerce to provide for a settlement of such disputes. In view of the state of affairs that now exists, the importance of commerce to the life and the property of the Nation, it is unthinkable that a general railroad strike should occur, but before that can be prevented it is necessary that the Government provide for the fair and just settlement of controversies likely to result in strikes.

No one more than I is anxious to see labor fairly and liberally treated. I would be unwilling to restrict the right to strike unless the Government assumed and exercised the power to do justice to the employees. The provisions of the bill require that the wages paid railroad employees shall be just, fair, and reasonable; and in determining the justness, fairness, and reasonableness of the wages paid to the employees, the tribunals authorized to determine the controversies are required to take into consideration the scales of wages paid for similar kinds of work in other industries, the relation between wages and the cost of living, the hazards of the employment, the training and skill required, the degree of responsibility imposed, and the character and regularity of the employment. It may with propriety be observed that these directions to the Government tribunals created in the bill for the settlement of labor disputes are not exclusive of the consideration of other facts and circumstances relevant to the proper determination of the controversy.

It is not my purpose at this time to enter upon a prolonged discussion of the subject or to review in detail the composition of the boards for the settlement of these questions. It is sufficient to state the matter very briefly.

The committee of wages and working conditions is authorized to determine all disputes between railroads and their employees respecting wages and working conditions.

The regional boards of adjustment—there are three of them—are authorized to determine all complaints, grievances, disputes, and matters in controversy between the railroads and their employees arising out of ordinary railway operations, including personal grievances and matters of that character; so that we contemplate Government agencies, with powers defined by law, required by law to give consideration to all fair elements properly to be taken into consideration in determinng these matters. Having done that there can be no excuse or justification for the continuance of the preservation of the right to strike for the purpose of enforcing the demands which are to be determined by the tribunals provided in the bill. Once we recognize the right and power of the Government representing the public to determine these questions, we of necessity, unless we wish to belittle the Government and its agencies, must deny the right to strike for the purpose of enforcing the demands.

Some of the objections which I urge to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois may be stated very briefly. It is difficult for me to understand why the right to strike should be denied for a period of 60 days and recognized for all time thereafter. The principle of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois is analogous to some of the provisions of the Canadian law, but this distinction must not be forgotten: The Canadian law contemplates arbitration; it does not contemplate a quasi-judicial determination of the disputes between railroads and their employees; it does not contemplate decisions which are to be binding and enforceable against the parties to such controversies. The Senate bill, on the other hand, as I have already attempted to explain, does contemplate the creation of Government tribunals with power and authority to determine these questions under the rules and limitations provided in the law.

Another objection to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois is found in the fact that the preservation of the right to strike at the expiration of 60 days is necessarily an intimidation or a powerful influence upon the Government tribunal created for the purpose of settling the controversy. If controversies of this character are susceptible of determination by a tribunal—and in my opinion they are—then these decisions ought to be final, and there is no reason justifying the maintenance of the right to strike at the expiration of 60 days for the enforcement of the demands.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. I deeply regret that I did not know earlier the Senator from Arkansas was addressing himself to this subject. After nearly 20 years of service with the Senator from Arkansas I have learned to regard with the gravest consideration any proposition that he may seriously make. I served with him in the other House of Congress; it is my pleasure to serve with him in the Senate; and I know of few men in whose judgment I am inclined to place more implicit reliance.

I apprehend, however, that in this legislation the Senator from Arkansas has not differentiated with his characteristic analytical powers the difference between the right of man individually or collectively to exercise the privilege of working or abstaining from work which is guaranteed by the decision submitted to him, rendered by Justice Harlan in the case to which reference has been repeatedly made here, and overt acts designed to prevent the free and untrammeled movement of commerce.

I am with the Senator from Arkansas in any drastic legislation that shall prevent, that shall punish, any overt act upon the part of any employee of a railroad, or anybody else who attempts to prevent the freest and most untrammeled movement of commerce, and I am in favor of legislation that shall punish the individual who injures or impedes, hampers, embarrasses, or prevents in any way—that is, by any overt act—the movement of interstate commerce otherwise than by refusing to continue in the employment and the personal service of any individual or corporation. Provide in your bill that employees individually or collectively may refuse to continue in the employment of a master, whether that master may be an individual or a corporation, other than the Government, and then inflict upon the individual, whether employee or not, who by any affirmative act impedes or embarrasses the movement of commerce, any character of penalty, and go further than that, and provide that if this affirmative interference with the movement of interstate commerce is the result of a conspiracy additional penalties may be imposed, and I will heartily join with the Senator from Arkansas. But you must not fail to discriminate between the right of men, individually or collectively, to select other employers or to leave the employment of a master, and those indefensible and lawless acts, whether committed individually or collectively, by persons who attempt to prevent others from taking their places, or attempt to prevent the movement of interstate commerce by injury or violence to persons or property. My objection to this provision is that it has failed to make that simple and obvious distinction.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I thank my friend the Senator from Kentucky for his allusions to my ineffectual services in this body and in another body related to it.

Addressing myself briefly to his statement that I have failed to make the distinction which the courts make between willful interference with the physical operation of the facilities of interstate commerce and the right of employees of railroads to strike, I desire to say that the distinction is very clear in my own mind. There is no confusion concerning the subject. I was stating, just before the Senator from Kentucky entered the Chamber, that in my humble opinion Congress would not be justified in denying to railroad employees the right to strike until it had created a Government tribunal authorized and empowered and required to do justice to them in all their demands respecting wages and working conditions.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I do not like to interrupt the Senator at that point; but I wish, in order to make the difference between us clear, knowing that the Senator from Arkansas is an old-line, orthodox Democrat, to make this inquiry: Does the Senator from Arkansas believe that any board, however fair and just, can offer to any citizen an equivalent for the loss of an inalienable right, whether that right be exercised individually or collectively? And is there any difference, or can the Senator draw any difference, between the right of men to work or to cease from work because that right is asserted as an organization rather than as an individual?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. The Senator asks me one question, and then, while I am trying in perfect good faith to answer it, he diverts me and asks me another.

Mr. STANLEY. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ROBINSON. If I am permitted to do so, I should like to try to answer both of his questions.

I have said that the denial of the right of employees to interfere with or suspend interstate commerce through the medium of a strike for the purpose of enforcing their demands can only be justified by the creation of a Government tribunal with authority properly to determine their demands, but that, having created such a tribunal, there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States and nothing in the decision of any court with which I am familiar which denies to Congress the power to continue commerce, to keep open the channels by which commerce is maintained. This is absolutely indispensable to the life of the Nation.

The Senator from Kentucky, in his first statement and question addressed to me, referred to an opinion by Mr. Justice Harlan, and impliedly stated that that opinion justified him in the assertion that such a provision as is carried in this bill relating to labor controversies is unconstitutional. That was the plain inference of his statement. I presume the Senator from Kentucky referred to the case of Arthur against Oakes, reported in Sixty-third Federal Reporter.

Mr. STANLEY. That is true.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Kentucky states that is the case which he has in mind. In my opinion, Mr. President, the conclusion which he reaches and which he bases on that opinion is not justified. The opinion to which he referred related to existing law. It did not relate to such a measure as is under consideration. It did not deny the power of Congress to pass the pending provisions. It was based solely on the law as it then existed, the common law; and in proof of the correctness of my assertion I refer to a portion of the opinion which was read yesterday by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I know it is embarrassing to the Senator to be interrupted at this point, because I see that the Senator from Arkansas is drawing a conclusion that is strictly legitimate. To save time, however, and in order to reach the crux of this proposition, I am prepared to admit all that the Senator says. It was a statement of existing law. I am not questioning the constitutionality of this measure. I am questioning its propriety.

My position is this, and I interrupt the Senator at this time for the reason that he did not hear my argument on this question. My position is not that it is unconstitutional, but that it is unwise; that it is not practical; that it is foolish to attempt to give, by virtue of the concessions in this act, equivalent rights, or something just as good, to the employee for the thing which Justice Harlan says, under existing law, was his right, guaranteed by existing law and by the Constitution of the United States.

I make this interruption at this time to show the Senator from Arkansas my position on the matter.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I made the statement because the Senator referred to this court decision—to the opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan. The Senator is a lawyer of great experience, and he knows that an expression of opinion by a justice of a court as to the wisdom of a policy or of a law is not law. It is no more binding or compelling than the expression of an opinion by anyone else. So let me pursue my thought just a little bit further, because I think Senators who heard the first statement of the Senator from Kentucky will agree with me that the plain implication of his language was that the court had held that such a law as this was unconstitutional. The Senator disclaims that and I accept his disclaimer, but I want to read just a part of the opinion to emphasize my conclusion.

Mr. STANLEY rose.

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment, please. I am reading now from the opinion which the Senator quoted in the beginning as rendering this measure obnoxious.

The learned justice, Mr. Harlan, said:

> In the absence of legislation to the contrary, the right of one in the service of a quasi-public corporation to withdraw therefrom at such time as he sees fit, and the right of the managers of such a corporation to discharge an employee from service whenever they see fit must be deemed so far absolute that no court of equity will compel him, against his will, to remain in such service.

So it is apparent that the sole effect of the opinion to which the Senator has referred—and the last statement of the Senator from Kentucky is that he concurs in my conclusion—is that under the law as it then existed, in the absence of legislation to the contrary, the right to strike existed.

Why, who questions that? I have just said that so long as Congress fails to provide for a fair and just settlement of these controversies we must preserve that right; but when Congress, in the exercise of its power to regulate commerce, provides for the settlement of those disputes, then it is not only constitutional, but in my opinion it is wise and just, aye, necessary, to protect the people of the United States against the menace of a universal railroad strike.

This bill is a great advance, and in my humble judgment those who oppose any effort to exercise the power of the Government to settle in a quasi-judicial way differences of this character are making a great mistake, and, however sincere may be their intentions, they are not rendering a service to the millions of men who toil in the various industries in this Nation, the men who stand in the glow and gleam of forge and furnace, the men who go down into the bowels of the earth and work in the mines, the men who toil in the various spheres of activity, and all the millions who are dependent upon them. Can not the public be trusted to settle controversies between the railroads and their employees? Must the people of the United States live forever under the menace of having commerce destroyed and having thousands, aye, millions, made to suffer by reason of the failure of the Government to exercise its power and fairly settle these disputes? Those who want to serve labor, who want to do something for this generation and the generations to come, in my judgment had better address their efforts to securing a fair and just means which will not only protect the men who work as employees of railroads, but also protect the far larger number of people whose lives and whose comforts are dependent upon the operation of railroads. That is the duty of government.

With all the earnestness of my soul I assert that if this bill contains nothing else if it guarantees to these railroad employees fair, just, and reasonable wages and working conditions, and requires that in determining their demands there shall be taken into consideration the scales of wages paid in similar industries, the relation of wages to the cost of living, the hazards of the employment, the training and skill required, the degree of responsibility exercised, labor will be greatly benefited and in no way imperiled. The real enemy of labor is not the man who advocates the determination of his rights by public authority according to legal standards. It is he who urges the maintenance of arbitrary, antiquated, and unreasonable remedies, remedies which if applied would injure or destroy the public.

The trouble with the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] is that it accomplishes little. It recognizes the right and power of the Government to decide labor controversies. Then it imposes an obligation to respect those decisions for a short time. It is not analogous, as I have shown, to the Canadian law. The Canadian law is arbitration. This is quasi-judicial determination.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make a suggestion?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Kentucky has referred to the impropriety of legislation of this kind, but the very amendment of the Senator from Illinois recognizes its impropriety. But it is subject to this criticism, in addition to those which have been so forcefully given by the Senator from Arkansas: It recognizes the Government's right to say to these men, "You shall not strike" when the merits of their dispute are undetermined, and then in effect says that after they are determined, and if they are decided against the men, they can go on a strike.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly. That is a clear statement of one of the differences which I was trying to express. It recognizes the power, the right, and the duty of the Government to act in the matter, but imposes a half-hearted and inadequate remedy.

I have been studying this question for years and realize the very great difficulties with which it is associated. The amendment of the Senator from Illinois is not acceptable to any portion of organized labor in the United States. The Canadian law has not been successful.

Mr. McCORMICK. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. ROBINSON. With pleasure I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCORMICK. I wanted to ask the Senator if it were not true that one of the principal objections to the Canadian law is that under it the arbitral tribunals hold the disputes under review for an unconscionably long time?

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas is making a very able address, although I do not agree with it in all points. But it has been many years, in my humble opinion, since a more vital and far-reaching question has been presented to the arbitration of the American Congress or the American people, and I am somewhat surprised that a question so vital in its immediate consequences, so far-reaching in its ultimate effects, has not received greater attention. I believe that this question should be determined by the sober and actual consideration of the representatives of the people elected to this body. For that reason I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gerry	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Gronna	McLean	Smoot
Brandegee	Hale	McNary	Spencer
Calder	Harris	Moses	Stanley
Capper	Harrison	Norris	Sterling
Colt	Henderson	Nugent	Sutherland
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Thomas
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Townsend
Dial	Kellogg	Poindexter	Trammell
Dillingham	Kendrick	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Edge	Kenyon	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	Keyes	Robinson	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	King	Sheppard	Warren
France	Lenroot	Simmons	Williams
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott
Gay	McCormick	Smith, Md.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, when interrupted by the call the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] had asked me if it is not true that long delays occur in the determination of cases by arbitral tribunals. I do not know just what was the import of his question or what conclusion he desired to reach from an answer to it, but I can answer him in the affirmative—that my observation has been that frequently cases submitted to arbitration are long drawn out.

However, I point out to him the fact that there is no more likelihood of a delay in decision under the provisions of the committee bill than there is in the provision which he has submitted. Indeed, I know that in his amendment there is a requirement that a decision shall be made within a certain time; but it has been frequently held that there is no power to compel a court to decide a case within a limited time, and it may be doubtful whether such a provision would be effective.

With respect to the amendment which the Senator offers, the fact that no strike can occur until 60 days after decision might prompt delay in the decision, so that under the plan which he proposes there is, in my judgment, nothing which would make certain a speedy determination of matters submitted to the respective boards provided for in the bill.

I have about concluded all that I care to say on this subject. Senators who have studied it know that it presents very great difficulties. They realize that for many years some of the best minds of the country have directed their thought to the creation of a plan which will relieve the public in some degree from the menace of ever-recurring strikes.

The primary objection to the provision presented by the Senator from Illinois is that it will probably not accomplish the purpose of settling labor disputes. In proof of that assertion I refer him to the operation of the Canadian law, which his amendment follows. In the hearings before our committee it was asserted, and not denied, that there have been more strikes in Canada since that law was passed than had occurred before its passage.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Was not that brought about by the fact that there was no provision in the Canadian law requiring a decision within a specific time? I am informed that in some cases decisions were held up several years, and of course under circumstances of that kind there would be a strike.

Mr. ROBINSON. Undoubtedly some of the strikes occurred because of delay, but the evidence showed that more strikes occurred after the reports were made than had occurred previous to the passage of the law. I think the Senator from Michigan will bear me out in that statement.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. I am surprised that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] should in this body assert as a conclusive argument against the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, which was the lesser of two evils, and that it should be rejected by the Senate for the simple reason that after the passage there were more strikes in Canada than before its passage. That, as I understand, is the argument of the Senator from Arkansas.

I wish to ask the Senator from Arkansas if he believes that that test is a fair test, that if more strikes occurred after an act was passed than before it was passed is it conclusive evidence that it is not an efficient preventive of strikes? Is that the position of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON. I never asserted that it was conclusive.

Mr. STANLEY. Is it indicative?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. STANLEY. All right. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator will please take his own time to make his argument.

Mr. STANLEY. I do not want to make an argument. If the Senator will bear with me——

Mr. ROBINSON. I have borne with the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor.

Mr. STANLEY. I yield, of course.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not object to yielding to the Senator to make an inquiry or to make a statement, but he has a right to take the floor and make his own argument. However, I yield at this time.

Mr. STANLEY. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator will proceed.

Mr. STANLEY. I wish simply to call the Senator's attention to the fact that if that be indicative, then this identical method has been followed with the identical result. A law like this produced in New South Wales a dislocation which involved more than half the working days of the entire country, nearly 200 separate strikes, and was immediately followed by a complete repeal of all the enactments, on the admitted ground that it was provocative of the trouble that it was intended to prevent. The same identical result followed in New Zealand, where the almost identical act was passed, and it was repudiated after actual experience both by employer and employee.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator is mistaken in that particular. The act to which he refers in New Zealand was not even closely analogous to the provisions of this bill in relation to the manner of settling disputes.

I thought it was legitimate and I still think so, in criticism of the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois, to say that the country in which it was first tried had not found it successful. I have not asserted that that declaration was a conclusive argument against his amendment, and I am amazed that the Senator from Kentucky should have placed such a construction upon my statement.

Mr. President, in dealing with the subject we ought either to provide a remedy or leave the subject untouched. We ought not to deal with it half-heartedly. The Senator need not imagine that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois will prove conciliatory to those who oppose antistrike legislation. Does the Senator imagine that?

Mr. STANLEY. No. I concede that the Canadian law is just as offensive to organized labor as the provisions proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. ROBINSON. Then as I understand it the Senator from Kentucky does not favor the amendment of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. STANLEY. I believe the amendment of the Senator from Illinois is the lesser of the two evils.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now I understand the Senator from Kentucky. That was exactly the point to which I was addressing myself when he interrupted me. The amendment of the Senator from Illinois will not prove conciliatory. It is a half-hearted, ineffectual provision. We are invoking the power of the Government to settle these questions. We are creating tribunals and defining their jurisdiction and the rules of law which shall govern them. When they decide the case it ought to settle it. We do not seek to interfere with the right of an individual to quit his employment, but we realize that the Nation can not live in the event of a prolonged universal railroad strike. We realize that the awakened conscience, the intelligence of the Nation, must devote itself to working out, however great the difficulties, the problem of doing justice to labor, and having done that, to protect the public against the perils of universal railroad strikes.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator, in view of his last statement, if he will analyze the disparity between the number of miners who returned to work after the issuance of the injunction of the court and the number who returned following the agreement between the Attorney General and Mr. Lewis?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no intention whatever of entering at this time into a discussion of the coal strike or of the settlement which was made in connection with it.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have taken no time in the debate on this question and I shall only take a moment or two now to explain the vote which I shall cast on this bill.

If this bill were to be enacted into law in its present form I should not hesitate to vote against it. I do not like many features in this bill. I realize, however, that all legislation is more or less the result of compromise, and am willing to vote to give the bill another chance in conference.

I have thought that the interviews we have read from railroad officials and others as to the dangerous financial situation of the railroads in this country were rather exaggerated; but my colleague, the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], stated on the floor a few days ago that if some legislation shall not pass to remedy this situation, two-thirds, I think he said, of all the railroads of the country will be in the hands of receivers inside of 30 days. I think there is no man in public life who has studied this question as has my colleague, and a statement of that kind from him challenges attention. I am influenced somewhat by that in voting for the bill in order that it may go to conference, believing that many features in it will be changed.

I do not like the guaranty provision or labor provisions of the bill. I think we must reach a point, and shall do so at this session of Congress, where some general legislation will be enacted providing industrial courts of conciliation and mediation and compulsory investigation for the solution of labor problems. I do not like to see the railroad employees, who are as patriotic a body of men as we have in this country, have a law especially made for them. I think the law should be general in its scope and cover all industrial questions. However, I am not going into that question at any length.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa if there is not a bill of that character now pending before one of the committees of the Senate?

Mr. KENYON. I am not certain as to that, but I do know that committees are working along that line.

Mr. CURTIS. That is what I meant.

Mr. KENYON. As chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, I have myself given a great deal of attention to that question. An industrial conference called by the President, I know, is working on the question, and I think no confidence is violated in saying that there will be some report, in all probability, from that conference along those lines. That is a question we must work out; for the people of this country are tired of strikes and do not propose that the business of the country shall be held up by strikes; but until we do provide such tribunals, where the case of the man who toils can be heard and his rights can be protected, it is rather difficult to adjust his problems by taking away from him the only weapon which he has. However, I am not going into that question to-night. It is a tremendously important and difficult question.

I rose merely to say that I shall vote for this bill because it is not the final enactment of the measure and in order to give the conferees a chance to rewrite the bill and at least obviate some of the objections which many of us find to it.

If those objections are not substantially obviated when the bill comes from the conference, I shall have no hesitation in voting against the conference report. My vote now is merely to send it to conference so there can be further consideration and some bill reported to meet the apparently chaotic conditions that will confront us if no legislation is enacted.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I shall delay action upon the pending amendment but a few moments. I fully realize and appreciate the great ability and thorough knowledge of railroad matters possessed by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce and his associates of the subcommittee who are largely responsible for this bill. They deserve every consideration for the conscientious services rendered in their endeavor to solve the most difficult problem, in many respects, that has ever been presented to an American Congress.

There is, however, one important provision in this bill to which I can not subscribe, and that is the provision in section 6, which takes a large portion of the earnings of the strong and self-supporting roads, above a certain percentage, and appropriates it for the benefit of the nonpaying or weaker roads.

It is quite probable that some such experiment as the one to which I object is unavoidable for causes beyond the control of the committee, and if I vote for this bill it will be because, and only because, there is a bare possibility that a few years of experiment under its provisions will stop the Government-ownership procession this side the dead line.

With me it is not a question of the power of Congress to do what section 6 proposes to do. It is the effect of this plan upon the cost of transportation that interests me. What the American people want is safe and adequate transportation at constantly decreasing cost, as far as this is humanly possible. It is not a question of the power of the State to exploit the individual. It is a question of utility—the greatest good to the greatest number, an all-important consideration which those who question the right of private property generally ignore.

When the State fixes a price which an individual may charge for his wares and the wages he must pay his employees and then takes all profits above a certain percentage and turns them over to the man who is doing business at a loss, the State has administered about all the deadly anodynes known to paternalistic allopathy.

It is my opinion that cheap, safe, and adequate transportation is more likely to be produced by those who have an incentive to do it than by those who are told by the State that some other railroad or the public will be compelled by law to pay a sum sufficient to maintain their properties and give them a small margin of profit, however extravagant and nonprogressive their management may be.

In other words, the provision in this bill to which I object substantially ignores the forces which, in my opinion, lie at the foundations of all social and industrial progress, namely, the spur of competition, driven by the promise of unusual rewards.

The opportunity to make legitimate profits in railroads gave to this country the best and cheapest railroad service in the world. Remove that opportunity because somebody has made an illegitimate profit and in due course of time the result will be the worst and most expensive transportation service in the world.

The law of self-preservation is as stable and inexorable as gravity, and it will not become inoperative at the fiat of Congress or constitution makers. Men must have food and raiment and shelter if they want to live, and when society said to the individual, "If you produce a surplus of the necessities of life, the law will protect you in the possession and enjoyment of that surplus" civilization began.

When we deny to an American the opportunity to make unusual profits in the production of any one of the things needed to sustain and maintain life, including transportation, provided he reduces the initial cost of that thing, you destroy the most effective if not the only instrumentality that will abolish poverty and want.

Society may and must regulate and punish extortion and greed, but when you deny legitimate profits in any industry to the expert, the man who knows more about that industry than anyone else, he will take no further interest in it. When the railroads lose the leadership of the expert, the ingenious mechanic and chemist, the genius in organization and finance when you abandon superior knowledge and its rewards for the tyranny of the State, you will not reduce the cost of transportation or the cost of anything else, in my opinion.

I realize that what I say is trite and lacks variety and mode. When furs are fashionable in August, women will wear them, and when unnatural and suffocating politico-economic principles are fashionable on election day, women and men both will wear them. But, Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I can not let this bill pass without recording the prophecy that it will not work as anticipated. And I repeat, my earnest hope is that the experiment will satisfy the lust for variety now so prevalent and controlling in political circles, and convince the American people that it is the part of wisdom to seek the safest, least expensive, and the most efficient and best railroad service where it can be found.

There is no economic distinction between the public character of the service rendered by the railroads and the service rendered by shoemakers and bakers. All three meet vital public needs. The railroads in a large measure are monopolies, and for that reason their rates and securities must be under strict governmental regulation; and the nature of their service is such that due regard must be had for the safety and comfort of employees and the public. But when the Government fixes a reasonable and just rate and then proceeds to confiscate more than half of the profits received, the effect will be destructive to competition in service and the incentive to lower the out-of-pocket cost of transportation will be entirely removed.

It is easy to see that this would be the result if similar methods were adopted in an effort to lower prices of commodities. If the Government should fix the price of shoes and bread and then confiscate a goodly portion of the profits of the factory or bakery that is economically and efficiently handled and give those profits to the baker or shoemaker whose business is not self-sustaining, the direct effect would be to encourage shiftlessness and extravagance, which of course would mean unnecessarily high prices for footwear and food.

It may be urged that some roads are nonremunerative because of their unfavorable location, and that this fact ought not to be permitted to deprive the patrons of such roads of the benefits of transportation by rail. It is a well-recognized principle that any carrier that can not distribute the commodities within the area of its operation for a sum less than that which will be added to the value of any commodity by reason of its transportation from one place to another is an economic loss to the community which it serves. Individuals build railroads in undeveloped countries in the belief and expectation that the time will come when such roads will pay large profits. They take their chances, and they are willing to. They know current expenses must be cut to the lowest figure, and they are ever on the alert for cost-saving devices.

It is said that the railroads have not returned 2 per cent on the total amount invested in them, and yet if the property value of the United States is three hundred billions, the railroads must be credited with the creation of a large portion of this immense total. If the railroads now existing were removed from the United States, I doubt if property anywhere would be worth 10 per cent of its market value prior to such removal. The railroads are indispensable. The suspension of their activities for a week would mean starvation and chaos. Yet, the cost of transportation still remains a heavy and most unwelcome burden, and it is believed by many that this cost can be cut in two. I repeat, the only instrumentality that will do this is the expert, and he must be paid for his services.

I am very firmly convinced that the railroad credits which have been destroyed by the Government should be restored by the Government. The proposal to collect the required funds from competing roads that have been able to survive the manhandling of the Government is, to my mind, indefensible, and I shall be greatly surprised if the expected funds are forthcoming. Managers of roads that make more than 6 per cent will easily find a way to escape what they will probably and properly denounce as legalized robbery of their patrons or stockholders, or both. The provision in this bill to which I object will not only fail to reduce the cost of transportation but will also fail to raise the money that must be had if justice is to be done to the roads whose organizations have been demoralized and whose incomes have been checked by direct governmental restrictions and inhibitions.

Mr. McCORMICK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	France	Lenroot	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Gay	McKellar	Smoot
Calder	Gerry	McLean	Spencer
Capper	Hale	McNary	Sterling
Chamberlain	Harris	Moses	Sutherland
Colt	Harrison	Norris	Thomas
Cummins	Henderson	Nugent	Trammell
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Wadsworth
Dial	Kellogg	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Kendrick	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	Kenyon	Ransdell	Warren
Elkins	Keyes	Sheppard	Wolcott
Fernald	King	Sherman
Fletcher	Kirby	Smith, Ga.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence on official business of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK].

Mr. CUMMINS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] during his absence on account of the illness of his wife, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and will ask that the announcement of this transfer may stand for the day. I vote "nay."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KELLOGG (when Mr. LODGE's name was called). The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I am authorized to say that if the senior Senator from Massachusetts were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present he would vote "nay" and I would vote "yea."

Mr. STANLEY (when his name was called). In casting my vote I take this occasion to explain my attitude toward this character of legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order on the roll call to make any statement.

Mr. STANLEY. Very well. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. As he is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement regarding my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], but I understand from the pair clerks that if he were present he would vote "nay," and I desire to vote the same way. I vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KING. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], with whom I have a general pair, has not voted. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. DIAL. I am paired with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who is unavoidably detained at present, but I understand that if he were here he would vote "nay." I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FERNALD. I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I observe that he has not voted. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I find that I can transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]; so I do so, and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] on account of illness in his family. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have been asked to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], is paired with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and that if present and at liberty to vote my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON];

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM].

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—30.

Capper	Harris	McCormick	Sherman
Chamberlain	Harrison	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Colt	Henderson	McNary	Stanley
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Moses	Trammell
Fletcher	Kenyon	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
France	Keyes	Nugent	Wolcott
Gay	La Follette	Overman
Gerry	Lenroot	Sheppard

NAYS—33.

Ball	Fernald	Myers	Sterling
Bankhead	Frelinghuysen	Phipps	Thomas
Brandegee	Hale	Poindexter	Wadsworth

Gore	McCumber	Pittman	Townsend
Gronna	Nelson	Reed	Underwood
Harding	New	Shields	Watson

So Mr. MCCORMICK's amendment was rejected.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this bill provides, and it is an ominous and a tremendous provision, that if two or more employees of an individual or a private corporation conclude that they can better their condition by entering the service of any other employer, and pursuant to that conclusion and that concurrence they leave the employ of a common carrier, they are guilty of an offense akin to a felony.

If a man and his wife, employed as clerks in the offices of a general traffic manager, or a freight office, are offered better employment anywhere else in the United States, and for that reason they agree to seek that better employment, and their leaving the service of the common carrier impedes, hinders, or inconveniences that common carrier, they are jailbirds.

This bill provides that 2,000,000 men who enter the service of the common carriers of the United States, and who afterwards agree to leave that service otherwise than subtly, singly, and surreptitiously, are guilty of a misdemeanor.

This bill provides—amazing as it may be, astounding as it may be to those who have preconceived opinions of personal liberty—that they who leave the service of common carriers and do not sneak individually out of that service, who dare to mention to their fellow employees that they are leaving that service for any good or sufficient reason, are to be condemned, are to be subjected to infamous punishment.

Remember, Mr. President, that in this country he who wears the stripes of a felon, he who is locked behind prison bars, is guilty of a crime; and this bill places the indelible brand of a criminal upon the free American who dares to quit the service of a private corporation without convincing a court that he never mentioned his intention to quit to anybody else.

This bill involves involuntary servitude. This bill is the most flagrant, the most unwarranted, the most unjustifiable affront to the dignity of labor ever offered in the American House or the American Senate. As the spokesman, not of labor, not of capital, but of naked American manhood, I here and now protest against the indignity of this legislation.

Tell me that a private corporation, whether it be engaged in the business of conducting interstate commerce or in the business of plowing the soil, manufacturing some textile fabric, reducing the crude ores to the multitudinous uses of mankind—tell me that any private corporation, whether authorized by this Government to operate a public utility or a private industry, has the right to say to free Americans: "If you quit my employment in greater numbers than one at a time you are jailbirds!"

It is monstrous. I say more than that, and I say it with due reverence for the majesty of the law, such legislation is impotent and ineffective. For that reason I propose an amendment to this bill to strike from the bill sections 29, 30, and 31.

Sections 29, 30, and 31, in short, provide that if two or more employees of a private corporation agree to quit for any reason they shall go to jail. Sections 29, 30, and 31 provide that if two or more persons, being dissatisfied with their employment, quit that employment, they shall be subjected to infamy and imprisonment, notwithstanding the fact that they leave the cab or the engine or the coach to retire to the bosom of their families; that they offer no character of resistance, direct, constructive, or imaginative, to any man who chooses to take their places.

Imagine, Mr. President, what this means. If more than 2 out of the 2,000,000 men who are engaged in the transportation of passengers and freight in the United States get together, discuss their remuneration and the working conditions of their employment, and John says to William, "It will pay us better to plow corn or to raise wheat or cotton, or to spilt rails, or to do any other thing that an American citizen has a right to do, and we will go to work on the farm or in the mill or in the factory or the mine," if the railroads conclude that they are embarrassed by that action, those free American citizens can be sent to jail.

This is a system of involuntary servitude. It is the midsummer madness of socialism. What is socialism, in the last analysis? It is the right of one more than a majority of all the people in the United States to assert title to the property of this country. What is property? What deprivation is it to me if you take from me the little I have accumulated? Men have fought and men have died in ages past not for property; they have fought and have died for freedom.

It was the custom, Mr. President, in the day when chattel slavery was the result of surrender, for the Roman soldier to fall upon his own sword when surrender was disgrace. Men, free men, for 3,000 years have died upon the field of battle rather than surrender to any man or to any government the right to say that they should work against their will or under conditions not voluntarily imposed.

It has been in the life of nations but a few short years since the patron saint of the majority in the Senate, since the patron saint of Republicanism, asserted that hecatombs of the slain, that rivers of blood, that all the multitudinous horrors of war were cheap, were not a sufficient price for the liberation of a few millions of aborigines from the right of any man to tell those negro slaves that they should work against their will.

I am surprised, I am amazed, that to-day a great leader on the other side should go back to the days of chattel slavery in the South, should dig up the manacles that once bound the black limbs of a Senegambian slave, and should attempt to fasten them upon the white and sinewy arms of a Saxon freeman; that any man on the other side of this Chamber should propose in the Senate a naked system of human slavery.

When you do it, dismantle every monument and every memorial ever erected to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, forget forever, abandon, desert, the graves of 300,000 men from the North who died in battle to maintain forever the right of every man, black or white, to determine whether he should work or whether he should quit work.

What is a slave? How does a man become a slave? Whenever any power, corporate or individual, can say to me under pain of disgrace and imprisonment, "You shall work for a certain time in a certain way for a certain emolument," I am a slave if I do it.

Ah, they say, we have offered you something better. We have offered you Government tribunals. We have sugar-coated your servitude. Is a man less a slave because his manacles are silken, because his fetters are not of steel and cut his bleeding flesh? "We will give you something better"—something better than what? Something better than liberty?

I remember when I was a schoolboy I read the story of the wolf that chatted with the dog. The dog was fat and sleek, and the wolf was mangy and naked, and his ribs protruded from his undernourished body. The dog said to the wolf, "Come with me and you shall have all that you wish to eat, and you shall sleep with comfort." That was 3,000 years ago, Mr. President. The wolf said, "I will go. Eat all you want?" "Yes." "Sleep all you want?" "Yes." "Never know hunger or pain or privation?" "Yes."

Then the wolf looked at the neck of the dog and saw the hair rubbed from his neck, and said, "What is that?" "Oh," he said, "at home my master places a thong about my neck, and a chain to the thong, and a weight to the chain, and I can not go beyond certain bounds. But he gives me all that I can eat and lets me sleep as much as I please, provided I do not protest against the chain and the thong and the weight." The wolf out of his gray eyes looked at him and said, "I prefer to be hungry and to be free."

Ah, go back to Washington and those who incarnadined the snows with their bleeding feet. Go back to all who have suffered hunger and privation and death. Go back to all those who incarnadined the stripes and who have rendered eterminably brilliant the stars of the flag. There are those who would rather be naked and hungry and starving than not to be free. Yet the amendment of the Senator from Iowa offers to the workmen of America a substitute for freedom.

I glory in the fact that there is not a track walker, there is not a laborer who lays ties or rails, there is not one so poor or one so humble, not one so forgotten or despised, who is an American citizen, who is the heir to all for which our fathers fought and died, who does not rise indignantly now and spew, yes, spew this infamous and humiliating proposition out of his mouth.

Oh, I stand here to-day—I started to say as a Democrat—but that word "democrat" has become so abused, so applied to the crazy aspirations of Lenin and Trotski, that I hesitate to use it.

So the word "democrat" has been within late years utterly confused with the crazy demand of Socialists and Bolshevists, with the right of a crazy majority to plunder, rob, and murder any less than 51 per cent of the community. Mr. Lenin, Mr. Trotski, Mr. Karl Marx say that if the majority wishes to appropriate the property of the minority, they can do it; and the chairman of the committee and his colleagues say that if a majority wish to appropriate the right of a man to work or to quit work, they can do it. Between the two the logic is with Lenin and Trotski, because my body is more sacred than my purse.

In the name of that immortal and almost forgotten patriot who sleeps to-night yonder at Mount Vernon, within a few miles of this city, George Washington; in the name of him whose prophetic vision equaled—no, I will not say that, because it would be profane, but almost rivaled—the anointed insight of those whom God permitted to look beyond the veil of the future; in all the tides of time since learned Grecians about the marble columns of Acropolis discussed the fundamentals of human liberty, until this hour, the wisest, brightest, greatest of all the sons of men was Thomas Jefferson; and now I appeal to the shade of the sage of Monticello and of Washington—if they beyond the vale see aught that happens here—to appeal to recalcitrant Democrats to awaken and arise to the fact that now, at this time, at this hour, Democracy is about to stab—pitilessly stab—the last poor, pitiful vestige of that thing which we once called personal liberty.

If a man no longer has the right, whether he takes his fellow into his confidence or not, to say whether he will work or quit work, you have gone to the limit of madness in the rule of a majority; you have gone to the extreme which McCauley and every student of our institutions has declared is the limit, the edge of the abyss of chaos and ruin. In the name of all that is left of Democracy, in the name of the preachments of Washington and Jefferson and Madison, in the name of human right and human liberty, I solemnly protest against the enactment into law of these pernicious provisions.

I protest against the welding of these chains upon the limbs of freemen, whether they be organized or unorganized. I protest in the name of democracy and of common sense and of common decency against the enactment of sections 29, 30, and 31 of the bill and move that sections 29, 30, and 31, namely, from line 10 on page 70, line 22 on page 71, inclusive, be stricken from the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CUMMINS. In Committee of the Whole the Senator from Kentucky offered an amendment striking out the three sections to which he now refers, as well as other sections of the bill. That amendment was divisible. A division was not asked. It was voted upon and defeated. It was not reserved for the Senate. I make the point of order that it is not now in order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the bill now in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wish to call attention of the Chair to the fact that the amendment offered in Committee of the Whole was to the original text of the bill. The motion was to strike out the language of some five or six sections. The bill now comes into the Senate, and I think it is the well-established rule that it is in order to offer a motion in the Senate to strike out. When the bill came into the Senate all the amendments made in Committee of the Whole were agreed to. There is nothing behind that motion to prevent the motion being offered in the Senate. I suggest, in order to emphasize it, that this is not the amendment offered in Committee of the Whole. It is a motion to strike out original language, and I think it is in order.

Mr. STANLEY. Just presume that in Committee of the Whole I had moved to strike out everything except the enacting clause——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is a point of order debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not under the rules of the Senate, as the Chair understands it, although it has been the custom lately. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. THOMAS. I make the point of order that the point of order is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair believes that the motion made by the Senator from Kentucky is in order in the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. On the adoption of the motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	Norris	Stanley
Brandegee	Harris	Nugent	Sterling
Capper	Harrison	Phipps	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Thomas
Colt	Kellogg	Pomerene	Trammell
Cummins	Kendrick	Ransdell	Underwood
Curtis	King	Robinson	Wadsworth
Dial	Kirby	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	McKellar	Sherman	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	McLean	Smith, Md.	Warren
Fernald	McNary	Smith, S. C.	Williams
Fletcher	Myers	Smoot	Wolcott
Gay	New	Spencer

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. WOLCOTT demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KELLOGG (when Mr. NELSON'S name was called). I am authorized to say that my colleague, the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], is paired on this question with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. If permitted to vote, my colleague would vote "nay."

I also wish to announce that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has a pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. If the Senator from Massachusetts were permitted to vote on this question, he would vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore concerning my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING], who is absent on account of the official business of the Senate. I am, however, at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

I also wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He is paired. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Notwithstanding my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr.

PENROSE], I feel at liberty, from what I have heard, to vote upon this particular proposition. I vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair for to-night with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who is absent on account of illness in his family. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the negative). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I find that I can transfer the pair which I have announced from time to time with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. Therefore I am at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] so that he may stand paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and I vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] and therefore withholds his vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 39, as follows:

So Mr. STANLEY'S amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendments, the question is, Shall the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is it too late to offer an amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. KING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 6, on page 12, line 21, after the word "reasonable," it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the section and insert in lieu thereof the following:

The level of rates, fares, and charges in any rate-making group shall from time to time be adjusted by the Interstate Commerce Commission so as to provide revenue sufficient to pay the wages of labor and all other expenses of operation, including taxes, to earn proper current capital charges, to maintain necessary funds for repairs, replacements, and working operations and establish credit sufficient to attract the new capital required to meet the public need for present and reasonably prospective transportation facilities and service. In applying the foregoing rule a comprehensive view of the conditions of each rate-making group shall be taken, and the level of rates, fares, and charges shall be determined with reasonable reference to railroads fairly representative of average conditions therein.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there are many features of the pending measure which are objectionable to me. Upon the theory adopted by the committee the bill is logically and symmetrically drafted, and indeed it might be stated that it is a model of legislative draftsmanship.

It is such a radical departure from the policies, and indeed principles, which have guided the American people that I can not look upon the passage of this bill except with the gravest apprehensions. It is autocratic in the highest degree and establishes a paternalism that will be deadly and destructive. It is but slightly removed from governmental ownership, and perpetuates a tyrannous system of governmental control. It entirely revolutionizes the railroad policies of the American people. The record of railroad construction in our country is not free from many blemishes, and no one can justify the misconduct of many who have engaged in the promotion of railroad enterprises within the United States. For many years our country witnessed speculations and promotions in most fields of business life and activity and among all classes of people, and there are many pages that chronicle indefensible policies and accomplishments. I believe that there has been a quickening of the public conscience, and that what the past either approved or condoned would now arouse general condemnation. This much must be said, however, that American genius and enterprise built the finest railroad systems to be found in the world. Not even the small countries of Europe, with their compact and congested populations, afforded as efficient and economical railroad service as that prevailing in the United States.

In my opinion this bill makes further railroad building development difficult if not impossible. American enterprise and genius along lines of railroad activities will be deadened and destroyed. A bureaucracy is established, and the railroads of our country will be placed under its control. Energy, thrift, and efficiency in railroad service are penalized, and those who possess valuable properties are, in effect, stripped of their possessions and thrown into a formless and colloidal mass with the weak and inefficient railroad properties in the country.

There are constitutional objections to this bill that, in my opinion, should cause us to hesitate in giving it support, and lead Senators to a reexamination of the theory upon which it is drafted. I had intended to present at some length my objections to this bill, but the lateness of the hour and the evident purpose of a majority of the Senators to support it, regardless of any arguments that might be submitted in opposition, lead me to abandon my purpose, and to content myself with the submission of the motion which I am about to make, and with the statement that I feel constrained, after as full an examination as opportunity has afforded, to vote against the pending measure.

Mr. President, Senators will perceive that the tendered amendment relates to section 6 of the bill. Section 6 has provoked sharp controversy, and has been the subject of severe criticism. In my opinion the objections urged against it by eminent lawyers and by those who discussed in a public way the provisions of the bill are valid and invulnerable. It is inconceivable to me that we should legislate against the efficient railroads of our country and deprive them of earnings to which they are entitled under the reasonable rates fixed by instrumentalities provided by the Government. The policy of section 6, as I interpret it, is in contravention of all sound economic principles, and is in contravention of morals and of common sense as well as the protections and safeguards provided by the organic act of this Republic.

I have just seen a statement prepared by Judge Lovett under date of December 10, this year, which discusses the provisions of section 6 of the pending measure. Judge Lovett stands high in the confidence of the business world and also enjoys the confidence of the American people. Moreover he is a lawyer of ability. Notwithstanding he has been connected with the railroads of our country for many years, he has always been recognized as a man whose policies were guided by fine ethical standards and a desire for the public welfare. He has stated so clearly some of the objections to this provision of the bill that I shall ask leave to print in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a few pages of Judge Lovett's statement.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The bill proposes that for the first time in the history of this country Congress shall declare that railroad owners shall not be entitled to the earnings they may be able to save out of rates which the Government itself prescribes. Hitherto it was supposed that the duty and power of the Government were to determine the rates which the carrier should be entitled to charge and the shipper required to pay. With the rates once fixed by the Government, it was supposed that all carriers in the district could seek the business and each would be entitled to all that it could make and save through ability, enterprise, efficiency, economy, and otherwise. But the Cummins bill makes a novel and radical departure by providing that no railroad company shall retain out of the earnings it may save under rates which the Government itself authorizes or approves in the manner provided in the act more than "a reasonable return on its property investment." It then proceeds to declare in effect that 5½ per cent on the "value" of the property as determined by the commission is a "reasonable" return, and confiscates all in excess of 6 per cent upon such value. But it allows the company to retain one-half of its savings between 6 and 7 per cent and one-fourth of its savings in excess of 7 per cent, to be put in a "reserve fund" until the reserve fund amounts to 5 per cent of the value of the property, the reserve fund to be drawn upon for dividends or interest in years when the savings amount to less than 6 per cent. After such reserve fund amounts to 5 per cent of the value of the property, the carrier is allowed one-third of its earnings in excess of 6 per cent.

Except these fractions, all earnings and savings of the company in excess of 6 per cent on the value of its property as fixed by the commission are to be paid over by the company to the Government within four months after the end of each year, to be used by the Government—

"in furtherance of the public interest in railway transportaion by carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, and avoiding congestions, interruptions, or hindrances to railway service * * * or in furthering the public service rendered by them, either by way of purchase, lease, or rental of transportation equipment and facilities * * * or by way of loans to such carriers," etc., whatever such clause may mean.

Whether the "value" referred to in such limitation of return is the "book value" or the value which the commission is already engaged in making is not clear. In one paragraph the provision is that no carrier shall retain more than a reasonable return upon its "property investment," which undoubtedly means the investment, whether good or bad, wise or foolish, and regardless of real, intrinsic, or earning value. In another paragraph the provision is that the "commission shall from time to time determine the value of the property in each district and rate-making group." A literal construction of these two paragraphs means that for rate-making purposes by groups the commission should determine the value, but that for limitation of earnings of individual roads the "book value" should be the guide.

But the most extraordinary provision is that commanding that the Interstate Commerce Commission—

"shall, so far as practicable, adjust rates, fares, charges, and classifications that the net operating income of the several carriers shall bear the same relation to the value of their respective properties."

That is to say, that the commission shall disregard earnings, efficiency, ability of management, economy, wise expenditures in development, location of line, volume of business, and every other consideration entering into and ordinarily controlling relative values of properties in the everyday, common-sense transactions of men, and shall instead observe a rule which is never observed by anybody. To the extent of "property investment" or to the extent of "value" as determined by the commission (which, according to the tentative valuations thus far filed by the commission, means "junk" value—as so many secondhand ties, rails, bridges, structures, engines, cars, etc.—and not a going railroad) it shall be the lawful duty of the commission under this provision to manipulate "rates, fares, charges, and classifications" so that the value of a low-grade, highly efficient, first located line and the value of another line in the same group but located well up toward the top of the Rocky Mountains, with steep grades and high costs, shall be equalized, and that the value of every modern and highly efficient railroad shall be equalized with the most inefficient and unprofitable railroad in the same territory! Obviously this equalization can be accomplished only in one of two ways—either by raising the value of the inefficient or reducing the value of the efficient lines. The value of the inefficient can be raised only by raising the rates to a point where sufficient net is realized or by giving them in some form a share of the savings of the efficient lines. In any case the inevitable effect of such provision, if it be possible for the courts to regard it seriously, will be to ruin the credit of the railroads by which the great bulk of the business of the country is and must be transported. I am as confident as one can be of a legal proposition that the courts will annul the provision as confiscation, prohibited by the fifth amendment of the Federal Constitution. But the damage to railroad credit from the willingness of Congress to enact such legislation will be irreparable.

But that is not all. The same section provides that in 1925 and in every fifth year thereafter the commission shall determine what, under conditions then existing, constitutes a fair return, and that it may "increase or decrease the 5½ per cent basis herein prescribed or the basis for the determination of excess income." So that the commission at such periods hereafter is at liberty under the bill to determine that 6 per cent upon the value is too high a rate, and that 5 per cent or 4 per cent or a lower rate is enough for a railroad investor, and that all net earnings in excess of such lower rate should be forfeited to the Government.

Is it conceivable that the money necessary to provide the railroad facilities which this growing country needs—generally estimated at not less than $1,000,000,000 per annum—will be obtainable from investors under legislation of this sort? The whole world is borrowing—governments, municipalities, railroads, steamships, industries, mines, and enterprises of every kind. The rest of the world realizes as never before that credit—fidelity to financial obligations—is something that every people must sacredly guard at all times in order to obtain means in emergencies. Opportunities for safe and profitable investments are almost unlimited and are bound to continue so for many years. Profits on industrial, commercial, financial, mining, and other enterprises in our own country are unrestricted and most attractive to our investors. It is with such competition as this that railroad executives must contend for the money necessary to maintain and increase our transportation facilities. The best railroads, under the legislation proposed, could offer a return of only 6 per cent on the value of their property, and even that return only in case it is earned, for, mind you, the bill does not propose that the Government shall guarantee the return.

As a matter of fact, money everywhere is to-day worth more than 6 per cent, and the strongest railroad companies can not sell their securities now on a 6 per cent basis. It is in the face of these facts that the bill proposes to confiscate all the company earns in excess of 6 per cent. Thus a measure designed to reassure investors and attract new capital to railroad enterprises defeats itself by discriminating against investments in the railroad busines by confiscating all the rewards of wisdom in investing and efficiency in operations.

As part of the plan the same section 6 of the bill provides that—

"The commission shall initiate, modify, or adjust rates, fares, charges, and classifications, as nearly as may be, so that the railway carriers as a whole allocated to each district and subject to this act shall earn an aggregate annual net railway operating income equal, as nearly as may be, to 5½ per cent upon the aggregate value, as determined in accordance with the provisions hereof, of the railway property of such carriers in the district held for and used in the service of transportation."

Of course, this includes the railroad that operates at a loss as well as the railroad that earns a surplus, the road that should never have been built as well as the most useful line, the badly managed as well as the best managed railroad, for all in the district or group must be included and rates made sufficient to yield the specified return on the "aggregate value" in the rate group. I have already pointed out that the "property investment" in one sentence of the bill is taken as the basis for limiting the return, and that in another sentence in the same section, the commission is empowered—without any guide—to determine the "value" of the railroad property. As indicated by the tentative valuation reports thus far filed by the commission, that body takes the estimated reproduction cost of the elements entering into the railroad, such as rails, ties, bridges, buildings, and other structures, cuts, fills, etc., less depreciation—or what I have called a "junk" value, rather than the value as a going railroad—as its guide of value; and according to that method an unwisely built and improperly located railroad operating at a perpetual loss might be valued even higher than a wisely built and profitably operated line. But if "property investment" is to be taken as the guide, the more overcapitalized a railroad has been, the greater would be its value, for, until the bookkeeping rule was changed by the commission in very recent years, all securities issued were carried in the property investment account by most companies at par, regardless of the price received for them. It certainly will be a number of years before the commission can complete the valuation work upon which it is already engaged; and advocates of this scheme outside of Congress urge property investment as the basis of such value.

The promoters of this scheme, before it was incorporated in the Senate bill, recognized that it would involve a very substantial increase in rates, and in order to lull the people into submission, they devised the plan of confiscating, in the manner and to the extent above described, the net earnings of the wisely built and developed and well managed railroads in excess of 6 per cent. They assumed apparently that the controlling objection on the part of the people to an increase in rates was that some roads would be able to save more from such rates than others and more than a moderate profit. But what will it profit the shippers for the Government to confiscate the earning in excess of 6 per cent, as proposed by this bill?

The amount is not returned to the shippers. It in no wise reduces the rates they pay. It goes into a fund for the very vague railroad purposes indicated by the provision hereinbefore quoted from the bill. The leading advocate vehemently denies that the amount is for the benefit of the weak lines. The shippers are to go on paying the high freight rates in order that the so-called "weak" lines, however inefficiently managed or improperly built, may get increased revenue in that way, but are expected to be lulled into acquiescence by the delightful reflection that the inherently valuable and efficient railroads shall not be allowed to retain the benefit they get from the increased charges.

This assumption involves two fundamental mistakes: The first is that the people are willing to pay more than a reasonable rate in order to reward improvidence or mistakes or misfortune in locating and building railroads, or possible inefficiency in management and operation (for all the risk of these is put upon the public by the bill in dealing with net earnings); and the second is that the people of this country are unwilling to reward wisdom in construction and development and efficiency in management and operation of railroads—the property in the success of which the public at large is more interested than in any other class of property existing.

I deny that our people are in favor of confiscating the net earnings of a railroad company saved by it out of reasonable rates established or approved by the Government itself. The people are interested in the rates they pay—not in what the carrier by economy, efficiency, wise foresight, or otherwise is able to save out of such rates. Our people view with complacency, and indeed approval, large earnings by well-managed banks, manufacturing industries, commercial institutions, and enterprises of various kinds, out of prices and rates fixed by themselves—free from regulation by the Government. How preposterous then that the people should object because some railroad companies by wise foresight and good management in competition with others should be able to make out of rates made—not by themselves but prescribed by the Government itself—a profit much less than that commonly made in other lines of business. That, too, when the people are enormously interested in the maintenance and development and increased efficiency of railroad transportation, which is a necessity for all, whereas the success or failure of the other enterprises are not matters of such vital public concern. The cloud of fiction and prejudice which has so long befogged this aspect of the railroad question is vanishing, and the people are learning that, if private capital is to supply railroad facilities, it must receive as fair treatment as that employed in other and much less necessary enterprises.

It is not the weak roads that transport the country's commerce. It is not the weak roads on which the traffic becomes congested. Many of the "weak" roads are weak because they serve territories which, for various reasons, afford little traffic. But they are giving the service which the traffic justifies and requires. Some are weak because they are in competitive territory and their rivals, through more fortunate location, or accessibility to industries, or for other good reasons, are more convenient and satisfactory to shippers and therefore able to get the business. Others are weak as a result of mistakes in policy, unsound financing, or bad management; and others are weak because building in the first instance never was justified by the traffic obtainable and was merely a speculative effort.

It has seemed almost impossible to attract sufficient attention in this connection to the supremely important fact that the country's transportation service is performed by the "strong" lines and not by the "weak."

The industries are located on the strong lines, and such lines, by location and otherwise, are best adapted to the business. Their growth and development have been more in conformity with the needs of the traffic. They serve better the convenience and requirements of the people. It is the strong lines to which traffic inevitably flows and upon which congestions occur. The congestion of traffic in 1917–18 did not occur on the weak roads, but on the strong. Very few of the weak lines were taxed except with the overflow of traffic in excess of what the strong lines could handle. This was because the bulk of the traffic is normally on the strong lines, and this tends to make them strong. The most prominent exceptions to this are certain of the New England lines and certain large bituminous coal carriers.

Without speaking definitely from statistics, I feel safe in asserting that not less than 80 per cent of the railroad traffic of the United States is transported by railroad companies which regularly pay dividends.

Their credit depends upon the continuance of such dividends. Their stocks are held by hundreds of thousands of individuals—many representing the savings of almost a lifetime. Unless such dividends are continued—and, indeed, practically assured—it will be impossible for these companies, so situated as to be called upon to handle the great bulk of the commerce of the country, to obtain the money for improvements and development required to meet the needs of our growing commerce. It was the commission's policy of stationary and inflexible rates in the face of increasing wages and other operating costs, and the conflicting regulations of the various States, that made investors anxious about the stability and continuance of dividends and deterred many of the strong railroads from making improvements, additions, and extensions which all now know to be necessary. The fact undoubtedly is that it is the strong roads, upon which the bulk of the business naturally falls, that need the additional facilities, and it is the strong roads whose credit must be conserved if such facilities are to be provided.

Hence, I protest against the confiscatory provisions of section 6 of the Senate bill as not only failing to provide for the transportation emergency confronting the country, but as making it infinitely worse by attacking for the first time in the history of this Government not the transportation rates to be charged the shipper—which the Government may and ought to prescribe—but the net saved out of such rates, which is as much the private property of the stockholders as the money and assets in the treasury, and by seeking to bring the valuable and the worthless, the important and the unimportant, and the efficient and inefficient railroads to a dead level.

To base rates upon "property investment," as advocated by representatives of some of the "weak" lines, or upon the separate appraisement of the different elements entering into the construction and making up the physical structure, as seems to be the method thus far adopted by the commission in its valuation work, undoubtedly will require radical changes in the rate structure and the rate relations now existing, which represent growth and commercial needs for generations and to which commerce is adjusted. And it is a false and wholly arbitrary basis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, as I understand, the question now is whether the substitution made in the Committee of the Whole shall be concurred in by the Senate; and this is the opportunity which the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] desired for a vote between the Senate bill and the House bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I desire to lay before the Senate now the amendment that I offered in the Committee of the Whole, on which there was a tie vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 77, beginning on line 11, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 17 on page 78, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers, or of like kind of property, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, or to charge any greater compensation as a through route than the aggregate of the intermediate rates subject to the provisions of this act; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge or receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, however, That upon application to the Interstate Commerce Commission such common carrier may in special cases not due to or arising out of conditions of water competition, actual or potential, direct or indirect, after investigation, be authorized by the commission to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section: Provided further, That no authorization for a change of existing rates under the proviso of this section shall be granted within six months from the approval of this act, nor in any case where application shall have been filed before the commission, in accordance with the provisions of this section, until a determination of such application by the commission; but in exercising the authority conferred upon it in this proviso the commission shall not permit the establishment of any charge to or from the more distant point that is not fairly compensatory for the service performed.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I can not too strongly urge upon the Senators the adoption of this amendment. It is right and fair and just.

I am not going to take up any of the time of the Senate, but I should like to have a vote on the amendment. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], as heretofore explained, and withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. SUTHERLAND's name was called). The present occupant of the chair has a pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], and therefore withholds his vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Upon this proposition I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], and vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last roll call as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KELLOGG (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the negative). Making the same announcement as before, I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has a pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. If at liberty to vote, the senior Senator from Massachusetts would vote "nay."

I also wish to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], is paired with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—22.

Capper	Kendrick	Overman	Thomas

So Mr. HENDERSON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, on page 77, line 22, I move to strike out the proviso, beginning with the word "Provided," and from that down to and including line 17 on page 78.

The effect of this amendment would be to deprive the Interstate Commerce Commission of the authority to allow the charging of a greater sum for hauling freight a short distance than for hauling it a longer distance over the same line in the same direction. The effect of it would be to make absolute the rule against this discrimination by which the people of the interior portions of the country, the most productive sections of the country, are required to pay a tribute of from $11,000,000 to $25,000,000 a year as a subsidy to the railroads, on the pretense that it is to enable them to compete with the water lines, with the result that that great area of the country is retarded in its growth, and that the maritime commerce of the country has been destroyed.

There is just one other word that I want to say.

A great deal of argument has been made to the effect that the system which has grown up, making the rule out of the exception in the discretion that was vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission, was to enable the railroad companies to compete with the ship lines. The fact of the case is, as shown by the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Committee, that the real interest and the real motive which has been back of this discrimination and imposition upon the majority of the people of this country has been the interest of the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. to enable it to maintain a ship line of its own from New York City to Galveston, in competition with rival ship lines, by which it has been enabled to monopolize the water transportation, making a combined rail-and-water system.

The eastern terminus of the Southern Pacific Railroad, so far as its rail lines are concerned, is in the same longitude practically with Omaha, Nebr. One-half of its transcontinental system is by water. The other transcontinental lines have practically abandoned this contention. There was very little resistance on the part of the northern lines to the adoption of this rule by the committee. The Southern Pacific Railroad Co., which is dependent upon its ship line, having used this pretense of enabling the railroad to compete with water lines, has maintained its great ship line, was present at the hearings, and resisted the adoption of the rule, and organized and led the opposition. I make this statement in order to disclose the real power which has prevented the righting of this wrong, which Congress really intended to right originally in the enactment of the act in 1887, and then again in the amendment of 1910. Upon this amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I wish to say merely a word before the vote is taken. I am in sympathy with this amendment. I could give the Senate a number of very concrete illustrations of the hardships which the present law operates upon the people of the State of New Mexico.

Every day there are carloads of freight from the East shipped through that State, 1,500 miles beyond, to points in California for a very much less rate than that for which the railroads are willing to stop the car in New Mexico. Every day carloads of freight pass through the town in which I live and go 400 miles beyond, to El Paso, in the State of Texas, for a very much less rate than that for which they will permit the car to be stopped in the town where I live. For years carloads of sugar passed through my town going 400 miles farther, to the city of Denver, Colo., and local freight was paid on it back to Las Vegas. These are illustrations of what occurs continually. It applies to practically every class of freight which moves into that State.

It seems to me that no defense can be made for such a system. The rates for the transportation of freight are made upon the theory that it shall be a reasonable rate. The rate upon the long haul is either reasonable or it is not. If it is a reasonable rate for the long haul, then I submit they are charging too much for the short haul. If it is not a reasonable rate, then the short-haul people are paying the freight of those who have the long haul. There is absolutely no escape from that logic, and it seems to me that the time is at hand when these rates shall be equalized, when one section of the country shall not be paying the freight bill of another section of the country.

I therefore hope, Mr. President, that the amendment of the Senator from Washington will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). As I announced before, I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who is absent on account of illness in his family. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] and vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who I notice is absent; but inasmuch as he would vote as I would, I take the privilege of voting. I vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. SUTHERLAND'S name was called). The present occupant of the chair has a pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] and withholds his vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement regarding my pair and transfer as before and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement concerning my pair and its transfer which I made on the last yea-and-nay vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and transfer as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Making the same announcement as to my pair that I did on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the negative). Making the same announcement as before, I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and permit my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—19.

So Mr. POINDEXTER'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move to strike out on page 17, beginning with line 19, all the remainder of that page and down to the word "however," inclusive, on page 19, and beginning at line 13 on page 19 down to line 14 on page 20.

I may say in explanation that the effect of this amendment, if agreed to, would be to strike out the excess-earnings feature of the bill. It would have the effect of doing away with the contingent fund created by devoting the excess earnings of a road to that fund. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 88, line 9, after the word "therein," strike out the period and insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That nothing herein applicable to joint rates shall authorize a water carrier to receive as a proportion or division of a joint rate an amount in excess of its port-to-port rate, or to authorize the commission to prescribe the minimum rate to be charged for transportation by a water carrier.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, just a word. I wish to remind the chairman that when I started to offer this amendment during the consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole I asked him whether he understood that section 44 of the bill included water transportation. He said that it did not. We struck out the provision in regard to the minimum clauses in section 41 of the bill, and in order to be consistent I think they should be stricken out of section 44. Since that matter came up I have examined the terms of the act to regulate commerce, and I wish to call the chairman's attention very briefly to the following paragraph:

The provisions of this act apply to * * * any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad (or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment).

As I said, as we have already stricken out the minimum provision relating to waterways in section 41, I believe it ought to be stricken out of section 44, so as to send the matter to conference. All I ask of the chairman is to let it go to conference. It is included certainly in the terms of the House bill. It is also included in the terms of the Senate bill. If carried in both bills, it can not be referred to the conferees; and I ask the chairman not to oppose this, so that it may go to conference.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I remember when I presented the amendment to strike the provision out of section 41 it was stated, I think by the chairman, that section 44 did not relate to waterways at all. It is contended by those who have looked into it very closely that it does relate to waterways by reason of the language of the first section of the interstate-commerce act, which the Senator from Louisiana has read. I do not pretend to know about that nearly as well as the chairman, and I hope he will not oppose it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I adhere to my former view of the law in that respect. Section 44 is a revision of section 15 of the act to regulate commerce, and that applies only to land carriers, in my judgment. But to save time I am perfectly willing to take it into conference.

Mr. RANSDELL. I thank the chairman very much for that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, one of the most objectionable features of the bill, as I view the bill, is the provision which compels the incorporation after seven years of the common carriers of our country that have not voluntarily come within the operations of the bill. I have not time this evening, it would not be prudent, to assign the many reasons which might be offered in opposition to that provision. Without taking the trouble to argue the matter, I move to strike out all of section 13, beginning on page 33.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, when the bill was in Committee of the Whole I gave notice that in the Senate I would renew my motion to amend section 26, which motion had been rejected in Committee of the Whole. There have been so many test votes in the Senate on the labor provisions of the bill that it is very apparent that any effort to make a change would be futile.

I simply wish the RECORD to show that I have not moved the amendment in the Senate because of the fact that all amendments offered to the labor provisions have been rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the substituted amendment as amended.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, as the chairman of the committee stated a few moments ago, this is the only opportunity the Senate will have to register its views as between the Senate bill and the House bill. I therefore demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. When unanimous consent was being arranged the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] stated that he desired to offer a substitute. I wish to know whether that substitute can be offered after this substitute is agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent agreement gave that permission, and it was so stated by the Chair.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought the proper time would be before the amendment in the nature of a substitute is finally adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will come after action on this amendment according to the unanimous-consent agreement, though not regularly so.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, there seems to be some misapprehension in regard to the question. May I state that those who want to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, the Senate bill being the one upon which we have been working, will vote "yea." Those who want the House bill will vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated that the question is upon agreeing to the substituted amendment as amended, which is as the Senator from Iowa has stated. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], I vote "yea."

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore with reference to my pair and its transfer to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). As I have heretofore announced, I have a pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who is detained on account of illness in his family. I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] and vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG (when Mr. LODGE's name was called). The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has a pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. If present and permitted to vote, the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. SUTHERLAND's name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and transfer as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING], I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). In the absence of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], with whom I have a pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Understanding that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], with whom I am paired, would, if he were present, vote the same way that I am about to vote upon this proposition, I vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I am informed that he would vote as I would vote on this question, so that I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has not voted. If present he would vote as I would vote. I therefore transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] to the junior Senator from Iowa and vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG. The senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is paired with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. If present and permitted to vote, the Senator from Minnesota would vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (after having voted in the affirmative). I find that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a pair, has not voted. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON];

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 17, as follows:

So the amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, as we are approaching now the final vote on the bill, I want to say that I regret that I can not give it my support. I can not do so because I have serious doubt about certain unconstitutional features of the bill. I am one of those old-fashioned Democrats who believe that if I have any doubt about the constitutionality of a proposition, that doubt should be resolved in favor of the Constitution.

I can not vote for the bill on account of the provisions in section 13, which the Senate has refused to strike out and which are, in my opinion, clearly unconstitutional.

I hate to differ with my dear, good friend, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who is one of the greatest lawyers in the country, and yet I have my doubt about the question. In my colloquy with him the other evening I asked how he was going to acquire property belonging to the State of North Carolina. The State of North Carolina owns three-fourths interest in two valuable railroads making splendid returns to the State. The State owns a three-fourths interest in one railroad running through the State, which intersects the main stem of the Southern Railroad, paying the State 7 per cent semiannually, and all the equipment and property will belong to the State at the end of a certain number of years—the term of the lease. Of course, the Southern Railway or some other great railroad would like to acquire that property. The Senator from Iowa admitted in a colloquy with me the other day that under the provisions of the bill they could acquire it; that any private corporation, against the will of the State, could go into the State and take by force that valuable property away from the State and against the will of the State.

Why, Mr. President, can the Government condemn State property for the purpose of public uses? Can the States condemn Government property for State uses? If you want to build a public building in any State in the Union you have to go to the State legislature to secure its consent before you do it. Therefore I say that the General Government has no power under the power of eminent domain to authorize a railroad corporation to go into my State and, against the will of the State, acquire the most valuable property it has. If the Government can do that, if it can acquire part of the property, it can acquire all of the property. If it can acquire some of the property, it can acquire the State house and all of its property and wipe the State out of existence. That is one of my reasons for objecting to section 13 of the bill and one of the reasons why I am going to vote against the bill.

This valuable railroad property after seven years, under section 13 of the bill, can be forced away from the State by a railroad corporation; not the Government, but a railroad corporation, is given power to go down into my State, as the Senator admits, under eminent domain, under this provision, and take away the property of the State.

Of course, under the Constitution that would not stand in the Supreme Court of the United States for a moment, and our people will not stand for it.

Mr. President, I have serious doubts about section 6 of the bill. A given railroad for adequate service has a just and reasonable freight rate fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. That railroad ships freight over its road at that rate. It not only makes 5½ or 6 per cent, but 7 per cent or even 10 per cent. The Government having fixed the rate and the railroad having given the service, to whom belongs the excess return? It belongs to the railroad, and, unless it be by due process of law, under the fifth and fourteenth amendments to the Constitution, the Government can not take away this excess return, this property of the railroad, from the railroad. That is the doubt I have about that section of the bill. Some of the great lawyers of the country say it is constitutional; others say it is not. I have serious doubt about its constitutionality, and I am bound as a Senator to resolve that doubt in favor of the Constitution.

Mr. President, if a just and reasonable rate is fixed which the people of some district in North Carolina pay, and the Government, if there is an excess profit, takes the excess away from the railroad which earned it and gives it to some weaker railroad to help it out of trouble, it really takes it from the shippers, and it amounts to a tax upon the shippers.

Can we take away from those who have and give to those who have not? That is the principle which is involved, and I say the railroad having transported the freight under a just and reasonable rate fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and having acquired that excess, of course it is the property of the railroad which gives the service.

Do you tell me that the Government may take that property and use it for the purpose of helping some weaker railroad somewhere else? If there be such an excess return, Mr. President, it means that the railroad transportation board could lower the rate and still provide for the railroad a just and reasonable rate; otherwise, I repeat, the shippers are really taxed, because it costs more to carry the freight than is just and reasonable, more than the 6 per cent which this bill guarantees to the railroads.

For these reasons, Mr. President, which I have stated briefly, and for other reasons, I regret to say that I can not give my support to this bill.

I commend the Interstate Commerce Committee for the great work they have done. Many provisions of this bill, if it were constitutional, would constitute a great scheme. I say it is a wonderful scheme which has been reported by the committee who have studied the matter. I should like to have had more time, as a great many other Senators would, to study the bill, but I confess, with the knowledge that I now have of the bill, I can not give it my support. It is admitted it means much higher freight rates than now exist. It means additional taxation upon the already overtaxed people. It means added burdens to the taxpayers, and I can not stand for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer as a substitute for the pending bill the amendment which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That Federal control, as defined in the act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, of any railroad or system of transportation, the possession, use, control, or operation of which has been taken over and is still retained by the President thereunder or under section 1 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916, shall not be relinquished by the United States Government, or by any officer or agency thereof, prior to the expiration of two years from the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. All provisions of the acts of August 29, 1916, and March 21, 1918, referred to in section 1, and of all other acts of Congress are hereby repealed in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I have occupied the floor but little during this debate and I shall take only a short time now. I can not permit the bill to pass without advancing my views in favor of a fair test of the principle of unified operation of railroads.

FIFTY FACTS IN FAVOR OF FAIR TEST OF GOVERNMENT OPERATION OF RAILROADS.

Mr. President, the maze of data on the railroad question is so extensive and so bewildering that it is next to impossible to compress within a brief space an effective discussion of any of its important phases. Without attempting such a discussion I have decided to present a statement of 50 facts which, to me, seem to form ample basis for the contention that the Government should retain control of the railroads for a time sufficient to afford a genuine test of the principle of unified operation.

1. In December, 1917, it became evident that the railroads under private control would be unequal to the traffic demands arising both from the war emergency and the ordinary volume of business.

2. In the fall of 1916, several months before the United States entered the war, the railroads gave evidence of inability efficiently to handle the traffic needs of the Nation.

(a) Traffic was congested almost to the point of paralysis.

(b) The situation in 1916 was so critical that a special investigation was made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, resulting in a report by Commissioner McChord, who stated that in some territories the railroads had furnished but a small part of the cars necessary for the transportation of staple articles of commerce, such as coal, grain, lumber, fruits, and vegetables; that in consequence mills had shut down, prices had advanced, perishable articles had been destroyed, hundreds of carloads of food products delayed in reaching the markets; that in other territories there had been so many cars on the lines of the carriers and in their terminals that transportation service had been thrown into unprecedented confusion; that long delays had been the rule; and that operation of established industrial activities had been uncertain and difficult.

3. New construction of roads had shown a sharp decrease in 1912, and had almost collapsed by 1916.

4. By the end of December, 1917, nearly 145,000 cars had accumulated as a result of traffic congestion in the territory east of Chicago and St. Louis and north of the Ohio and the Potomac.

5. When threatened paralysis of transportation facilities and the intense need of an efficient carrying system if our part in the war was to be successful caused the Government to take over the roads on December 28, 1917, there were in this country 75 railway companies with operating revenues of $10,000,000 or more per year each, 105 with operating revenues less than $10,000,000 but more than $1,000,000 per year each, and several hundred with operating revenues of less than a million dollars a year each, constructed with little view to coordination for the benefit of the Nation as a whole, with terminal facilities often outgrown by the country, with many locomotives and cars in a defective condition, with overcrowded and inadequate shops and roundhouses, with lack of facilities at many points to make running repairs to large locomotives. The Government found that:

(a) Roundhouses built 20 or more years before for locomotives in service at that time were still being used to house locomotives more than twice the size for which they were designed.

(b) That repairs had to be made in many instances out of doors or in open roundhouses with the temperature below zero.

(c) That steam pipes, injectors, air pumps, steam cylinders froze and burst, and in many cases locomotives were frozen to the track in roundhouses and could not be moved.

6. The Government found that the railroad companies had not a single serviceable locomotive in reserve.

7. Thirteen months later the Railroad Administration of the United States, after successfully handling the greatest tonnage in the history of the country despite unprecedented difficulties and emergencies, had in storage and ready for winter service 1,189 locomotives, a fact due largely to coordination of shop-work, which resulted in an average increase of nearly 21 per cent a week in the number of locomotives receiving classified repairs.

(a) Many lines had inadequate facilities for repairing their own locomotives. Up to December 14, 1918, the Railroad Administration had sent 2,220 locomotives to other line shops for repairs.

8. Before Government control practically every important railroad had its own specifications for cars and engines, and practically all were different in details. It has been said there were 2,023 different styles of freight cars and almost as many different styles of locomotives.

9. During Government control about 12 standard types for freight cars have been agreed upon and six different types of locomotives of two different weights. The parts of these locomotives and cars are interchangeable. One of the locomotives built under the old system had to be held out of service until an expense of $4,800 had accumulated awaiting a part whose cost was not over $30.

10. When the Government took control labor conditions were so unsettled and so unsatisfactory as to portend the gravest consequences.

11. More than 50 per cent of the 2,000,000 employees of the railroads were receiving in December, 1917, $75 a month or less; 80 per cent of the 2,000,000 were receiving $100 a month or less. The majority of locomotive engineers were receiving less than $170 a month. Less than 3 per cent of the 2,000,000 employees had wages ranging from $150 to $250 per month.

(a) The employees continued to receive this miserably inadequate wage until a commission appointed by the Railroad Administration in January, 1918, and composed of Franklin K. Lane, C. C. McChord, William R. Wilcox, and J. Harry Covington, made a thorough investigation and reported on April 30, 1918.

12. Only a high sense of duty to country and the assurance of the Government that the investigation would be promptly made and that whatever increases were allowed would date back to January 1, 1918, kept the employees at work on wages in the main so distressingly and so iniquitously low.

13. The employees had lost faith in the methods of railroad companies under private control for the settlement of controversies but are satisfied with the system devised by the Government, a system of bipartisan boards with the Director General as final authority.

14. Wage increases awarded by the Government were such that the average monthly compensation per employee for all railway employees was $121.50 in July, 1919, as against $89.85 in December, 1917, an increase of $31.67 per month.

15. When the Government took over the roads it was seen that immediate relief in the matter of repairs could be had only by a greater number of working hours. On many railroads contracts with employees limited the number of hours. The employees promptly agreed to waive these agreements and to work the needed number of additional hours. The railway employees' department of the American Federation of Labor assisted materially in the matter. Railroad shops on many of the important lines were placed on a basis of 70 hours a week and the remainder on 60 hours, an average increase of 20 per cent in shop hours. After the armistice a shorter basis became the rule.

16. On February 21, 1918, General Order No. 8 was issued, and it forbade discriminations in employment, retention, or conditions of employment of employees because of membership or nonmembership in labor unions.

17. On May 25, 1918, Article V of General Order No. 27 provided that when women were employed in the railroad service their working conditions must be healthful and fitted to their needs, and that their pay, when they did the same class of work as men, should be the same as that of men.

18. A women's service section was created to give especial attention to the more than 100,000 women in the railroad service and to see that their surroundings were proper, comfortable, and safe.

19. From January 1, 1918, to November 10, 1918, nearly six and a half million troops were moved over American railways under Government control with comparative freedom from accident. During the first six months of 1919 approximately seven and one-fourth millions of men, including those in regular service, on furlough, and en route home after discharge were moved.

20. The Railroad Administration established a special rate of 1 cent a mile for soldiers and sailors on leave to visit their homes, a special rate for meals, and a special rate for return home after discharge.

21. The food situation became so critical in the allied countries in February, 1918, as to make the outcome of the war largely dependent on ability of American railways to transport sufficient foodstuffs to the Atlantic seaboard for shipment abroad.

22. The Railroad Administration met the crisis promptly and effectively. Freight cars were mobilized from all parts of the country. Conflicting traffic of all kinds was held up. Officials and employees worked day and night. By March 15 the vessel capacity of the Allies was satisfied and there was available at the North Atlantic ports an excess on wheels of 6,318 carloads of foodstuffs, exclusive of grain on cars and in elevators. Thenceforward our railway facilities were always ample for foodstuffs required by the Allies.

23. From July to November, 1918, 135,000 more cars of grain were handled under Government control than in the same months of 1917 under private control.

24. The transportation of coal was another problem which the Government effectively met. During the 10 months ending October 31, 1918, there was loaded and transported under Government control a net increase of 741,666 cars, or approximately 37,083,300 tons, of bituminous coal over the same 10 months in 1917 under private control.

25. The Railroad Administration of the United States Government gave special attention to the movement of fruits, cotton, oil, iron, and other principal products of farms, factories, and mines.

26. The handling of oil was a striking instance of the efficiency of the Railroad Administration. In April, 1918, conditions became chaotic in the oil industry. Many refineries were shut down or could operate only partially on account of a shortage in available transportation facilities. The situation was handled so well by the Government that W. E. MacEwen, chairman of the transportation committee of the Western Petroleum Refiners' Association, wrote voluntarily that within 30 days the Railroad Administration had made such an improvement that there was no further shortage in the western field, that during the first 10 months of the year there was loaded from the Mid-Continent field 256,082 cars as against 200,603 cars for the same period of 1917, an increase of 55,479 cars, with practically no increase in amount of equipment, that from April 20 to November 30, 1918, there were loaded from the Mid-Continent field 3,585 solid trains of oil, containing 100,530 cars; that in the month of January the mileage per car per day on tank cars of western refiners was 26.16, in June 56.27, in September 58.4, an increase of 100 per cent in the mileage performance.

27. Conditions were so acute in the oil industry from the transportation standpoint at the first of the year that the Railroad Administration was urged to place large orders for additional tank cars. It was evident, however, that they could not be quickly gotten on account of war needs for steel. The crisis was fully met by the consolidated control of existing cars.

28. Orders were given to effect savings wherever possible without interfering with the war.

29. Much equipment was saved by elimination of nonessential passenger trains, common use of freight cars and repair shops.

30. The Pennsylvania Hudson River tubes were used for the movement of anthracite coal from Jersey terminals to Long Island and the result was a better service.

31. The coal-zone plan in cooperation with the Fuel Administration effected a saving of car-miles and permitted the production and transportaion of several million more tons than would otherwise have been possible.

32. The operation of locomotives under their own steam from factories to points of delivery, frequently at the head of a train, instead of hauling them as dead freight as in the past proved a genuine economy.

33. The sailing-day plan for less-than-carload freight was another improvement of marked value.

34. The elimination of circuitous freight routes produced most encouraging results. A total of 16,863,633 car-miles were saved in this way in eastern and northwestern regions alone.

35. Bad terminal conditions were proving to be a serious handicap when the Government took charge. Terminal managers were appointed at the larger terminals with jurisdiction over terminal facilities of all lines. Freight was routed so as to arrive at the specific terminal where it was to be disposed of. Interchange switching at terminals was largely eliminated. At the Chicago terminals it had been the practice to reconsign practically all coal after arrival. Under Federal control a large portion of the coal arriving at Chicago was consigned directly to consumers from the mines, and crosshauling between terminal lines was greatly reduced.

36. The public was greatly benefited by consolidation of passenger terminals and ticket offices, pooling of repair shops, use of universal mileage tickets and common time-tables.

37. To meet extraordinary war demands, to rush food and other supplies to destination, arrangements were made early in 1918 for consolidated trains of export freight, principally war supplies, food, grain, munitions, and so forth. Under this arrangement 5,090 special export trains from western terminals were handled.

38. The railroads during the first 10 months of Federal control gained 1.9 per cent in ton-miles. The average trainload was increased from 655 tons to 682 tons, a gain of 4.1 per cent. In the first 10 months of 1919 the average trainload was 697 tons. The average miles per freight car were 27.3 in October, 1919, 26 in October, 1918, and 25.9 in October, 1917. In October, 1919, the railroads transported a larger amount of freight than during any other corresponding period in the Nation's history, and, notwithstanding this fact, the car shortage on November 1, 1919, amounted to only 57,160 cars as compared with 141,466 cars on November 1, 1917. It has been stated on reliable authority that the increased efficiency resulting from the unified operation of freight-car equipment amounted to approximately 15 per cent; that, based on a total of 2,522,000 freight cars on line on November 1, 1919, this increased efficiency amounts to approximately 375,000 freight cars; that the capacity for new car construction in this country is about 100,000; that it would therefore take three years and nine months to construct the cars saved by unified operation under Government control; that the shippers of the country were thus benefited immensely.

39. The Government adopted the permit system of handling freight, and without it the vast traffic problems of 1918 could not have been solved. It prevents the loading of traffic in the absence of assurance that it can be disposed of at destination. It means the control of traffic at the source, instead of permitting it to accumulate and congest at destination. Shipment is allowed only when the consignee is prepared to receive it promptly, remove it from the cars, and release the equipment.

40. Increases in wages and in cost of coal, iron, crossties, lumber, and other railway supplies made necessary an increase in passenger and freight rates during Federal control, and it will require several years for economies in organization and operation to be fully felt and their relation to rates ascertained.

41. The Director General appointed a committee to devise a plan for use of inland waterways in connection with the railways. Under private control the waterways were systematically repressed by the railways. The Government proceeded on the theory that the waterways should be coordinated with a unified railway system if the country's transportation facilities were to be fully developed. It is very doubtful whether this can be realized under private control. Such coordination would be of infinite value to the country.

42. Our new merchant marine, constructed at a cost of over a billion dollars, and soon to be first in the world, is, under the present law, to be operated by the Government for five years after the war. Contention is made that it can be operated most successfully if Federal control of railways is at least made concurrent with Federal control of shipping. No class of traffic is more important than our export traffic. Under unified control of railways this traffic may be apportioned among all our ports, rail transportation may be coordinated with ocean transportation, congestion and delay avoided, the entire country more evenly developed, and our foreign trade enlarged more rapidly and more smoothly.

43. It is contended that cars, locomotives, and other railway equipment may be mobilized and utilized in the public interest more effectively under unified control than under diversified private management; that wasteful duplication of plant, service, work, and supervising forces may be saved under the former.

44. Under unified control rates sufficiently high on an average to protect the general situation will insure adequate service on all roads and will protect the public against higher rates than necessary to meet actual demands. Under private control disparity in result of same rates to different companies will always cause dissatisfaction and turmoil.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me inquire of the Senator from Texas what authority, if any, he is relying upon for the statements he is making at this time?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Principally upon the testimony of the first Director General of Railroads, William G. McAdoo, before the Interstate Commerce Committee—McAdoo, the man whose genius and whose patriotism were of wonderful service to this country in one of its most trying hours.

45. Unless final solution of the railroad problem is deferred until economies and possibilities of unified control can be fairly realized, Congress will have acted without a proper grasp of the problem.

46. The Director General stated in his testimony before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce that a period of several years would be necessary to enable Congress and the American people to estimate properly the results of unified operation; and, Mr. President, I regret to say that the Senate and Congress seem to have ignored the testimony and the recommendations of the very man whose advice ought to have had, perhaps, the greatest attention and consideration, in view of his experience and in view of his administrative capacity.

47. He stated that the public is entitled to have a reasonably fair test under peace conditions as to the advantages to be derived from the reforms inaugurated under Government control.

48. He urged, therefore, that Federal control be extended to January 1, 1924.

49. He said that the prospect of early return to private control tended to demoralize the Federal personnel and to make difficult or altogether prevent those physical improvements which are essential to proper testing of consolidated management.

50. In view of the facts above set forth, it is my judgment that failure to give the American people a chance to observe Government operation under the conditions of a fair and normal test is to overlook their welfare and to play into the hands of special interests. To turn the roads back to private interests at the present time is to leave the whole problem in midair, to create confusion and disaster.

THE RAILROAD PROBLEM.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, it is with some hesitation that I venture upon a subject which I know to be most difficult and at which I do not claim to be expert. The railroad problem is the most complicated and the most difficult of all domestic problems now presented for solution. Sometimes I feel that we are bewildered more than we are helped by the advice and the statistics of experts, and I have endeavored to study, in as simple and effective a way as I could, some of the salient features of the railroad situation, and particularly certain aspects of it that are of special interest to the people of my State. I have ascertained some facts that have been helpful and interesting to me, and I submit them in the hope that they may be beneficial to some of my colleagues.

No one can approach the railroad problem as it is now presented without being confronted immediately with the fact that the question of railroad finance is one of the principal causes of the difficulty which this problem raises.

I find that the book cost of all steam railroads of the United States—except switching and terminal companies—is slightly less than $18,000,000,000. (Figures here given are for the year 1916, as given by Commissioner Clark to the Senate committee.) In other words, it would take three or four good Liberty loans for the people of this country to raise enough money to purchase the railroads at their book value. The book value is not necessarily accurate. The true value may be less or greater, and will not be known until the Interstate Commerce Commission completes its valuation work. The capitalization of these railroads—that is to say, their funded debt plus outstanding stocks—is $19,681,000,000, of which 56 per cent is bonds and 44 per cent stocks.

In analyzing the financial condition of any corporation or group of corporations one of the first questions that arises is, What rate of dividends are the companies in question paying upon their outstanding stock? For the year ended June 30, 1916, the total dividends paid were $342,109,396, representing a return of 3.8 per cent on the outstanding stock. For the seven years from 1910 to 1916, both inclusive, the dividends averaged 4.6 per cent.

It is an astounding fact that one-third of all the stock of American steam railroads pays no dividends whatever. In 1916 the percentage of stock that yielded not a penny of dividends was 39.62. For the period of seven years, from 1910 to 1916, the annual average was 35.67 per cent. That more than one-third of the total outstanding stock of American railways pays no dividends is a sad commentary either upon the judgment of American business men or the adequacy and fairness of our policy of regulation.

So much for the financial condition of the railroads prior to Federal control. On December 26, 1917, the President of the United States, acting under authority granted by Congress, issued a proclamation whereby he assumed possession and control of the railroads of this country as of December 28, 1917. A Director General of Railroads was appointed, who began to operate the railroads as instruments of war.

What was the financial arrangement made between the railroads and the Government? The Federal-control act of March 21, 1918, provided that the owners of the railroad properties should receive, as just compensation for the use of the properties, an annual sum equal to the annual net railway operating income for the three years prior to Federal control—1915, 1916, and 1917. Otherwise stated, the Government agreed to pay the railroads as rental for the use of their properties an annual sum equal to their annual net earnings, if we may employ that expression, prior to Federal control. For the railroads under Federal control that sum is approximately $75,000,000 per month, which figure represents not only the monthly rental which the Government is now paying to the railroads for the use of their properties, but also the average net earnings prior to Federal control. Railroad earnings now go to the Government. If the net railway operating income at the present time were in the neighborhood of $75,000,000 monthly, it would mean about an even break for the Government; in other words, the earnings would equal the rental that is paid. If the net railway operating income should drop to, say, $50,000,000 per month, it would mean a loss to the Government of $25,000,000 per month. It would also mean that if the railroads were returned to their owners, they would find their earning power, other things being equal, less by $25,000,000 than it was when the Government assumed possession and control of their properties. With these facts in mind as a background, let us examine the actual results for the first 17 months of Federal operation.

During the first month of Federal control, January, 1918, the net railway operating income was a deficit of $30,000,000—figures include proper allowance for back wages granted the following June. I speak in round figures because they are more readily followed. In other words, for the month of January, 1918, the Government earned from railroad operation $30,000,000 less than nothing, and in addition it had to pay the rental of $75,000,000 per month, indicating a total loss for that month of approximately $105,000,000. In the next month, February, the result was similar, except that the Government's loss was approximately $90,000,000 instead of $105,000,000. During the next month, March, as weather conditions improved, the earnings increased. For that month the earnings were $36,000,000, indicating a loss to the Government of the difference between $36,000,000 and $75,000,000, or $39,000,000. For April the earnings were $45,000,000, indicating a loss to the Government of $30,000,000. For May they were $47,000,000, a loss of $28,000,000. For June they were $70,000,000, loss $5,000,000. At this time, June, 1918, the 25 per cent advance in rates became effective, and the results for July show the effect of the increase. For that month the earnings were $138,000,000, showing a profit to the Government of $63,000,000. From that time on to the end of the year the earnings steadily declined. For August they were $127,000,000, for September $99,000,000, for October $87,000,000, for November $57,000,000, for December $28,000,000. This completes the story for the calendar year 1918. The results for that year may be summed up as follows: In eight of the months the Government sustained a loss which amounted in the aggregate to $360,000,000, and in four of the months there was a profit aggregating $151,000,000, the Government's net loss for the calendar year being somewhat in excess of $200,000,000.

Now let us examine the results for the first five months of the current year. In January, 1919, the earnings were $19,000,000, showing a loss to the Government of $56,000,000. In February it was $10,000,000; loss, $65,000,000. In March it was $11,000,000; loss, $64,000,000. In April it was $26,000,000; loss $35,000,000. For the five months the Government's loss was approximately $270,000,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. GAY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want to ask the Senator from Louisiana if he is aware of the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate, in a report which he made to the Senate—I think it was in 1917 or 1918—gave it as his judgment that the amount which the Government was required under the act of 1918 to pay to the railroad companies as a rental for their equipment was excessive of everything that was reasonable by about $200,000,000 a year? If, instead of having to pay that excessive rental for the property of the railroads, the Government had only been obliged to pay a sum equal to $200,000,000 less than the amount which they did pay, then, of course, the figures which the Senator has just given to the Senate would not have shown a loss to the Government, but a gain to the Government. Is not that true?

Mr. GAY. That may be correct. I do not contend that the rental paid is fair. The rental is based on the three years prior to Federal control, and I am not competent to say whether it is fair or not. It was fixed by the Congress, and should be considered fair until the contrary is shown. If this same situation continued for 25 years, the Government's total loss would represent a sum sufficient to buy all the steam railroads of the United States. Expressed in another way, the Government's loss during the first five months of this year was at the rate of about $650,000,000 a year, which, multiplied by 25, is approximately equal to the total book value of all steam railroads of the country.

I do not give these figures for the purpose of reflecting in any way upon the United States Railroad Administration. I do not know that the railroads could have been operated to better advantage. I do not claim that these losses are not properly chargeable to war expenses. I do believe, however, that this is a high price to pay for a continued experiment in Federal control under peace conditions.

What I have said indicates that if the railroads were turned back to their owners to-night they would find themselves earning less than one-third as much as they earned during the three years prior to Federal control. They then earned, as I have explained, $75,000,000 per month. During the first five months of this year the earnings averaged about $21,000,000 per month. How are railroad earnings to be restored to a proper level?

It is my personal opinion that the problem can be solved to best advantage by leaving the matter to the judgment of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator does not mind; in other words, as I understand the Senator, the amount which the Government was required to pay as a rental for the railroads was based upon abnormal earnings; that is, upon the earnings of the railroads of the United States for 1914, 1915, 1916, and 1917. Those earnings were at a very high level of profit to the railroad companies. They were the earnings during the first three years of the European war, and of course they gave the railroads excessive profits. As I understand the Senator's argument, if those high, abnormal war-profit earnings are applied under peace-time conditions, it is at the disadvantage of the public and for the advantage of the railroad companies. Am I right in my assumption?

Mr. GAY. The Senator is correct. As I say, I do not contend that the rental paid is just what it should be; but I can not say that the railroad earnings for the first three years of the war were abnormally large.

The interests involved are so numerous and so complex and the difficulties are so great that it is well-nigh impossible to prescribe by legislative fiat what would be reasonable and proper earnings for the railroads. If the problem can not be left to the good judgment of an expert and impartial tribunal, then I confess that I see no other solution. The House bill proposes to leave this to the discretion of the commission, as heretofore. I submit that this is a sane and satisfactory solution of a most difficult problem.

THE SHORT-LINE RAILROAD PROBLEM.

In a very real sense it may be said that the so-called "weak" railroads constitute the crux of the railroad problem as it exists to-day. If all the railroads in the United States were able to make a reasonable profit from their operation under existing wages and existing prices, there would be no railroad problem to solve. But the truth is that even before the war a huge percentage of the country's railways operated without a profit. I have already shown that in 1916, which was a favorable year, over one-third of the total outstanding stock paid no dividends whatever. There is one proposition that I have not heard contradicted, and which seems to me to be indisputable, and that is this: A poor, weak, dilapidated railroad, without adequate revenues, without suitable equipment, and without credit is unable properly to function as a public servant. The public is entitled to demand of its transportation agencies reasonable and adequate service; but if the public denies to the railroads a decent livelihood it must be content with inadequate service.

Weak railroads are of two classes or types: First, the larger railroads, with good earning capacity, which have been financially wrecked by wanton corruption and criminal mismanagement. For these I hold no brief. One has only to read the reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission to see to what extent the public trust has been betrayed by certain men for their private gain. No one who has studied the New Haven fiasco and the Rock Island crime can fail to see the need of adequate control over security issues and of strict regulation of the practices of common carriers.

But I do not desire to speak at length of these railroads. Their story is told eloquently enough by their own misdeeds. I desire to speak of the other type of weak railroad, the one which is honestly constructed, economically and efficiently managed, but which is unable, because of conditions over which it has no control, to maintain its credit on the level which is demanded in the public interest.

One of the principal industries in the South, Mr. President, is the lumber industry. It is difficult to exaggerate the importance of that industry, either to the people of the South or to the railroads of the South. Its importance may be gauged by the fact that in a recent case before the Interstate Commerce Commission it was shown, as I am told, that an increase of but 1 cent per 100 pounds on lumber from the producing regions of the South to the Ohio River crossings would increase enormously the earnings of nearly all railroads in southern classification territory. With the single exception of products of mines, lumber and its products constitute the most important tonnage, from a revenue standpoint, of the railroads of this country.

It is a well-known fact that only a few years after the development of the southern lumber industry the forests near the principal railroad routes were exhausted. It became necessary to project short-line railroads, sometimes called "tap lines," into the very heart of the pine forests. Courageous men undertook this task, knowing all the while that the railroads so constructed would have to rely almost wholly on the lumber tonnage. As the timber was cleared away the roads found it necessary to build deeper and deeper into forests, increasing the cost of operation. In some instances the cleared areas were converted into farm lands, the products thereof contributing to the inadequate tonnage of the carrier.

Throughout the South, Mr. President, there are numerous railroads of this character. They represent an aggregate investment of millions upon millions of dollars, they employ thousands of men, and countless towns and villages depend upon them exclusively for transportation service. In the vast majority of cases these railroads are financially weak. They are literally struggling for existence as the forests upon which they depend for freight tonnage gradually disappear.

Almost without exception these small lines of railroad connect with strong trunk lines, such as the Illinois Central, the Louisville & Nashville, and the Southern. Joint through rates on lumber are published from the points of origin on the short lines to Chicago and other markets. The joint through rate is divided between the trunk line and the tap line on a basis agreed upon between them. As a matter of fact, however, the tap line is compelled to take whatever allowance the trunk line gives it, and this allowance in altogether too many instances is wholly insufficient and inadequate. To illustrate, the through rate on lumber from Louisiana and Mississippi mill points to Chicago is approximately 30 cents per 100 pounds. The tap line hauls the lumber from the forest to the junction point with the trunk line and for this service receives in many instances the meager allowance of 2 cents per 100 pounds. The trunk line receives 28 cents.

Now, Mr. President, this is not an exaggeration, but, on the contrary, it is a fairly typical case. These short-line railroads are the "feeders" of the trunk lines. Without them the trunk lines would have practically no lumber tonnage. Like the many small streams whose waters join to form a mighty river, the tap lines of the South gather together a mighty volume of freight traffic that constitutes the very lifeblood of the larger railroad systems. Yet in many cases they receive for this important service as their division of the through rates a mere pittance, which keeps them constantly on the verge of bankruptcy and renders them incapable of performing satisfactorily the service which the public is entitled to demand.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. GAY. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether the case of the short-line roads has been presented to the Interstate Commerce Commission, if he knows?

Mr. GAY. Does the Senator mean recently?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; within a reasonable period.

Mr. GAY. I do not know that it has.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I mean in order to determine what share of the joint rate they are entitled to?

Mr. GAY. I shall be glad if the Senator would furnish any information he may possess on that subject.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am just at the moment inquiring whether the Senator has any information upon that subject.

Mr. GAY. No; I have none available at the moment.

The war burden has fallen very heavily on these short-line railroads; much more heavily than on the larger systems. The Director General of Railroads assumed possession and control of certain railroads and refused to assume possession and control of others. I think it highly important that we clearly understand the basis upon which some railroads were taken over by the Director General while others were not. I believe, Mr. President—and I should be very happy indeed if it could be shown that my belief is unwarranted—that the Director General in many cases refused to take over certain railroads for the sole reason that it would not be advantageous from the point of view of the Railroad Administration's financial showing to take them over. Certain it is that the Director General hastened to assume possession and control of practically every railroad in the country whose financial showing was good, and it is equally certain that he failed to take possession of scores upon scores of weak railroads, particularly in the South, whose financial condition for years has been extremely unfavorable.

It can not be said, Mr. President, that these weak railroads were released from Federal control because they were not performing a war service. Where, may I ask, did the lumber originate with which our cantonments were constructed? Where did the lumber originate with which our shipyards were constructed almost overnight? Where did the lumber originate with which to build, as if by magic, a fleet of boats to cover the seven seas? This lumber, Mr. President, or a very large portion of it, came from the tap lines of the South. They labored feverishly to meet the demands of the war; they responded promptly and patriotically to the country's call; they worked almost exclusively on war business. And the Director General refused to take them over because he thought that it would be more economical, from his point of view, to make them bear the burden themselves.

Whether or not this was honest dealing and in harmony with our traditional American policy of fair play for all, I leave to the judgment of the Senate. Certain it is that the stronger railroads were taken over by the Government and paid a rental that is generally regarded as adequate, if not generous, for the use of their properties. These larger railroads were not affected by the war. Their war burden was borne by the Government, and they received as rental for their properties the same profits that they earned in three prosperous years before the war.

I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that that answers the questions which he asked only a few moments ago.

The short-line railroads were cast adrift. They had to bear alone and unaided the war prices of labor and materials. Their properties were devoted to the Nation's service just as truly as were the properties of other railroads; yet they received not one cent of rental from the Government, and all they have to show for their patriotic response to the Nation's call is red-ink figures on their books.

To show how the short-line railroads of this country have been disadvantageously affected by the failure of the Government to assume possession and control of the properties, and to pay a fair rental for their use during the period of the war, a study has been made of the operations of nine typical short-line railroad companies operating in the States of Mississippi and Louisiana. The result, which I believe to be fairly typical of the general situation, may be summarized as follows:

The Arkansas & Louisiana Midland Railway Co. earned during the three fiscal years 1915, 1916, and 1917 an average net railway operating income of $32,016. Had this railroad been taken over by the Government and paid rental for the use of its property in the same way that other railroads under Federal control are paid, it would have received from the Government the annual rental of $32,016. As a matter of fact, it earned during the year 1918 but $3,964.69. In other words, this railroad received a profit from operation of approximately $28,000 less than it would have received had it been accorded fair and equal treatment on the basis defined by Congress for all railroads under Federal control.

The Gulf & Sabine River Railroad is another typical short-line railroad of the South. Had that railroad been under Federal control it would have been paid as rental for the use of its property during the year 1918 the sum of $24,775. As a matter of fact that railroad was not taken over by the Government, and during the last calendar year it earned a deficit from operation of $12,020.24. In other words, this railroad company earned approximately $36,700 less during the last year than it would have received on the basis recognized as just and fair for all railroads under Federal control.

The Kentwood & Eastern Railway Co. is another good example. Had it been taken over by the Government its standard return would have been $42,888 per year. It actually earned last year $11,226.76.

For other similar railroads the result may be briefly summarized as follows:

Natchez, Columbia & Mobile Railroad Co., standard return $27.56; results for the year 1918 show a deficit from operations of $4,502.48.

Mississippi Eastern Railway Co., standard return $13,654.16; actual results of operation for year ended December 31, 1918, $2,284.50.

Alexandria & Western Railway, standard return $5,728.29; earnings for last year $3,249.32.

The Mansfield Railway & Transportation Co. would have received from the Government $12,244.26. Its actual earnings for 1918 were $2,092.47.

Batesville & Southwestern Railroad Co., standard return $6,725.87; earnings for last year $13,199.54.

Tremont & Gulf Railroad Co. would have received from the Government $84,449.14. Its earnings were $48,948.52.

Had all of these nine railroads been taken over by the United States Government as instruments of war, and had they been accorded the same treatment that was given to the railroads under Federal control, their aggregate rental or standard return for the year 1918 would have been $222,508.28. Their actual return aggregated $68,443.08. In other words, it may fairly be said that unjust, unfair, and discriminatory treatment of these nine railroads cost them in the aggregate the sum of $154,065.20.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator at that point?

Mr. GAY. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Were these facts brought to the attention of the Director General of Railroads by the people operating the roads and was any effort made by them to have these injustices corrected?

Mr. GAY. I am sure they have been brought to the attention of the Director General of Railroads from time to time. The figures which I have presented have been published. The figures can be verified from the reports of these carriers to the Interstate Commerce Commission. They are thoroughly reliable, in my opinion, and I believe they are facts, as I said, that are well known.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Does this same condition exist throughout the country to which the Senator has been referring as existing in Louisiana?

Mr. GAY. I have not only cited railroads in Louisiana, but I have cited railroads in Mississippi and other Southern States.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It probably exists throughout other States.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is pretty general with reference to the short-line roads.

Mr. GAY. I have no doubt that that is true. I shall not dwell on what seems to me to be the unfair, ungenerous, and thoroughly un-American treatment of these railroads during the war. Our present problem is to see to it that the injustice is not continued; and this leads me to a consideration of what seems to me to be a vitally important matter, namely, the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission over the division of rates between common carriers.

By the provisions of section 15 of the act to regulate commerce the Interstate Commerce Commission was authorized to fix the divisions of joint rates when the railroads themselves were unable to agree upon the basis. The section is peculiarly worded, however, and it is by no means certain that it gives the commission authority to fix the divisions of rates except in cases where the rates themselves are established by the commission.

I think it of the highest importance, Mr. President, that the commission be vested with complete and absolute authority over the divisions of all rates and fares of all common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce. I can not conceive of any opposition to this suggestion upon any reasonable or logical ground. It should be made possible for any railroad which considers its allowances or divisions of joint rates to be inadequate or unfair to present the matter to the Interstate Commerce Commission for determination. I confidently believe that such a step would go a long way toward the solution of the problem presented by so-called "weak" railroads. The following paragraph is suggested for incorporation in the act:

> It shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to this act to demand, exact, or charge from any other common carrier an unreasonable, unfair, or discriminatory division of any intrastate rate, fare, or charge.
> The commission shall have full and complete jurisdiction over the division of all rates, fares, and charges of all common carriers subject to this act. Upon complaint or petition of any such carrier that its division or divisions of any rate, fare, or charge is unjust, unfair, or discriminatory, or upon investigation on its own motion, the commission may, after hearing, fix and prescribe such division or divisions as it may consider just, fair, reasonable, and nondiscriminatory, and may award to any carrier such damages or reparation as may have resulted from a violation of this section; and the charging of an unjust, unfair, or unreasonable division shall be conclusive proof of damage.

I believe, Mr. President, that such a provision would go a long way toward solving the weak-railroad problem. It would at least place in the hands of an impartial and unprejudiced tribunal the determination of the fair compensation to be received by all railroads for the service rendered by them, and thus assume fair treatment to certain carriers and certain communities upon whom the war has cast a heavy and an unfair burden.

THE LONG-AND-SHORT-HAUL PROPOSAL.

There has been much discussion of late as to the propriety of enacting legislation that will impose an absolute "long-and-short-haul" rule upon the railroads of this country. I shall refer to this subject very briefly.

When the act to regulate commerce was first enacted, in 1887, the railroads of this country were guilty of gross discrimination, which took several different forms. It sometimes happened that a carrier, without any good reason whatever, would charge more for a short haul than for a long haul over the same line. To illustrate: If there were a shipper at Washington, D. C., whom the railroads desired to favor, they might make the freight rates from Washington to New York lower than the rates from Baltimore to New York.

It is important to understand that there were some instances where the railroads were literally forced by economic conditions to do this. For example, there was a heavy movement of cotton by boat on the Mississippi River between Memphis and New Orleans. The boat rate was, we will say, 15 cents per 100 pounds. The normal rate on cotton by railroad from Memphis to New Orleans may be 25 cents per 100 pounds. If a railroad running between Memphis and New Orleans desired to share in this traffic it was compelled to reduce its rate to 15 cents. Now, suppose there is a point between Memphis and New Orleans, not located on the river, where the normal rate on cotton from Memphis is 20 cents per 100 pounds. Should the railroad, in reducing the New Orleans rate to 15 cents to meet active and compelling water competition, be required also to reduce to 15 cents the rate to the intermediate point, where no competition whatever was felt?

There would seem to be no logical reason for requiring a railroad to depress its rates to a competitive level where no competition exists. A point that is not located on a river is not entitled to the advantages of water transportation. The Mississippi River can not be moved inland. If, therefore, the rate of 20 cents to the interior point is not excessive, and if the rate of 15 cents to New Orleans is compelled by competition, it would seem that the rates fairly reflect the economic conditions.

I believe, Mr. President, that it was these considerations that induced Congress to take the wise course which it took in the act to regulate commerce. The legislation then enacted made it unlawful for a carrier to charge more for a short haul than for a long haul over the same line, but said, in effect, that there might be exceptions to this in instances approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

No railroad is permitted, as I understand it, to charge more for a short haul than for a long haul without filing with the Interstate Commerce Commission an appropriate application for permission to do so. The Interstate Commerce Commission inquires into the merits of the application, sets the matter for formal hearing, studies the water competition, and so forth, and either approves or denies the application according to the facts developed. This insures a rate adjustment that conforms to and reflects the economic conditions.

The inadvisability of a rigid long-and-short-haul law may be further understood by referring to another concrete illustration, and I will develop this at some length, because it is a matter not generally understood. I refer to a situation where a railroad whose line between two points is circuitous desires to meet the competition of a direct line without reducing its rates to intermediate points where the competition is not felt. Freight rates between New York City and points in Ohio are made by percentage relation to the New York-Chicago rates. Without troubling you too much with details, I will say that Pittsburgh is in the 60 per cent group; that is to say, rates from New York to Pittsburgh are 60 per cent of the rates from New York to Chicago. Cleveland, Ohio, is in a 71 per cent group, Toledo and Detroit in a 78 per cent group, and Cincinnati in an 87 per cent group. I desire to call attention particularly to the rates from New York to Toledo, on the 78 per cent basis, and the rates from New York to Cincinnati, on an 87 per cent basis. The New York Central has a reasonably direct route from New York to Toledo. The Baltimore & Ohio has a circuitous route via Washington, D. C., and Cincinnati. In other words, the Baltimore & Ohio, in order to reach Toledo, a 78 per cent point, may haul the traffic through Cincinnati, an 87 per cent point.

What would be the effect of a rigid long-and-short-haul law on this situation? It would be unlawful for the Baltimore &

Ohio to charge more to Cincinnati than to Toledo. It would be faced with two alternatives. It could reduce the Cincinnati rates to 78 per cent, but this would seriously impair its revenues on Cincinnati traffic, and would entirely upset the Ohio rate adjustment. The other alternative would be for the Baltimore & Ohio to continue the 87 per cent basis at Cincinnati, but withdraw entirely from the Toledo business. The effect of this would be to deprive the railroad of its share of Toledo traffic and to deprive Toledo shippers of the benefit of the Baltimore & Ohio's service. The latter is a very important consideration, for there was a time very recently when every available route from the West to the East was sorely needed. Cincinnati would derive no benefit whatever from such an arrangement because her rates would remain unchanged.

The objections to a rigid long-and-short-haul law may be summed up as follows:

1. It would deny to cities where actual water competition exists the benefit of rail rates that are responsive to the competition.

2. It would make it a virtual impossibility for railroads to participate in traffic that could move at lower rates by water.

3. It would give to interior cities the same rates as cities located on navigable rivers, thus artificially equalizing conditions that are dissimilar.

4. It would practically disrupt a substantial part of the country's rate structure.

5. It would make it impossible for a circuitous line to meet the rate made by a short line, thus depriving the people of competitive service.

6. It would cause rates to be made by a rule-of-thumb method instead of on a basis that fairly recognizes economic and geographic advantages.

I deplore the tendency that is manifest in some quarters to raise the question of selfish sectional advantages in connection with this issue. Certain sections clamor for a rigid long-and-short-haul law because they think they will profit by the change; other sections clamor for a continuation of the status quo because they might be prejudiced by a change.

I submit, Mr. President, that no legislation rests on solid ground if it is dictated by or responsive to the selfish interests of any section of the country. If we can not enact legislation that rests upon principle, we had better not enact any legislation at all. A law that permits rates to reflect geographic advantages and economic conditions rests upon solid ground. A law that endeavors to level the mountains and transfer the seaboard to the Rocky Mountains does not rest upon solid ground.

RATES ON SUGAR.

The absolute necessity of vesting the rate-making power in an experienced and unprejudicial tribunal is, I believe, recognized by all students of the problem. The shippers of this country have been constantly up in arms against the United States Railroad Administration because of its arbitrary method of increasing rates. I have had occasion to look into this matter to a certain extent, with a view to determining the real cause of the trouble, and I believe that I am in a position to say with confidence that the real difficulty may be summed up as follows: Shippers do not object to whatever increases may be necessary in transportation rates to afford adequate revenues; but they object most strenuously to arbitrary increases that destroy long-existing rate relationships and give their competitors an unfair advantage. I can make this clear by referring to rates on sugar.

The principal sugar producing and shipping points or districts in the United States are (1) New Orleans, La., and adjacent territory; (2) New York and Philadelphia; (3) California. A large quantity of beet sugar is also produced in Michigan and some of the Western States, but I shall confine my remarks to the three principal shipping centers—Louisiana, the Atlantic seaboard, and the Pacific coast.

One of the best markets for sugar in the United States is the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, and more particularly the cities of Chicago, St. Louis, Louisville, Cincinnati, and other large centers in that part of the country. The quantity of sugar produced in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois is negligible in comparison with the consumption in those States. On the other hand, the production of sugar in Louisiana and in the refineries along the Atlantic coast and in California greatly exceeds the demand in those territories. The result is that economic conditions necessitate a huge movement of sugar from all three centers of production to the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. It is the market for which the three producing districts most earnestly compete.

For many years New York has enjoyed favorable rates to Chicago by rail and lake, the sugar moving from New York to Buffalo by rail and from there to Chicago via the boats on the Great Lakes. New Orleans felt that it was vitally necessary, if its sugar was to reach Chicago in competition with New York, to have at least as favorable rates to Chicago as those from New York to Chicago. These rates have been carefully considered by the Interstate Commerce Commission in several cases, and without troubling you with the details I will say that the whole rate adjustment was established on a very satisfactory basis to all concerned, as follows: New Orleans was given the same rate exactly to Chicago as the rail-and-lake rate from New York to Chicago. At Louisville, Ky., because of water competition on the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers and because of intense market competition, New Orleans was given a rate 7 cents under Philadelphia. This adjustment continued for a number of years. In 1914 there was a 5 per cent increase in the rates from New York and Philadelphia to Chicago and other points in accordance with the decision of the commission in the so-called Five Per Cent case. I do not pretend to be expert in the matter of these rates, but I believe the figures I give to be accurate. They will at least show approximately the relative adjustment.

This case did not apply to rates from New Orleans to the North, but because of the extremely sensitive character of the rate adjustment and because even a small advance in a rate from one producing district without a corresponding advance from a competing district was regarded as wrong, the commission permitted a corresponding increase in the rates from New Orleans to Chicago and other points. This clearly shows how sensitive and how permanent the relative adjustment was considered by the commission, which had given long and careful study to the problem.

Then came the Director General of Railroads, who issued his now famous General Order No. 28. One would have thought that in making increases in rates on sugar the Director General would have endeavored to profit by the long and careful study of the situation made by the commission. One would have thought that he would at least give some consideration to market competition and to the sensitive rate adjustment that had become established. An equal advance in rates from all producing sections would have met the situation admirably. But what did the Director General do? From the East the rates were increased arbitrarily from a commodity-rate basis to the full fifth-class basis. From the West the increase was not to any class basis, but an arbitrary increase of 22 cents per 100 pounds. And from New Orleans another arbitrary increase was made, with the following grotesque result:

The rate from New York to Chicago was increased 65 per cent.

The rate from San Francisco to Chicago was increased 46 per cent.

The rate from New Orleans to Chicago was increased 85 per cent.

The rate from New Orleans to Louisville and St. Louis was increased 143 per cent.

The amounts of these increases are in themselves enough to condemn them—increases from 46 per cent to 143 per cent made at a time when the general increase was understood to be 25 per cent. As a representative of the State of Louisiana, whose people depend in large part upon sugar for their very livelihood, I can not refrain from making a dignified but emphatic protest against such stupendous increases in freight rates. If a general increase of 25 per cent was made on commodities generally, why must sugar be taxed with an increase ranging from 46 to 143 per cent?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. GAY. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I rise to inquire whether the Senator from Louisiana has any explanation to give to the Senate of the remarkable diversity in rates which he has just presented?

Mr. GAY. It is another instance, I think, of the arbitrary method of making rates. This matter, I know, was brought to the attention of the commission, for I was present when a representative gathering appeared there, headed by the governor of the State, the mayor of the city of New Orleans, and business men connected with the various exchanges of that city, who went into the matter in great detail. Some relief has been afforded—I have not the figures before me—but the rates are still very arbitrary.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What excuse or explanation was made for this wide variance in rates, if the Senator is able to state it?

Mr. GAY. It is very hard, indeed, to explain just what excuse or what reason could be offered. From my point of view there does not seem to be any.

I say "taxed" advisedly, Mr. President, because in my opinion increased freight rates levied upon the people of the United States as a war measure are essentially taxes. For the time being that taxing power is lodged not in the Congress of the United States, but in a few railroad men in the office of the Director General of Railroads.

I desire to make it clear, Mr. President, that the people of my State are willing to pay any rates of transportation that their Government may deem reasonably necessary as a war measure, but they protest, and I protest in their behalf, in having such stupendous increases imposed upon a commodity that is vital to our State when increases of only 25 per cent are made on commodities generally. And I further protest against an increase of 143 per cent in rates from New Orleans while increases of only 46 per cent and 65 per cent are made in rates from New York and San Francisco.

Why was it necessary, Mr. President, for the Director General of Railroads to disrupt the rates of this country? Granting the necessity of increased revenues, why could they not have been obtained by means of fair and equitable increases? Why should the careful work done by the Interstate Commerce Commission be overturned in a few hours by the arbitrary action of some subordinate in the office of the Director General?

The people of my State believe, Mr. President—and I believe with them—that they have been most unjustly and unfairly treated. Were this an isolated instance that I have given you it might pass unnoticed; but have you not heard the same story from the grain shippers and the oil shippers of the West? Have you not heard the same story from the live-stock shippers of Texas? Have you not heard the same story with reference to an arbitrary and unjust increase in coal rates to New England? If there is anything, Mr. President, that a free people will not stand for, it is unjust and unfair taxation. From all parts of this broad land have come the most emphatic and determined protests against the increases in freight rates authorized by the Director General of Railroads. The objection was not to the increases or the amount of the increases, but to the unfair, arbitrary, and discriminatory manner in which the increases were made. Taxes amounting to millions of dollars, temporarily for the benefit of the Government but ultimately for the benefit of the railroads, have been levied by railroad men upon the shippers of this country. Never in my experience, Mr. President, have I seen taxes levied in this manner, and never in my experience have I seen such a unanimous and nation-wide protest against the exercise of a Federal power.

I should consider myself, Mr. President, an unworthy representative of the State of Louisiana if I failed to call this situation to the attention of the Senate. The very least thing that the Congress can do is to restore the rate-making power to the Interstate Commerce Commission, in order that the people may feel that taxes, when levied in the form of rates, are imposed after full hearing and investigation, and imposed with equal regard to the rights of all the people.

USE OF THE SOUTHERN PORTS.

It will be my purpose at another time to deal at greater length with a question that is of vital importance to the people of the South, namely, the extent to which the southern ports are used for the export and import of goods. In an address that deals particularly with the present phase of the railroad problem I can not treat this subject with the care that it deserves. At the present time I shall do no more than call attention to the fact that, whatever may be the cause, the Southern ports are not obtaining their fair share of export and import traffic.

During the decade from 1901 to 1910 the value of the imports moving via the three ports of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia was approximately 58 per cent of the value of all imports and exports for the whole country. During the same period the figure for New Orleans and Galveston combined was approximately 12 per cent. Figures for the decade beginning with 1911 are, of course, not available, but for the years 1911 to 1913 the figure for New York, Boston, and Philadelphia is approximately 55 per cent of the total, and for New Orleans and Galveston combined approximately 12 per cent.

It is my opinion, and it is energetically shared by practically all people in the South, that these figures represent an unfair distribution of exports and imports as between the several ports. I challenge any man to show me anywhere in the world a territory that exceeds in productive power that drained by the Mississippi River and its tributaries. Every law of economics and every law of nature would seem to demand that the rich products of this great producing section should move down the Mississippi Valley and find their way to foreign countries through the southern ports. But it seems that the financial interests of a certain section of this country and the influence of certain railroads of this country have conspired to divert the traffic to a few of the northern ports.

I need not tell this Senate what the result of this was when our country suddenly found itself at war. Every railroad serving the port of New York was hopelessly congested. Cars were blocked on the Pennsylvania Railroad as far west as Pittsburgh. The situation became so acute that the military program was actually endangered and the Government found it necessary to take over the railroads as a war measure to insure the expeditious movement of war materials and troops. I do not believe that this situation would have existed, at least to the same extent, if we had distributed our exports more judiciously and more fairly among the several ports.

This is a matter, Mr. President, which is of vital interest to the people of the South. I can not deal with it at greater length at the present time, but I think I ought to make it clear that I intend to do all that I can do to see that the people of the South are fairly treated in this respect.

CONCLUSION.

I trust, Mr. President, that I have not laid too much stress upon matters in which the State of Louisiana is specially interested. I fully appreciate that this problem is too vast to be decided along sectional lines. But I feel that I ought to say that Federal control has borne very heavily upon the people of my State, and that the whole transportation situation is ominous from their point of view. New Orleans, located at the mouth of the greatest river system in the world, finds that the products raised along the river are exported through other ports. Now an effort is being made, in the form of the long-and-short-haul bill, to deprive her of the few advantages that have had recognition. It is proposed to make the rail rates to and from New Orleans in such a way that she might quite as well be located in the mountains of the interior. New Orleans is located on the Mississippi River, and I do not expect to give my approval to any proposition that attempts to move her to the hills or to transfer the Mississippi River to some other section of the country. The rates on sugar from Louisiana have been increased by unprecedented amounts and in arbitrary and discriminatory fashion. The short-line railroads have been reduced to the point of starvation. On behalf of the people I represent I protest against all of these things, and I propose to do all that I can to correct them.

It is quite generally thought, Mr. President, that the railroad problem is extremely difficult and complicated. No one appreciates more fully than I do its difficulties and its complications. But I can not help feeling that, after all, the problems can be reduced to rather simple terms. The public must be given adequate service. Without exception the service rendered by the railroads of this country has been the best transportation service rendered in any country upon the face of the earth. The return of the railroads to private control and the restoration of vigorous and healthy competition will insure adequate service. In the second place, it is necessary that rates and fares be made as low as they can be made consistently with good service. The proper level of rates can be determined only by an expert and unprejudiced tribunal such as the Interstate Commerce Commission. Finally, the railroads must be given adequate earnings. Here, again, the judgment of an expert tribunal must be exercised. The rate-making power, which is a taxing power, must be lodged in an impartial body. The problem presented by the "weak" railroads can be solved by insuring reasonable divisions of through rates and by authorizing the consolidation of such roads, under proper supervision, with larger systems. If we do these things, we shall not go far astray, but we shall have solved in truly American fashion a problem that is typically American.

While there are many provisions of the pending bill which I do not like, and I have supported amendments intended to make it more liberal, I sincerely trust that in the conference between the House and the Senate many of the objectionable features will be eliminated and that there will be enacted into law the necessary legislation which will give the desired relief to the public.

Mr. KIRBY obtained the floor.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman in charge of the bill if he will permit me to ask unanimous consent for the consideration and passage—which will take perhaps 10 minutes—of two resolutions and one bill from the Appropriations Committee, which it is very necessary to have passed to-night, so that they can be sent to the House for the adoption of amendments.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not feel that I have any authority in such a matter. The House certainly will not adjourn or take a recess until these matters are disposed of. The Senator sees the difficulty in the present situation.

Mr. WARREN. I hardly think there will be any opposition to the bills, and I think their disposition will take only a matter of 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. KIRBY. I will say that, so far as I am concerned, I do not expect to speak more than 15 or 20 minutes, and I could speak to-morrow as well as to-night.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not feel that I can give way at this time, although I understand the urgency of the appropriation bills.

Mr. WARREN. It is rather urgent, because the money that is provided for the sick and disabled, both citizen and Army, is exhausted, and this appropriation carries a small amount to carry them over.

Mr. CUMMINS. What difference will it make if they are not taken up to-night?

Mr. WARREN. It might make the difference of their failing to pass.

Mr. CUMMINS. It might make the difference of the railroad bill's failing to pass.

Mr. WARREN. Well, the Senator can refuse, of course.

[Mr. KIRBY addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gerry	Lenroot	Sherman
Brandegee	Gronna	McCormick	Smith, Md.
Calder	Hale	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Capper	Harris	McLean	Smoot
Chamberlain	Harrison	McNary	Spencer
Colt	Henderson	Moses	Stanley
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Sterling
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	New	Sutherland
Dial	Kellogg	Norris	Thomas
Edge	Kendrick	Nugent	Trammell
Elkins	Kenyon	Overman	Underwood
Fernald	Keyes	Phipps	Wadsworth
Fletcher	King	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
France	Kirby	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Robinson	Warren
Gay	La Follette	Sheppard	Wolcott

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that not later than 3 o'clock p. m., Saturday, December 20, the Senate proceed, without further debate, to vote upon the pending bill and all amendments thereto to the final disposition of the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to inquire to what time it is the purpose of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce to take a recess? That will have an important bearing upon the subject.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is my purpose to ask that the Senate shall take a recess until 11 o'clock.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That would allow four hours for debate.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it is the intention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] to call up the sugar bill, and there is an agreement which has been reached with reference to that measure. I understand that about 40 minutes time will be consumed in discussion of it. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] wants to take about 30 minutes and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] about 10 minutes. They would like to have about that much time.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then I suggest that we take a recess until 10 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will modify my request, if it is the desire of Senators, and ask that when the Senate takes a recess this evening it shall be until 10 o'clock to-morrow, and that at 10 o'clock to-morrow, or upon the convening of the Senate, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the bill mentioned by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and that at 11 o'clock, or sooner if the bill referred to by the Senator from Mississippi is disposed of, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the railroad bill, and that at not later than 3 o'clock p. m. to-morrow the Senate shall proceed without further debate to vote upon the railroad bill and the amendment thereto.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not wish to object to the arrangement, but we have a couple of small matters from the Committee on Appropriations that are very necessary, and if we can do so we should like to dispose of them to-night before we take the recess.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that after the unanimous consent is agreed upon I will ask unanimous consent that we lay aside the pending bill temporarily, and then the Senator from Wyoming can dispose of the bills to which he refers.

Mr. WARREN. Then I have no objection to the proposal.

Mr. ROBINSON. I submit the unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have this objection: I know we are all interested in passing the sugar bill, and I do not want to be limited to one hour, because if that one hour is occupied fully we may not be able to reach a proper determination on that bill. I should be very happy to have the Senator from Arkansas not limit the debate on the sugar bill from 10 to 11 o'clock, but let the debate on the sugar bill start at 10 o'clock and go on until we exhaust the time necessary for its disposition, which, I think, is apt to be an hour or an hour and a half, and then take up the railroad bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that after the conclusion of the pending bill, if the bill in which he is interested is not disposed of during the hour that is embraced in my request for unanimous consent, we can then resume the consideration of that bill and finally dispose of it. The reason why I limit it to an hour is upon the assurance of some Senator—I think the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]—that less than an hour would be required to dispose of that bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Arkansas proposes an hour at the beginning of the session to-morrow for the consideration of the sugar bill, and that then, after the termination of the consideration of the railroad bill, such additional time as may be necessary be given to the sugar bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no limitation in the unanimous consent that I have asked upon the consideration of the so-called sugar bill. The railroad bill is before the Senate, and, in all probability, can not be displaced by any other matter. The only reason that I modified my request for unanimous consent respecting the railroad bill was what I understood to be for the purpose of conserving the desire of the Senators who are interested in the sugar bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. LENROOT. May I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas to include in his request for unanimous consent that a vote be had upon the sugar bill at 11 o'clock?

Mr. McNARY. I should be very happy to agree to that.

Mr. HARRISON. I was going to suggest——

Mr. CUMMINS. There is another suggestion, if I may have permission to make it, that after the railroad bill is disposed of, if the sugar bill has not been previously disposed of it can be taken up and held before the Senate until finally acted upon.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the trouble about that is, as the Senate will see, that the sugar bill must go back to the House under the agreement, and the House must agree to the amendment that is to be agreed upon by the Senate. May I not suggest to the Senator from Arkansas to incorporate in his request for unanimous consent that we meet at 10 o'clock that the sugar bill be first considered, that a vote be taken upon it not later than half-past 11, and that the vote on the railroad bill be taken not later than 3 o'clock?

Mr. ROBINSON. I so modify my request.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Make it half-past 3 o'clock.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well; make it half-past 3 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON. I then ask unanimous consent that when the Senate takes a recess to-day it be until 10 o'clock to-morrow; that when the Senate convenes to-morrow it proceed to the consideration of the sugar bill; that not later than 11.30 o'clock a. m. the Senate proceed, without further debate, to vote upon the sugar bill and all amendments thereto; that upon the final disposition of the sugar bill the Senate resume the consideration of the railroad bill; and that not later than 3.30 o'clock p. m. on Saturday, December 20, the Senate proceed, without further debate, to vote upon the railroad bill and the amendment thereto to the final disposition of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I have no objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement so far as the railroad bill is concerned, but this request incorporates the sugar bill with the railroad bill. The sugar bill in a time of profound peace undertakes to continue indefinitely in the executive branch of the Government the war power until June 30, I am now informed, under a subsequent agreement that I know nothing about. I am not in favor of continuing in existence arbitrary, autocratic executive control over one of the most important necessities of life, and I shall object to this agreement to vote at a fixed time upon that bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Pending the objection, if the Senator will withhold his objection, I should like to modify my request.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I withhold the objection.

Mr. ROBINSON. In view of the statement just made by the Senator from Washington, I ask that when the Senate takes a recess it be until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, and that not later than 3 o'clock p. m. on Saturday, December 20, the Senate proceed to vote upon the railroad bill and the amendment thereto to final disposition of the bill, and without further debate.

Mr. McNARY. I object to that. I am willing to consent to the first request made by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the Senator realizes there is objection to that request.

Mr. CURTIS. Then let us vote to-night.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Go ahead!

Mr. GAY. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Wait a moment, Mr. President. I have some remarks to submit upon that proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Senate. After having spoken for about five minutes,

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield for a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. I presume, in order to renew the request for unanimous consent for the final disposition of the pending bill, it will be necessary now to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. THOMAS. No; no business has been transacted since the last call.

Mr. ROBINSON. In view of that statement I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate takes a recess to-day it be until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning; that when the Senate reconvenes to-morrow it proceed to the consideration of the sugar bill; that not later than 11.30 o'clock to-morrow the Senate proceed without further debate to vote upon that bill and all amendments thereto to its final disposition; that after the disposition of the sugar bill the Senate immediately resume the consideration of the railroad bill; and that not later than 3.30 o'clock p. m. to-morrow the Senate proceed to vote, without further debate, upon that bill and the amendment thereto to its final disposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, as I just entered the Chamber, I did not catch all of the request.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will state it again, and I ask the attention of Senators. I ask that when the Senate take a recess to-day it be until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning; that upon convening to-morrow the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sugar bill; that not later than 11.30 o'clock to-morrow morning the Senate proceed to vote upon that bill and all amendments thereto to the final disposition of the bill; that immediately upon the disposition of the sugar bill the Senate resume the consideration of the pending bill, the railroad bill; and that not later than 3.30 o'clock p. m. to-morrow the Senate proceed, without further debate, to vote upon that bill and the amendment thereto to the final disposition of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have no objection; but it is my recollection of the rule that it is imperative that the roll must be called before a unanimous-consent agreement of this kind can be entered into.

Mr. ROBINSON. I made that suggestion myself when I started to submit the request, and I was of that opinion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The rule is imperative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that a quorum call should be made. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gerry	Lenroot	Smoot
Brandegee	Gronna	McCormick	Spencer
Calder	Hale	McKellar	Stanley
Capper	Harris	McNary	Sterling
Chamberlain	Harrison	Moses	Sutherland
Colt	Henderson	New	Thomas
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Trammell
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Underwood
Dial	Kellogg	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Edge	Kenyon	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	Keyes	Robinson	Warren
Fernald	King	Sheppard	Williams
Fletcher	Kirby	Sherman	Wolcott
France	Knox	Smith, Md.
Gay	La Follette	Smith, S. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is upon the proposed unanimous-consent agreement submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 267) authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1919, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. J. Res. 267. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1919, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3576) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection of a Federal building at Ozark, Christian County, Mo.; and

A bill (S. 3577) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the present Marine Hospital site in the city of St. Louis and to acquire a suitable and sufficient tract of land in or adjacent to the city of St. Louis for the construction of a complete hospital plant for the treatment of beneficiaries of the war-risk insurance and the Public Health Service; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 11223) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Employees' Compensation Commission and the Public Health Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Employees' Compensation Commission and the Public Health Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, namely:

EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION.

Contingent expenses: For furniture and other equipment and repairs thereto, $750; law books, books of reference, periodicals, stationery, and supplies, $850; experts and temporary assistants in the District of Columbia and elsewhere to be paid at a rate not exceeding $8 per day, and temporary clerks, stenographers, or typewriters in the District of Columbia to be paid at a rate not exceeding $100 per month, $7,650; medical examinations, traveling and other expenses, and loss of wages payable to employees under section 21 of the act of September 7, 1916, and for miscellaneous items, $750; in all, $10,000.

Employees' compensation fund: For the payment of compensation provided by "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, including medical, surgical, and hospital services, and supplies provided by section 9, and the transportation and burial expenses provided by sections 9 and 11, $1,100,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the compensation heretofore or hereafter paid by the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to or on account of employees for disability or death resulting from personal injuries sustained while in the performance of their duties shall be in full satisfaction of the claims of such employees or their legal representatives against the United States.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

For medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for war-risk insurance patients and other beneficiaries of the Public Health Service, including necessary personnel, regular and reserve commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, clerical help in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, maintenance, equipment, leases, fuel, lights, water, printing, freight, transportation and travel, maintenance and operation of passenger motor vehicles, and reasonable burial expenses (not exceeding $100 for any patient dying in hospital), $2,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 6, after the word "commission," to insert ", the Bureau of War Risk Insurance."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether this amount is in addition to the amount heretofore carried in the appropriation bills for the Public Health Service. We have made very liberal appropriations for that bureau.

Mr. WARREN. But we did not make a sufficient appropriation. We did not appropriate the amount of the estimates, and the understanding was then that we should have to make a further appropriation this session, before the 1st of January. They are entirely out of funds, or will be before the 24th, to the last dollar, I am informed.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator indicate what this large appropriation is for? We have made very liberal appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. The appropriation is a little more than a million dollars. The odd dollars are for contingent expenses, and the million dollars are for the compensation of Government employees, those who are injured in the performance of their duties while working for the Government, under the legislation which was passed long ago, and which is taken care of by a commission of three persons, one woman and two men.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether the appropriation heretofore made was not calculated upon the needs of that department, and contemplated the injured persons and their demands, as stated by the Senator?

Mr. WARREN. It was not intended to go any farther than probably the 1st of January, or possibly the middle of January; but it has already taken even more than it was then thought would be expended.

Mr. KING. It is not for civilian employees, if I may be permitted that expression?

Mr. WARREN. No; it is for Government employees, those working in the Government service. I will say to the Senator that there was an attempt on the part of the lawyer of the Emergency Fleet Corporation—in fact, not an attempt, but he advised the commission that they should pay the losses through death and injury of those engaged in shipbuilding; but John Barton Payne, the chairman of the Shipping Board, has ruled otherwise, and, in fact, the committee refused to recognize that claim or to appropriate it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the bill the following:

HOSPITAL AT BROADVIEW, COOK COUNTY, ILL.

That so much of an act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 5, 66th Cong.), as reads as follows: "The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to acquire and complete immediately the hospital at Broadview, Cook County, Ill., authorized and appropriated for by an act entitled 'An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines,' approved March 3, 1919" (Public act No. 326, 65th Cong.), is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed immediately to acquire the uncompleted hospital building at Broadview, Cook County, Ill., and the site thereof, consisting of 320 acres, more or less, and to cause the work on said hospital building to be completed and the five proposed auxiliary buildings to be constructed in accordance with plans and specifications transmitted to the Shank Co. July 15, August 16, and September 23, 1919, and the appropriation therefor contained in the act entitled 'An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers,' approved March 3, 1919, together with such further changes in said buildings as may be found necessary or desirable: Provided, That if in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury the aforesaid buildings do not constitute a reasonably complete working hospital for the needs and purposes of the Public Health Service, he is hereby authorized to submit an estimate for such further appropriation as may be required, not to exceed $2,500,000, to enable him to construct such additional buildings as he deems necessary, together with their mechanical equipment, laundry machinery," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to the bill the following:

BUREAU OF WAR RISK INSURANCE.

Military and naval compensation: For the payment of military and naval compensation, funeral expenses, services, and supplies, as authorized by law, $30,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Employees' Compensation Commission, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and the Public Health Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920."

JOINT COMMISSION ON RECLASSIFICATION OF SALARIES.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 135) extending the time for filing final report of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, created by section 9, Public, No. 314, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved March 1, 1919, to a date not later than March 12, 1920, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 267) authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1919, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1919, on the 20th day of said month; and the provisions of the resolution (H. J. Res. 260) entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1919," of this session of the Congress be, and the same are hereby, rescinded.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SEWERS AT LITTLE CHUTE, WIS.

Mr. CALDER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10402) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permission to the municipal authorities at Little Chute, Wis., to construct, maintain, and operate sewers on certain Government property and under the United States canal at Little Chute, Wis.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission to the municipal authorities of the village of Little Chute, in the county of Outagamie, in the State of Wisconsin, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate sewers and appurtenant works on United States property and under the United States canal at said village: Provided, That such permission shall be subject to such conditions, restrictions, rules, and regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe, and that the construction of such sewers and works shall not be commenced until plans therefor prepared by the said authorities shall have been submitted by them to the Chief of Engineers and shall have received his written approval: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may terminate the said permission whenever and at such time as in his judgment the public interests require.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSQUEHANNA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 8992) for the construction of a bridge across the Susquehanna River at Laceyville, Wyoming County, Pa., and I submit a report (No. 340) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct within the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania a bridge, with approaches thereto, across the Susquehanna River at Laceyville, Wyoming County, Pa., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM T. ELLIS (S. DOC. NO. 45, PART 2).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

In further response to Senate resolution 82, adopted by the Senate on June 17, 1919, requesting the Secretary of State to furnish information regarding the detention of Mr. William T. Ellis, American correspondent of the New York Herald, at Cairo, Egypt, I transmit herewith a supplementary statement containing information on the subject requested in the resolution.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 18 December, 1919.

RECESS.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow forenoon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, December 20, 1919, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 19, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in heaven, for all the great and daring men who are seeking by every legitimate means to unite the family of mankind into a great brotherhood, that the world may be a safer, saner dwelling place—the scientist, who is seeking to solve the mysteries which environ us; the inventor, who is devising methods to eliminate time and space; the explorer, who seeks every nook and crannie in the broad earth; the doctor, who is looking for the cause of disease and remedies to remove it and thus prolong life; the statesman, who would bring order out of chaos and establish just and equitable laws; the philanthropist, who would reduce suffering; the teacher, who would develop all that is best in childhood and youth; the man of God, who would establish larger faith, brighter hopes, deeper love, remove all selfish desires—the root of all evil—to the glory and honor of Thy holy name, after the manner of the Christ, the world's great Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of Senate bill 2789, for the consolidation of forest lands in the Sierra National Forest, Calif., and for other purposes, from the Committee on Agriculture to the Committee on the Public Lands. The parliamentary clerk has called my attention to this subject and has explained it to the Committee on Agriculture. The Committee on the Public Lands has jurisdiction.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks a rereference of the bill referred to from the Committee on Agriculture to the Committee on the Public Lands, stating that it is agreeable to both committees. Is there objection?

Mr. CANDLER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask what the character of the bill is?

Mr. SINNOTT. It is a bill for the consolidation of forest lands in the Sierra National Forest.

Mr. CANDLER. That is the proper jurisdiction?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes. It should be in Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GRAZING LANDS IN UTAH.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to recommit to the Committee on the Public Lands the bill (S. 3016) to authorize the disposition of certain grazing lands in the State of Utah, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to recommit to the Committee on the Public Lands the bill S. 3016.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the bill about?

Mr. SINNOTT. That is a bill reported by the Committee on the Public Lands, authorizing the disposition of certain grazing lands in the State of Utah, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RATIFICATION OF PROHIBITION AMENDMENT BY THE STATE OF ARKANSAS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the secretary of state of Arkansas, announcing the ratification by the legislature of that State of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution of the United States on January 14, 1919:

STATE OF ARKANSAS,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Little Rock, December 16, 1919.

The honorable the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Pursuant to the request of the Forty-second General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, I am inclosing certified copy of house joint resolution No. 1, ratifying the Federal prohibition amendment.

Yours, sincerely,

TOM J. TERRAL,
Secretary of State.

ELECTION OF A MEMBER OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. KITCHIN. I move, Mr. Speaker, the election of Mr. HUMPHREYS, of Mississippi, on the part of the minority as a member of the Committee on the Territories.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves the election of Mr. HUMPHREYS, of Mississippi, as a member of the Committee on the Territories. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and Mr. HUMPHREYS was declared elected.

FIFTY-FOURTH NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT, GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submits a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 41.

House concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of the report of the Fify-fourth National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed as a House document 1,500 copies of the Journal of the Fifty-fourth National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the year 1920, not to exceed $1,700 in cost, with illustrations, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House and 500 for the use of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

FINAL REPORT OF GEN. JOHN J. PERSHING.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, I submit another resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submits a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 40.

House concurrent resolution to print Final Report of Gen. John J. Pershing.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Final Report of Gen. John J. Pershing, commander in chief American Expeditionary Forces, be printed as a House document, without the accompanying maps and charts, and that 100,000 additional copies be printed, of which 30,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 70,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of this resolution I wish to say that there has been an unusual demand for copies of Gen. Pershing's report. The report contains about 100 pages of printed matter, not including maps and charts. We have been unable to get an estimate of the cost of printing it with the maps, but in order to supply the present demand we thought it wise to report this resolution. We have limited the number of copies to 100,000, and the cost of the same will be $4,212.71.

I might say that some Members of the Senate committee have in mind a proposition to have printed a more elaborate edition of this report, containing some illustrations, but the printing of 100,000 copies at this time will not interfere with any future plans.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIESS. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Does not the gentleman think that before he asks for action by the House he should find out what it will cost to have the maps included in the report? They would be very useful in understanding the situation and the report of Gen. Pershing.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, in reply I will say that we have been trying to get that information for several days, ever since the report was issued.

Mr. DYER. The report was printed here at the Government Printing Office, and surely the plates containing the maps are at the Government Printing Office. I do not see why we can not get an estimate.

Mr. KIESS. I do not think the maps were printed at the Government Printing Office, because they have not been able to give us the figures on what it would cost to reproduce them.

Mr. DYER. The report of Gen. Pershing was printed at the Government Printing Office, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. KIESS. That is true.

Mr. DYER. And they surely have the plates there for the maps. Otherwise how could they publish the document?

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, it is purely a matter for the House to decide, but many Members have called up and asked the Committee on Printing for copies of this report, and as the House expects to adjourn to-morrow the committee thought they would be doing the membership a favor to get this resolution passed and the report printed. Now, if it is the wish of the House to wait until we can get a report on the cost of printing with the maps included, I am perfectly willing to do it, but I am very frank to say that, in my judgment, the expense will be so great that the House will hesitate to authorize the printing of same.

Mr. EMERSON. There will be such a demand for them that you will be compelled to have more printed in the future, anyway, will you not?

Mr. KIESS. We made the number small, thinking that the number would take care of the immediate demand. This will give each Member of the House 160 copies.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIESS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This document is all set up in the Government Printing Office, is it not?

Mr. KIESS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If you want a large number of them, why do not you ask for them now? No additional setting up of type will be required.

Mr. KIESS. That is true, but one reason which determined our action is the great scarcity of print paper. So far as that is concerned, the plates will not be destroyed. The printing of the usual number, 1,345 copies, cost $81.68. Each additional thousand would cost $43.90, so it is very easy to figure cost of same.

Mr. GARNER. How many does the resolution call for?

Mr. KIESS. One hundred thousand, at a total cost of $4,212.71.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

REVISION AND CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, I submit another resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submits a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 266) authorizing the printing of the bill to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Committee on Revision of the Laws in the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to print addifions and amendments to H. R. 9389, or other bills concerning the same subject, if in its judgment necessary, in the style and form in which said bill is now printed, with such variations thereof as the said committee deems in the interests of efficiency and economy, and to so continue until final enactment thereof in both Houses of the Congress of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

REPORT OF RECLASSIFICATION COMMISSION.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House joint resolution 263, which was introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and reported from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to extend the time when the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries may make its report from January 12 to March 12.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read House joint resolution 263, extending the time for filing the final report of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, created by section 9 of Public, No. 314, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved March 1, 1919, to a date not later than March 12, 1920, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the time for filing of the final report to Congress of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, created by section 9, Public, No. 314, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved March 1, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, extended to a date not later than March 12, 1920: Provided, That the work of completing the preparation of said final report and the printing thereof shall be accomplished within the limits of the appropriations heretofore made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this resolution reported to extend the life of the Reclassification Commission until March 1?

Mr. LEHLBACH. From January 12 to March 12.

Mr. GARNER. You are not going to consider that by unanimous consent?

Mr. CANNON. Why not?

Mr. GARNER. I am going to object.

Mr. CANNON. I think if the gentleman understood the situation he would not object.

Mr. GARNER. I might not object if I understood the situation. I am now informed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], who have this matter under consideration in the Appropriations Committee, that probably this resolution ought to pass. The reason I reserved the right to object is that I have been observing this commission and I do not believe they have been performing the functions they ought to have been performing since they were appointed.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. GARNER. I have already withdrawn my objection, but I desire to state that I believe if this commission had been diligent they could have performed their duties and concluded their labors by the 1st of January.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I do not think these matters ought to be acted upon hastily. This resolution has just been reported. Is this the House resolution or the Senate resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is the House resolution.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The House joint resolution introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is also a Senate resolution that has passed, has it not?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No; it was reported in the Senate yesterday, but it has not been acted upon.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was under the impression that it had passed. I do not see any reason why we should act hastily upon these matters by unanimous consent. Let it go to the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This can be said in favor of immediate or early action: Under the law which was passed this commission is required to make its report on the second Monday in January.

Mr. SNELL. Why is it not a good idea to have the report as early as possible?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If some action is not taken, this commission, in order to comply with the law, must necessarily conclude its investigation and make a hurried report that would not be as thoroughly considered as it will be if time is given for more deliberate consideration.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think the report will be of much value anyhow.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That may or may not be true, but Congress has appropriated, if I recollect correctly, something over $100,000 for the expenses of this commission. It seems to me that regardless of what may be the character of that report certainly Congress and the country is interested in seeing that they have time to give full consideration to it, so that when the report comes here it may be backed up with all the information that they may have collected.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for me to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will yield.

Mr. SNELL. Is this the commission that Mr. Keating is connected with?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is.

Mr. SNELL. This is to give him more time to edit labor papers in which he may make attacks on Members of Congress.

Mr. GARNER. And to give two months more salary.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know about Mr. Keating's connection with other activities.

Mr. SNELL. If he had given his entire attention to the business of this commission instead of to outside activities, I believe the report could have been made by this time. Personally I am opposed to extending the life of the commission.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Keating is not the only member of the commission; he is only one of five. I have only talked with Mr. Cooper, of Wisconsin, and Mr. Hamlin, of Missouri, with reference to the necessity of extending the time for two months. As they explain it to me, this does not involve a single dollar more of appropriations.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; but a good many dollars of extra expenditure.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It does for a period of two months, but they say they will not ask Congress for an additional appropriation.

Mr. SNELL. It involves additional salaries for two months.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It may be a proper case, but there was never a commission created with an appropriation which they had not been able to expend within the life of the commission fixed by statute that the commission did not want the time extended so they could expend the balance of the money. This may be a proper case, but it ought not to come up by unanimous consent.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the House ceases to do business to-morrow, it will be January 5 before action can be taken upon it.

Mr. SNELL. Will not that give them sufficient time?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But the commission ought to know whether or not the life of the commission is going to be extended.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They ought to have made the request some time ago.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That may be true.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It may be a proper case, but when a matter is tried to be rushed through it is always worthy of examination.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The commission advised me—that is, the two gentlemen that I talked with—that they have been doing everything they could with the hope that they would be able to present a full report to Congress at the time stated. They say that they regret very much that they have to ask for this extension, but I submit that Congress having made the appropriation and authorized the commission to make the investigation we ought to give them a reasonable time to present the results of their investigation to Congress, so that we may have the full facts before us.

Mr. SNELL. How long has this commission been in existence?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think it was appointed March 12, but I am not certain of the date.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is there not any way by which we could put the time off still further for them to make a report?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I should be opposed to it if it carried any expense.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman has fixed a date and must have it that way and no other way or he will object?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I shall not object to any extension.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think if you extended it a year it might be a profitable extension.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I shall make no objection to extending it, but I do not think it is necessary to extend it beyond 60 days. This is only for the purpose of enabling the commission to compile what data it has gathered and present it in a systematic form to Congress without dumping it on Congress in a form that is not intelligible.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman says they will not ask any further appropriation; does that mean that the money will last until March 12?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am so informed, that the appropriation heretofore made will be amply sufficient to pay all expenses of the commission up to the time indicated.

Mr. SNELL. Is that the reason that they decided on that date, because they want to expend all of the balance of the money?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; on the contrary, the gentlemen stated that they might be able to report at an earlier date.

Mr. SNELL. It does not seem to me that we have proper knowledge and information to warrant the extension of the time of this commission. It has been settled by act of Congress, and unless there is further information before the House I think I ought to object.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the resolution ought to pass. I should be perfectly content if the commission was not to report for a year. I have not been in harmony or sympathy with many things that commission has done.

Mr. SNELL. Then why does the gentleman want to extend the lifetime of the commission? Why not end it, put it out of the way as quickly as possible?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this is the most skillfully organized raid on the Treasury I have known. If I had my way about it I would bury the commission and the report beyond resurrection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am not saying that I am altogether satisfied or that I am in accord with what they have done, but I do think that they ought to have an opportunity to present the facts and information that they have gathered.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey? The Chair hears none. This resolution is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 263.

Resolved, etc., That the time for filing of the final report to Congress of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, created by section 9, Public No. 314, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved March 1, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, extended to a date not later than March 12, 1920: Provided, That the work of completing the preparation of said final report and the printing thereof shall be accomplished within the limits of the appropriations heretofore made.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LEHLBACH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

MAKING GOLD CERTIFICATES LEGAL TENDER.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 3458, to make gold certificates of the United States payable to bearer on demand legal tender.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 3458. Is there objection?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this bill come with a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. PLATT. There is a unanimous report from the committee. The bill simply makes gold certificates legal tender in order to relieve a famine of $1 and $2 bills, which is very acute at this time.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have no objection to relieving that kind of a famine. What is the trouble? Why are they not legal tender?

Mr. PLATT. Nine hundred and ninety-nine people out of every thousand believe that they are legal tender now.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand; and they are used as legal tender.

Mr. PLATT. Yes; but once in a while there is a smart lawyer who knows they are not, and when they are taken into court for the purpose of making tender on some contract, which somebody wants to squeal out of, occasionally this smart lawyer will make trouble. There is, of course, no reason why they should not be legal tender.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted., etc., That gold certificates of the United States payable to bearer on demand shall be, and are hereby, made legal tender in payment of all debts and dues, public and private.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts which are inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PLATT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, on October 31, when the bills on the Private Calendar were before the House, there were a number of bills left over on a third reading. I would like to have them called up at this time in their regular order as unfinished business and put upon their passage.

ARTHUR WENDLE ENGLERT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 795) for the relief of Arthur Wendle Englert.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned on the day on which these bills were last under consideration the previous question had been ordered, and the question was on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to recommit the bill which has just been reported by the Clerk. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RECLASSIFICATION COMMISSION.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in connection with the request for extension of time within which the Reclassification Commission shall make its report, by inserting a statement which has been handed me by Mr. Cooper, of Wisconsin, and Mr. Hamlin, of Missouri, setting forth the reasons for asking the extension.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter from Mr. Cooper and Mr. Hamlin. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. A statement, not a letter.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object; but I would like to have had the letter read before we considered the proposition, in which case probably it would not have been considered.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, on the contrary, I think it would have fortified the request.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I fear the gentleman withheld it because he was afraid it would destroy his contention.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, not at all.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not object.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, is there anything in the letter that will guarantee to us that the members of this commission, while we are paying them salaries, will not continue to attack Members of Congress because Members of Congress vote their convictions here?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is not a letter, but is a statement which was handed in by those two gentlemen. It is confined solely to the reasons why this extension is necessary. I do not know of any attacks that have been made on Members of Congress by members of this commission, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. They have been mailed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If they have been made, I am as much opposed to it as is the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman state the reason why the statement comes only from two members of the commission? Is it because the third member has other duties which occupy his attention?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is a copy of a statement that was handed to Mr. GOOD, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman does not understand that the work of the commission is left to those two?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to is as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON THE PROGRESS OF THE WORK IN HAND BY THE CONGRESSIONAL JOINT COMMISSION ON RECLASSIFICATION OF SALARIES.

The Congressional Commission on Reclassification of Salaries and its staff of retained experts and employees detailed from the departments are now rounding up their work. They are driving toward the completion of the largest and most important classification of positions and standardization of proposed salaries ever undertaken.

All told, 107,000 positions of employees of all ranks in scientific, administrative, clerical, skilled trades, and other services have been involved. The commission's jurisdiction is limited to the positions in the Federal departments and independent establishments and the municipal government within the District of Columbia. But the total of these positions is over 30,000 more than have been studied in any previous classification of positions of a city, a State, or a nation. It also embraces a greater variety.

The basic work of classification is now at the stage where specifications of the various classes of positions in each service are being issued and studied by Cabinet officers and other department heads and by representative committees of administrators and of employees. Each set of these class specifications includes: (1) The title of the class of positions; (2) a statement of the duties of the positions in the class regardless of their departmental location; (3) a statement of the qualifications required for the performance of these duties; and (4) suggested lines of promotion, on a merit basis, from the class and to the class.

These specifications are the basis for the hearings now being held by the commission—hearings which will save much time for Congress later. At these hearings briefs are presented and suggestions are offered on two topics: (1) The classification itself, as shown by the specifications, and (2) proposals on salary schedules for the classes specified. Never before in the history of the Government have department heads, administrators, and employees been called on to give such concentrated attention to the duties of and qualifications required for the work of the various classes of positions. Never before have salary proposals been perforce related to specifications.

The titles of positions appearing in past appropriation bills have had virtually no specifications of duties or qualifications back of them. Statistics being compiled for the commission for each class of positions will show the facts on inequalities of pay for the same character of work. These inequalities have bred unrest in the Government service. The newer Members of the Congress may not appreciate the need for nor the magnitude of the work of this reclassification. But the older Members, on whose initiative the commission was created, were moved by a realization of the need. They realized not only the lack of uniformity in pay for the same work, but also the lack of a scientific standard for fixing salaries.

Parallel to its scientific classification of positions, the commission is carrying forward work on salary schedules. These will, as a rule, include a minimum and a maximum for each class. For the fixing of the schedule for each class, facts have been gathered and are being studied on the following: (1) Salaries paid outside the Government service in positions where the duties and specifications involved are comparable to those of Government positions; (2) minimum, most common, and maximum Government salaries now paid in the District of Columbia; (3) what salaries administrators say are required to secure and to retain efficient employees; (4) what the employees concerned say they think they should receive; (5) changes since 1914 in the cost of living. One important consideration is that of equity in pay not only as between the classes of varying rank within a given service but as between the classes in the different services.

To gather and to consider comprehensively all the facts involved means a vast amount of detail work. Classifications elsewhere have required years. The Congress gave the present commission months. The act provides that January 12 next is the time for its final report. Its members were appointed last March. The commission proceeded without delay to organize, employ a clerk, and get its work under way. It consulted, besides officials who had been connected with departmental efforts at classification, experts who had been connected with municipal and State classifications, both East and West, and with the classification since then adopted unanimously by the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada.

The commission retained the firm of American experts who had done the Canadian classification to direct the work as its headquarters staff. It retained also a member of the staff of a municipal civic agency to be in immediate charge of special economic and employment research. It secured from the departments, as authorized by the act, the detail of a statistician, a staff of classifiers and investigators, and a force of record clerks, stenographers, and typists. The detailed classifiers and investigators, as a rule, had not had previous experience in classifying positions. But all have worked with a will in applying the principles of a classification on the basis of duties and qualifications. Moreover the commission has had the assistance of advisory committees of civic leaders, employees, and administrators.

Much night work is being done just now by the commission and its staff. The object is to bring the commission's work to a finish by January 12. Many of the employees detailed from the departments have expressed a willingness, if necessary, to give up taking annual leave which they had deferred with a view to vacation during the Christmas holidays.

By holding night sessions from now until January 12, the commission could turn in a classification of positions and proposed salary schedules together with a hurried report on that date. But if it had a few more weeks it could better digest the vast amount of material in hand, add to the statistical exhibits, and prepare a matured report on the reasons for its recommendations. These facts properly raise the question of the advisability of extending the time of the commission. Some pertinent points are:

1. No addition to the appropriation for the work of the commission would be required by an extension not exceeding 60 days.

2. The House Committee on Appropriations has decided to proceed with the adoption of the annual appropriation bills even if the report of the Commission on Reclassification of Salaries is made on January 12. This committee holds that the proposed reclassification of positions and standardization of salaries is so important that the report of the commission and its proposed bill will require profound study for some months by the Members of the Congress.

3. The prospective passage of the appropriation bills prior to the passage of a reclassification act, defining classes and establishing rates of compensation, adds to the intricacy of the problems of installation and administration of the reclassification on which the commission is expected to make recommendations.

4. This Federal classification will undoubtedly set a precedent for others, in States, cities, and industries throughout the Nation.

Under all the circumstances it would be reasonable for the Congress to extend the time for this important and far-reaching piece of work so that the commission's report shall be made not later than March 12.

EASTERN TRANSPORTATION CO.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5346) for the relief of the Eastern Transportation Co.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN T. ADAMS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5807) for the relief of John T. Adams.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EMMA J. SPEAR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3211) for the relief of Emma J. Spear.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DUPRÉ, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MRS. MAMIE DUFFER.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1266) for the relief of Mrs. Mamie Duffer, of Shannon, Miss.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANDLER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ARUNDLE SAND & GRAVEL CO.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5345) for the relief of Arundle Sand & Gravel Co.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute for this bill the bill S. 1670, which has been favorably reported from the Senate and is on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to substitute for this bill a similar bill passed by the Senate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, Senate bill 1670 is on the calendar as unfinished business now. I have no objection, but what I wanted to inquire was which bill we are considering?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the committee substituted the Senate bill informally without right, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania now asks unanimous consent that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill, and that consent be given that the House consider the Senate bill. The Chair hears no objection.

Senate bill 1670 was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House bill of similar title will lie upon the table.

There was no objection.

W. L. ROSE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1275) for the relief of W. L. Rose.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I can not find any such number on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It is under the head of unfinished business.

Mr. STEVENSON. The Clerk read the Private Calendar, and there is no such bill on the Private Calendar.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FAXON, HORTON & GALLAGHER, AND OTHERS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6377) for the relief of Faxon, Horton & Gallagher; Long Bros. Grocery Co.; A. Rieger; Rothenberg & Schloss; Riley, Wilson & Co.; and Van Noy News Co.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EDMONDS. This bill was ordered by the Committee of the Whole House to be laid on the table. Does that have to be accepted in any way by the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it ought to be laid upon the table by the House.

Mr. EDMONDS. Then the opponents of the bill——

The SPEAKER. The question is on laying the bill on the table——

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have recognition on this bill. I am absolutely convinced of the merits of it, and I will take but a very short time of the House if it would consent. I think I am entitled to that as a right.

Mr. EDMONDS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. How much time?

Mr. EDMONDS. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I will be very brief.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I do not know, but I will certainly consume as little time as possible, very little time.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman must yield a specific time.

Mr. EDMONDS. I will yield the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. That would not be enough. Will the gentleman yield me 30 minutes. I will finish within that time if I can.

Mr. EDMONDS. I will yield the gentleman 15 minutes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Let me have 30 minutes, because it is your committee that makes a favorable report, and it has been reported by three different claims committees favorably.

Mr. CANNON. Did the Committee of the Whole House recommend that it lie on the table?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. A motion to lay on the table is not debatable. The only way the gentleman could get time is by unanimous consent. The question is on the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman to yield me 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair made an inadvertent statement. The gentleman has no time to yield because the motion to lay on the table is not debatable except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I hope there is no Member of the House who desires to keep the House from hearing a meritorious proposition, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. I object.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as far as I am concerned I have no objection if the bill be postponed——

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Very well, I am perfectly willing if I can have an opportunity to present it to the House fairly. I ask unanimous consent that it be postponed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the consideration of this bill be postponed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that we proceed to the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar in the House as in Committee of the Whole House and that only unobjected bills be taken up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the House proceed to the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar in the House as in Committee of the Whole House, and the Chair did not hear the last statement.

Mr. EDMONDS. And that only unobjected bills be taken up.

The SPEAKER. And that only unobjected bills be considered. Is there objection to this request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the report of the Committee of the Whole House on one of the bills which was recommended to be laid upon the table be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. It is too late now. The House has agreed to take up these bills.

CLEVELAND TRINIDAD PAVING CO.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5238) for the relief of the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co., of Cuyahoga County, Cleveland, Ohio, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,017 for money paid by it to the United States for the right to remove sand from a certain tract of land reserved for Cheyenne and Arapaho school purposes, said right being granted in March, 1910, by the Department of the Interior, acting through William B. Freer, Indian agent at Darlington, Okla., said right to expire in December, 1912. Said land, owing to a mistake in the description and despite the fact that the General Land Office at Washington had directed that it be reserved from sale, was placed on sale on November 15, 1910, under instructions of the Department of the Interior, and the tract which had been leased to the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co. was sold to Archibald Mauerer.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Committee amendment: Line 7, page 1, strike out the figures "$3,017" and insert in lieu thereof "$775."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. How much does this bill carry? Seven hundred and seventy-five dollars?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I object to that.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$3,017" and insert in lieu thereof "$775."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to strike out all of the bill after the figures "$775" in line 7.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 1, line 7, after "$775," strike out all of the balance of the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. In explanation of that I only care to say that the bill seems to be a proper bill, but that language seems to be a portion of the report of the committee that by mistake has gotten into the bill. It seems a peculiar practice to put all of that recital of facts into legislation, and therefore I have moved the amendment.

Mr. EDMONDS. It has been the custom of the Claims Committee, as far as possible, to enlighten the House as to the real reason why the money was being paid. If this amendment was to pass, it would leave the payment to the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co., of $775, without any explanation whatever.

Mr. CRAMTON. I find, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, that is the customary practice. The facts the gentleman refers to would very properly be set up in the report of the committee, but instead of that they are put in the legislation, where they are not necessary, and although nearly two pages of the bill have been taken up, there is no statement that this is to be in full of other demands referred to in the report of the committee. I take it that is to be the case, because the report of the committee intimates that. As to these other facts, the report of the committee sets them up. It seems to me peculiar practice to put into legislation this long recital of facts.

Mr. EDMONDS. I have no objection to the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EMERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN A. GAULEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2396) for the relief of John A. Gauley.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have these bills read first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John A. Gauley, of Arlington, Mass., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,200, and said sum is hereby appropriated as compensation for personal injuries suffered by said Gauley in the course of his duties as an employee of the War Department at the Watertown Arsenal, Watertown, Mass.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice, because the gentleman from Massachusetts who introduced the bill is not present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the bill be passed over without prejudice. The bill will go over without prejudice, anyway, if the gentleman objects. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Private Calendar.

ALBERT C. BURGESS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6773) for the relief of Albert C. Burgess.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 to Albert C. Burgess for the loss of his eye sustained while performing his duties as keeper at the National Zoological Park.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,200."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THOMAS P. DARR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1789) for the relief of Thomas P. Darr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas P. Darr the sum of $830.37 on account of service rendered as mail carrier from Gooding, Idaho, to Corral, Idaho, during the spring and summer of 1907, this amount to be accepted by said Thomas P. Darr as full compensation for service rendered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the second reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RUDOLPH L. DESDUNES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Private Calendar.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7900) for the relief of Rudolph L. Desdunes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Rudolph L. Desdunes the sum of $1,200 as compensation for the loss of eyesight while in the discharge of his duties as an assistant weigher in the United States customhouse in New Orleans, La.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The bill will be read for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

The following committee amendment was read:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 6, after the word "as," insert the word "full."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I know that in these personal-injury bills the amount of $1,200 has been fixed in each case thus far passed.

May I ask what is the plan upon which the committee is proceeding in the fixing of these damages in personal-injury cases?

Mr. EDMONDS. We endeavor to give the man about one year's pay. That is the only law we had to go on at this time. Where a man was injured while engaged in a dangerous occupation he received one year's pay.

Mr. TILSON. So that it is on the basis of one year's pay?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; it is on the basis of one year's pay for total disability.

Mr. TILSON. For total disability?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOSEPH A. PRAT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3210) for the relief of Joseph A. Prat.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Joseph A. Prat, of New Orleans, La., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $445.89, being the amount of stamps, stamp books, and stamp rolls stolen from said Prat while chief stamp clerk at the

New Orleans post office in the month of February, 1915, and thus lost by him without fault on his part, and which amount was thereafter by him paid to the Government out of his own funds.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DUPRÉ, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

E. WILLARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6291) for the relief of E. Willard.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to E. Willard, of Willard, Wash., out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated the sum of $100 to compensate him for damages and losses sustained by reason of the negligence of employees of the United States Forest Service.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out "$100," in line 6, and insert "$60."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

SOUTHERN STATES LUMBER CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 577) for the relief of the Southern States Lumber Co.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the Southern States Lumber Co., a corporation, Pensacola, Fla., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $603.79.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

RURAL HIGH SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 1, LAPWAI, IDAHO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6772) authorizing and directing the transfer of 10 acres of land to rural high-school district No. 1, Lapwai, Idaho.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is a rather involved bill. I think we ought to know what it is.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, the bill provides for granting from a tract of something over 1,300 acres belonging to the Nez Perce Indian Tribe, in Idaho, approximately 10 acres for the use of the high school at Lapwai. At this point is not only this high school which is doing work under the Smith-Hughes Act, but there are located also a sanitarium maintained for the benefit of the Indians and other Indian interests. The result is that many Indians come to this point to live. They bring their families, and at this time no less than 20 Indian boys and girls are enjoying the advantages of the high school. The carrying on of experimental work for the enlightenment of the pupils of the school must require a little bit more land than is now embraced within the tract upon which the school building is situated. The school building has been constructed at a cost of $100,000. It costs the taxpayers and residents of the district $12,000 annually for the maintenance of the school.

Most of the money for the upkeep of the school is necessarily paid by the white settlers living within the district. The Indian Department is just as anxious as the white settlers are that some arrangement be made by which this land can be turned over to the district for its use. The land is in a canyon, and it happens that this is the only reasonable way in which land suitable for agricultural experimental station work can be acquired. In view of the very large contribution that the white settlers have made in the building of the schoolhouse and the upkeep of the school it seems that this is a very small contribution, indeed, from the Indians in return for the great benefit that is being extended to the Indian pupils. For that reason the department, looking at it from the standpoint of the Indians, is in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, this is now Indian land?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We propose to give 10 acres of it to the school?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will not the Indians ask us to pay for the land?

Mr. FRENCH. I think not. The benefit is so mutual and so manifest that it seems that this is only a very fair proposition to make, from the standpoint of both the white settlers and the Indians.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If it does not come before, it will come many years hence in the shape of a claim to be reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to refer to the Court of Claims the claim of these Indians for compensation for the taking of this land.

Mr. FRENCH. I can not see that there would be much equity in such a claim as that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, there is no equity in most of these claims; but the land belongs to the Indians. We take it away from them. There is that equity. A trustee, as a rule, is not allowed to give away the property of his ward to somebody else without compensation. There is some equity in that proposition, more than there is in most of these old claims that we are constantly referring to the Court of Claims, some of them by bills on this calendar.

Mr. FRENCH. I think, though, that in this case the other consideration of the large number of Indian students who are having the advantage of the school and will continue to do so will offset any reasonable claim that can be made.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The safest way, as a rule, is to sell the property for some compensation, which will not amount to very much at the time; but if we let it go on, in the course of time nobody knows what the property may be worth or what they might claim it was worth.

I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but some years ago we practically established the rule in this House that we would not convey property to anybody for nothing. If we wanted to convey property for school purposes, it was conveyed at some compensation, so there could be no question raised thereafter that Congress acting in a fiduciary capacity was giving away the property of its wards.

Mr. SINNOTT. Calling attention to line 9, on page 3, would that be called compensation where they are required to remove the buildings?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, I do not think so.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman from Idaho yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will it require this much land for that purpose?

Mr. FRENCH. Ten acres is not a very large tract of land for demonstration purposes in agriculture. That is the main use to which the land will be put.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to convey to rural high school district No. 1, Lapwai, Nez Perce County, Idaho, the following-described land: Beginning at a point which is 30' west, 113⅚' south, and 696' south, 86° 6' west of the northeast corner of lot 27, section 2, township 35 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian, which is the northwest corner of the present Lapwai School grounds; thence south 86° 6', west 483'; thence south 40° 20', east 1,174'; thence north 43° 54', east 598'; thence north 264' to southeast corner present school grounds; thence south 86° 6', west 696' to southwest corner present school grounds; thence north 300' to place of beginning, excepting eighty-nine one-hundredths acre as shown on plat "Reserved cemetery," containing 10.747 acres.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "land," strike out all to and including the word "acres," in line 14, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Beginning at a point which is 30 feet west, 113⅓ feet south, and 696 feet south, 86° 6′ west of the northeast corner of lot 27, section 2, township 35 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian, which is the northwest corner of the present Lapwai School grounds; thence south 86° 6′, west 483 feet; thence south 40° 20′, east 1,174 feet; thence north 43° 54′, east 598 feet; thence north 264 feet to southeast corner present school grounds; thence south 86° 6′, west 696 feet to southwest corner present school grounds; thence north 300 feet to place of beginning, excepting eighty-nine one-thousandths acre as shown on plat "Reserved cemetery," containing 10.747 acres.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENCH: Page 3, line 12, after the word "Idaho," insert:

"Provided further, That the said rural high-school district shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior for the credit of the Nez Perce Tribe of Indians in full compensation for their grant the sum of $1.25 per acre."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

By unanimous consent the title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing and directing the transfer approximately of 10 acres of land to rural high-school district No. 1, Lapwai, Idaho."

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOHN ALBERT THOMPSON.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2378) to authorize the issuance of patent to John Albert Thompson, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent for the west half of the northeast quarter of section 23, township 158 north, range 90 west of the fifth principal meridian, North Dakota, to John Albert Thompson, pursuant to his homestead entry, 02022, Minot series.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to set aside and appropriate, in accordance with the provisions of section 1 of the act of June 17, 1902, entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for reclamation of arid lands," the sum of $120, which was paid by said Thompson as purchase price of the described land.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. What is the meaning of section 2?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, the meaning of section 2 is this: This man paid $120 for this land. Had he received a patent at that time that money would have gone into the reclamation fund, but this money was first held in the hands of the receiver of the local land office for five years. Then, under the law, it had to be turned over to the Treasury of the United States, where it remained for five years, subject to the right of this man to get it back. After the five years had elapsed his rights were barred, and that money became money of the Government of the United States and could not be turned over to the reclamation fund.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does this section 2 turn it over to the reclamation fund?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have not examined the bill. I listened to the reading of that section twice, and I could not understand what it meant.

Mr. SINNOTT. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is what the purpose may be. Is that what it does?

Mr. SINNOTT. That is what I understand it does. The comptroller also held that this money could not be appropriated to pay for this land.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This language may be correct. I do not know who drew the bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. It was drawn by the department.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It says that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to set aside and appropriate, in accordance with the provisions of the act, the sum of $120. Appropriate for what? Set aside for what?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ALBERT N. COLLINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2128) for the relief of Albert N. Collins.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That homestead entry 036506, Glasgow series, of Albert N. Collins, for lots 2, 3, and 4, and the southeast quarter northwest quarter, section 19, township 25 north, range 38 east, Montana meridian, be, and the same is hereby, validated, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue patent thereon upon submission of satisfactory proof of compliance with the law under which said entry was allowed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was again reported.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 213. Joint resolution continuing temporarily certain allowances to officers of the Navy and Marine Corps.

EXCHANGE WITH SWAN LAND & CATTLE CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8308) providing for an exchange of lands between the Swan Land & Cattle Co. and the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon proper execution and delivery by the Swan Land & Cattle Co. (Ltd.), a corporation, of a deed conveying to the United States, its successors and assigns, a good merchantable title in fee, free of incumbrance, to certain lands needed by the United States for construction, operation, and maintenance purposes, in connection with the North Platte irrigation project, Nebraska-Wyoming, to wit: The southwest quarter of the northeast quarter and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 25, township 25 north, range 63 west, sixth principal meridian, Wyoming; then in exchange for such lands so conveyed a patent shall be issued by the United States to said Swan Land & Cattle Co., its successors and assigns, conveying to said company the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 26 and northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 23, township 25 north, range 63 west, sixth principal meridian.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF NANCY A. PARSONS ET AL.

The next business on the Private Calender was the bill (H. R. 4927) for the relief of Nancy A. Parsons, C. M. Parsons, D. F. Staggs, Ollie Staggs, Roas Staggs, Lena Birchfield, Alice Birchfield, Bertie Gwin, Greely Gilbert, Linville Gilbert, and Nelson Gilbert.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,100, in the following proportions: To Nancy A. Parsons, one-half; to C. M. Parsons, one-sixth; to D. F. Staggs, one-sixth; to Ollie Staggs, one forty-eighth; to Roas Staggs, one forty-eighth; to Lena Birchfield, one forty-eighth; to Alice Birchfield, one forty-eighth; to Bertie Gwin, one forty-eighth; to Greely Gilbert, one forty-eighth; to Linville Gilbert, one forty-eighth; to Nelson Gilbert, one forty-eighth; said sum being the value ascertained on said date by condemnation proceedings in the district court of the United States for the northern district of Alabama, in which the United States was plaintiff and said persons were defendants, as the damages sustained by said persons to lands owned by them jointly in said proportions by the construction by the United States of certain works for the improvement of navigation on the Black Warrior River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear some explanation of this.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, this is the second time that we have had a favorable report on the bill from the Committee on Claims. It was not reached at the last Congress.

This claim grows out of the flooding of about 51 acres of land in Jefferson County, Ala., by the construction of Lock and Dam 17 on the Black Warrior River. By the construction of that lock and dam the water was raised some 60 feet. It overflowed the land belonging to these people mentioned in the bill, and, of course, the land was taken for Government use. The land is still overflowed, and will continue to be overflowed as long as the dam is there.

The Government conducted condemnation proceedings in the United States district court in accordance with the law, and the land was assessed at the value of the amount named in the bill—$4,100. The Chief of Engineer's office had delegated to handle the matter a local civilian engineer. He thought the price too high, and declined to pay more than about $40 per acre for the land. The owners would not accept that price. The jury found the value of the land at $4,100, and the matter has simply stood there, the engineer saying: "You can wait as long as you want to; I am not going to pay you more than the price I have named for the land." The Chief Engineer had left it to him; and the owners are out of the use of the land and out of the money.

The land is valuable river-bottom land. The evidence shows that it would produce from 75 to 100 bushels of corn per acre per year. The price that the jury fixed on it will be recognized as a very moderate price. The evidence in the record shows that it is worth $100 per acre.

Under the laws of Alabama, under which the condemnation proceedings were held, a party who condemns land, after obtaining a judgment of condemnation and assessing the value, has six months in which to deposit the money in court, upon which deposit being made the title to the land vests in him. But if the money is not deposited in that time the title to the land remains in the original owner and the proceeding is of no moment, and the matter simply stands there. This bill merely attempts to consummate the condemnation and to get the money for the people who owned the land and who have been deprived of their property without compensation or due process of law.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have not had an opportunity of reading the report, which is somewhat lengthy; but, as I understand, the verdict was set aside——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, no; it was not; it still stands.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. I note that the commissioners, who, I suppose, were local men of the vicinity, made an assessment of $3,350. A little later another set of commissioners, I suppose they were also of the vicinity, made a finding of $3,050. That not being accepted, it went before a jury, as the gentleman has stated. That jury made a finding of $4,100, but on motion that amount was cut down to $3,975.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The verdict of the jury was set aside to that extent, and that is the question that I asked the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I say to the gentleman positively that the verdict was not set aside; to the contrary, the court rendered formal judgment of condemnation upon the verdict. The amount of the assessment was reduced, as stated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], to $3,975, $125 below the amount of the verdict.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And below what the bill carries.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain why the bill carries the original $4,100 instead of the amount fixed by the judge?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will say to the gentleman that I shall not cavil with him over the $125, but I do say this, that the amount as assessed by the jury was less than should have been assessed, for the land is well worth $100 per acre.

Mr. CRAMTON. But it is $1,000 more than two sets of local commissioners valued it at.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The commissioners were not local commissioners in the sense that they had any particular knowledge of the value of the land or resided in the neighborhood. It is true that they were men who lived in that county, but they had no particular knowledge of it. The best way to ascertain the value of anything is to introduce legal evidence before a jury and have the jury render a verdict upon it. I shall cheerfully acquiesce in an amendment to reduce the amount to $3,975.

Mr. LINTHICUM. How long have these people been without their land? How long has it been flooded?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It has been flooded since December, 1915; they have been out of their land for four years. I thought they ought to have interest on the amount due them for these four years and so provided in the bill when I introduced it, but the committee has reported an amendment striking out the provision for interest.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Three commissioners first put the assessed value of the land at $3,350. That was objected to. Another set of commissioners reduced that amount by $300, so that the award by the last board of commissioners was $3,050. Is not that the fact?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is correct; but the gentleman understands how these awards are made. They are ex parte awards largely and not nearly so reliable as is the verdict of the jury.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not know about that.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The owners of the land had the right to have the matter left to the jury. I mean that the people who own this land had the right to have a verdict by a jury and a court proceeding, and declined to accept the awards because they were not fair. They left the matter to a proper court which rendered a solemn judgment on it, and yet now they have no way of getting their money except by an act of Congress.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is perfectly evident that the reason the money has not been paid is because the United States Government thinks it is grossly in excess of the value of the property.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would not say that the engineer considers it is grossly in excess, but he declines to go above a certain price at which he has valued the lands that were flooded.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. BEE. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] this difference: These commissioners found a certain amount, but this amount of $3,975 is the judgment of the District Court of the United States in the Southern District of Alabama, as found on page 6 of the report, being Exhibit E, in which the court orders this matter done, on condition, however, that the United States shall first deposit with the clerk of the court the sum of $3,975 for the defendant, the same being the damages assessed by the verdict of the jury as corrected by the court. In other words, Congress is asked not to pass on a report of some commissioners, but on the judgment of a court of the United States.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is not the amount that the bill carried.

Mr. BEE. The $4,100 was the amount reported, but $3,975 is the solemn judgment of the United States Court of Alabama.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Rendered on the 24th of March, 1916, and which remains in full force and effect, as shown by the certified copy of the proceedings. I say to the gentleman that I shall move to reduce the amount by $125.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I shall not object if the gentleman offers that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield for an observation in answer to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BEE. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not hold it against the gentleman from Alabama because I made a suggestion.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, no; but I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that these commissioners were residents of the vicinity. I have not any doubt in the world that they inspected the land; it would naturally be their duty to do so. Having done so, one set of commissioners fixed the amount at $3,300 and the other at $3,000. Now, the jury in the district court did not visit the land, naturally, and the members of the jury were not residents of that county, but were drawn from all of the southern portion of Alabama. Hence the verdict of the jury is the verdict of those who were not personally acquainted with the lands, while the lower findings of the commissioners are the findings of those who were acquainted with the land.

Mr. BEE. But this is a solemn judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk again reported the bill, with the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "with interest thereon from June 2, 1916."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out "$4,100" and substituting therefor "$3,975."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$4,100" and insert "$3,975."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

O. W. LINDSLEY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1791) for the relief of O. W. Lindsley.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to O. W. Lindsley the sum of $453.81, as compensation for the loss of poles owned by him which were destroyed by a slash-burning fire on August 19, 1915.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$453.81" and insert in lieu thereof "$300."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FORT BERTHOLD INDIANS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4382) to confer on the Court of Claims jurisdiction to determine the respective rights of and differences between the Fort Berthold Indians and the Government of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, as this is a long bill, may I ask unanimous consent that the first reading be dispensed with?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will some one explain something as to what the provisions of the present law are in reference to the approval of these contracts with the attorneys? The bill provides, in section 3, that upon the final determination the fees paid shall be under contracts "negotiated and approved as provided by existing law." I assume that means all such contracts will be necessarily first approved by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Is that correct?

Mr. LITTLE. That is my recollection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Can the gentleman further explain? In lines 7 to 12, page 5, with reference to payment of such fees there is language that would appear to make it possible that such fees would not be paid from the moneys recovered by the Indians, but would be paid from other funds.

Mr. EDMONDS. Which does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. CRAMTON. Page 5, lines 7 to 12. Is it contemplated to permit these attorneys to secure fees that would be payable out of other funds of the Indians?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is directly contrary, for line 7 says:

And no part of such fee shall be taken from any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to such tribe or bands of Indians.

Mr. CRAMTON. But it further says:

Unless specifically authorized in the contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Why is it necessary to give the Commissioner of Indian Affairs the authority to approve the contract that would permit these Indians to be mulcted for fees to be taken out of other funds?

Mr. EDMONDS. The only answer I can make to that is this, that this is the form of the bill recommended by the department to cover this case.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have no question but what the department would ask the fullest discretion possible.

Mr. EDMONDS. Undoubtedly this is the same form in which we have passed other bills of a similar nature. I do not see any change in this bill, particularly in any item, from bills we have passed in the Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth Congresses of the same kind.

Mr. CRAMTON. Would the gentleman have any objection to striking out that language in lines 10 to 12, beginning with "unless specifically authorized," and so forth, and restricting the fees to the proceeds of these cases?

Mr. EDMONDS. I would rather the gentleman from Kansas would answer that, because he prepared the case.

Mr. LITTLE. On the contrary, I prepared the original bill, and this bill has been amended and offered as a substitute. I prepared the bill originally. After I had drawn it, covering things that a lawyer would, I was informed that the department recommended the present bill and intended to present it as an amendment. I was informed this same matter had been up once in the Senate, and there the Secretary had recommended such a bill as this, and while it seemed to me that this bill was full of superfluities, one of which the gentleman suggested, after a very careful consideration I found out while it was kind of silly it would do no harm to cover the points. There were some other objections of this character, and I can assure the gentleman that it will really do no harm, just adding little things that could have been gotten along without, but we were having it the way the department wanted it and they would not be interfering and trying to make a lot of trouble in the Senate. I can say to the gentleman I do not think this will do any harm. It says, "The fees decreed by the court for the attorney or attorneys"—they can not get anything, except what the court decrees—"shall be paid out of any sum or sums recovered in such suits or actions"—they can not mulct the Indians; they get their fees out of the sum that is paid.

Mr. CRAMTON. Not necessarily.

Mr. LITTLE. That is the purpose.

Mr. CRAMTON. But this language I am referring to——

Mr. LITTLE. It says: "And no part of such fee shall be taken from any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to such tribe or bands unless specifically authorized in the contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs." Now, that, I will say to the gentleman from Michigan, appears to be in accord with the general practice in order to protect the Indians against themselves and their lawyers, and the commissioner under the old law, as I recall it now, was authorized to ratify these contracts and authorized to make such payments. I will say to the gentleman this only does, as I recall it, just what the law says.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman the language to which I object, lines 10 to 12, if it has any effect at all, is to contradict that in lines 5 and 6, and I think my amendment would at least make it clear and, I believe, make it safer to eliminate this.

Mr. LITTLE. I will say to the gentleman that it has been some weeks since I looked at this bill, but as I recall it, that is the law now, and if we took it out it would not make any difference. Under the law as it exists the commissioner could authorize the payment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Not if we eliminated it from this bill. The commissioner then would have no right to pay them or authorize the payment except out of moneys recovered.

Mr. LITTLE. If we had that stricken out. And I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that I believe it would be a little unjust to the lawyers in this case.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not familiar with the other ones. I think this is very bad practice. I think I should have to object to that kind of a bill passing.

Mr. GANDY. If the gentleman will yield, what is it he wishes to strike out?

Mr. CRAMTON. The language in lines 10 and 12, beginning with the word "unless." In lines 5 and 6 it is provided that the fees must be paid out of the funds recovered, and then we authorize them to be paid out of other funds.

Mr. GANDY. If the gentleman will permit me just a moment, unless that language is left in the bill—and I say to you that I would have very grave doubts as to the advisability of passing this bill without that—you have no opportunity for the Secretary of the Interior to pass on the contract between the attorneys and the Indians. This Congress in days gone by has had plenty of difficulties with contracts between Indian tribes and attorneys that were not approved by the Secretary, and Congress has seen fit time and again in the passage of these and other bills to say that no contract between Indian tribes or the members thereof, who are wards of the Government, and attorneys, shall be valid unless approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, on page 4, lines 21 and 22, it is provided specifically that the contracts are to be "negotiated and approved as provided by existing law," and I have been advised that the contracts must be approved by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. If that is not sufficient, the language on page 5 is not sufficient to secure that.

The language I object to, on page 5, only accomplishes this, if anything—to permit the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to authorize the payment of attorneys' fees, not out of the proceeds of the cases, but out of other funds of the Indians. It does not submit the cases otherwise to the approval of the bureau, and it is conflicting with the previous language which says that these shall be paid out of any sums recovered in such suits or actions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. LITTLE. Does the gentleman think that there should be a difference in the treatment of lawyers in this case than any other?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think this. I am not versed in Indian laws, but I am suspicious of claims attorneys that are bringing claims against the Government, and I am particularly anxious to safeguard the Indians who come into the hands of such claim agents. And I think we should make sure that no attorney who brings a claim under this act should be able to get any fee for it except out of the proceeds of such case. And that is all I seek to accomplish.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I do not see any objection to amending the bill in that respect.

Mr. GANDY. Will the gentleman yield? I am not authorized to speak for my colleague from North Dakota who introduced this bill, but I am sure he will have no objection if the gentleman from Michigan thinks it would be good policy to strike that language out. And so far as I am concerned, after consultation with Mr. YOUNG, I would be pleased to have the gentleman offer an amendment to strike that out.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I will undertake to say that the statement of the gentleman from South Dakota is correct as to the position of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SINCLAIR], who was called to an important conference this afternoon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Indians of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation in the State of North Dakota, including the tribes known as the Arickarees, the Gros Ventres, and the Mandans, and the individual members of such tribes make claim against the United States on account of various treaty provisions which, it is alleged, have not been complied with, and on account of various encroachments upon the appropriation by said Government of territory of said tribes and Indians: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims is hereby vested with jurisdiction of, and authorized to try and determine, all matters of difference arising out of treaty stipulations with said tribes or Indians, or any of them, acts of Congress relating thereto or encroachments upon, or appropriation by the Government or under its authority of, territory of said tribes or Indians, or any of them, and to render judgment thereon, it being the intention of this act to allow the said court unrestricted latitude in determining and adjusting any and all of said matters and claims so that the rights, legal and equitable, both of the United States and of said tribes and Indians may be fully considered and determined, and the said court is further empowered to try and determine all questions that may arise in any cause which may be instituted in the premises on behalf of said tribes or Indians, or any of them, and render judgment therein.

SEC. 2. That any cause instituted under the jurisdiction herein conferred may be commenced by petition reciting the facts on which the petitioners claim to recover and setting forth the claims of the petitioners and their nature and amount, and said petition may be verified by any one of the petitioners as to the existence of such facts, and no other recitals or allegations need be contained in said petition or verification.

The following committee amendment was read:

Committee amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That all claims of whatsoever nature which any or all of the tribes of Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation, N. Dak., may have against the United States, which have not heretofore been determined by the Court of Claims, may be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the amount, if any, due said tribes from the United States under any treaties, agreements, or laws of Congress, or for the misappropriation of any of the funds of said tribes, or for the failure of the United States to pay said tribe any money or other property due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said tribe against the United States, and to enter judgment thereon.

"SEC. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said courts, they shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and any payment which may have been made upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such units or actions, and the United States shall be allowed credit for all sums heretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said tribe or any band thereof. The claim or claims of the said tribes or band or bands thereof may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment, suit to be filed within five years after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States party defendant, and any band or bands of said tribe the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein as the court may order. Such petition, which shall be verified by a petitioner or an attorney employed by said petitioner tribes or any bands thereof, shall set forth all the facts on which the claims for recovery are based, and said petition shall be signed by the attorney or attorneys employed, and no other verification shall be necessary. Official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said tribe or bands thereof to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys for said tribes or bands of Indians.

"SEC. 3. That upon the final determination of such suit, cause, or action the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as it shall find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said tribe or bands of Indians, under contracts negotiated and approved as provided by existing law, and in no case shall the fee decreed by said Court of Claims be in excess of the amounts stipulated in the contracts approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and no attorney shall have a right to represent the said tribe or any band thereof in any suit, cause, or action under the provisions of this act until his contract shall have been approved as herein provided. The fees decreed by the court to the attorney or attorneys of record shall be paid out of any sum or sums recovered in such suits or actions, and no part of such fee shall be taken from any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to such tribes or bands of Indians in whose behalf the suit is brought unless specifically authorized in the contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as herein provided: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by said court amount to more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered in such cause."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan offer an amendment?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the language is so clear that it means something different to me each time I read it. As to the words "any money" in line 8, I am not sure whether they include money they have there and not derived from these suits. They evidently do. But by reason of my doubt I will withhold the amendment at this time. The gentlemen in charge of the bill can give it further consideration elsewhere.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THOMAS SEVY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 428) for the relief of Thomas Sevy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 428) for the relief of Thomas Sevy.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to accept title to the following-described lands, either in whole or in part, upon certification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes and approximately equal in value to the lands to be given in exchange therefor: The east half of section 32; the north half of the northwest quarter and the south half of the southwest quarter of section 32, township 35 south, range 4 west of Salt Lake base and meridian, situate in the Sevier National Forest; and to issue to Thomas Sevy in lieu thereof patents to the following-described areas, or to such parts thereof as are found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be approximately equal in value to the lands conveyed: The northeast quarter, the north half of the southeast quarter, the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter, the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and the southwest quarter of section 31, township 37 south, range five west of Salt Lake base and meridian: Provided, That the lands conveyed to the Government shall thereupon become parts of the Sevier National Forest and subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall jointly report to Congress, in detail, the factors upon which the valuations were made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WELLING, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PAYMENT OF DECEMBER SALARIES TO EMPLOYEES.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GOOD. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 267) authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1919.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1919, on the 20th day of said month; and that the provisions of the resolution (H. J. Res. 260) entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1919," of this session of the Congress, be, and the same are hereby, rescinded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

UNSURVEYED PUBLIC LANDS, UTAH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5213) for the relief of occupants and claimants of unsurveyed public land in township 8 north of range 2 west of Salt Lake meridian, Utah.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object. The bill is on the Private Calendar, although I think it is quite plain that it is a public bill and belongs on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on the survey of any areas of public land in sections 10, 15, 22, and 27, in township 8 north, range 2 west of the Salt Lake base and meridian, in the State of Utah, which may be found to have been erroneously omitted from the official survey, plat of which is now on file in the General Land Office, the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause such areas to be surveyed and platted in such a manner as will segregate the several holdings of the bona fide occupants of such areas as shown by their occupation and improvements.

SEC. 2. That under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe all such bona fide occupants as shall have had adverse possession by themselves or their grantors for seven years prior to the approval of the plat of survey provided for herein shall have a preferred right at any time within six months after the approval of such plat of survey to purchase at the rate of $2.50 per acre the lands so occupied and improved in such parcels as the same are so held and possessed by each of them, not to exceed in any one case 160 acres.

SEC. 3. That in lieu of any portion of such areas which may be found to lie within the limits of a grant to any railroad company and to have been for the period of seven years mentioned in the preceding section in the possession of a bona fide occupant or occupants claiming otherwise than through such company, such railroad company shall be entitled to select other lands in accordance with the terms and restrictions of the act of Congress approved June 22, 1874: Provided, That the land described in one certain patent of the United States dated September 16, 1884, to the Central Pacific Railroad Co. as lot 5 of the northwest quarter of section 15 of the township and range aforesaid, containing 33.19 acres, shall not form the basis for any such lieu section; but the survey hereinbefore provided for shall be so made as to identify said tract; and title to said tract is hereby confirmed in said railway company and its grantees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, all such bona fide occupants as shal have had adverse possession by themselves or their grantors for seven years prior to the approval of the plat of survey provided for herein shall have a preferred right at any time within six months after the approval of such plat of survey to purchase at the rate of $2.50 per acre the lands so occupied and improved in such parcels as the same are so held and possessed by each of them, not to exceed in any one case 160 acres.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "as," strike out "shal" and insert the word "shall."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, strike out "posessed" and insert "possessed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That in lieu of any portion of such areas which may be found to lie within the limits of a grant to any railroad company and to have been for the period of seven years mentioned in the preceding section in the possession of a bona fide occupant or occupants claiming otherwise than through such company, such railroad company shall be entitled to select other lands in accordance with the terms and restrictions of the act of Congress approved June 22, 1874: Provided, That the land described in one certain patent of the United States dated September 16, 1884, to the Central Pacific Railroad Co. as lot 5 of the northwest quarter of section 15 of the township and range aforesaid, containing 33.19 acres, shall not form the basis for any such lieu section; but the survey hereinbefore provided for shall be so made as to identify said tract; and title to said tract is hereby confirmed in said railway company and its grantees.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 3, line 3, strike out the word "section" and insert "selection."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WELLING, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

W. B. GRAHAM.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next one.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 552) to reimburse W. B. Graham, late postmaster at Ely, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, when was this money expended?

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. It was about 12 years ago, during the years 1906, 1907, and 1908.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is this one of those bills that have been hanging around here for a long time?

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. No. This is the first time it was presented. It is the only one from the whole State. It passed the Senate.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is a Senate bill. It had to pass the Senate.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Has the gentleman got the report there?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not going to object. There are a lot of these bills where the department has refused to grant the authority asked for to employ additional clerical assistance, and postmasters, notwithstanding the refusal, have deliberately gone on themselves and employed the assistants and paid for the assistant clerical help and then afterwards wanted Congress to reimburse them. It is a very bad practice.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. At that time the money was not available.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The department has full authority.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. At that time there was no money available and this boom came on. About 10,000 extra people came on there and this sum had to expended.

Some years ago they learned a process to profitably treat low-grade copper ores, immense bodies of which ore, averaging about 2 per cent copper, were known to be in White Pine County, Nev. This information created an increase of population to the little town of Ely, Nev., whose previous purpose was serving the scattered ranches in that vicinity, 10,000 or more men coming to the new mining boom. One of the leading citizens of the former village of Ely was Mr. Graham, the postmaster, and worth several thousand dollars. Seeing the need and demand for delivery of mail, feeling his responsibility as postmaster, Mr. Graham employed extra post-office clerks, paying from his own funds $3,335, for which he has rendered an itemized account and sworn to. This bill has received the approval of several Postmasters General and has passed the Senate. It came to my hand during the extraordinary session of Congress, being the only claim from the whole State of Nevada, accompanied by a petition of 35 names, all signers being leading citizens of Ely—the mayor, district judge, county clerk, recorder, auditor, county treasurer, White Pine News (newspaper), the Ely Record (newspaper), sheriff, city attorney, both banks of Ely, district attorney, and county commissioners—setting forth the earnest request that said W. B. Graham be fully repaid for the service he gave.

This is the only claim from a whole State. Nevada is not in distress nor asking charity, but we do feel that this money was advanced with good intent for the benefit of the service and now should be repaid. Three Postmasters General have recommended it paid, and the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads advise payment. The Senate has passed the bill. A petition asking your favorable consideration, signed by 35 leading men of Ely, all of whose word is pure gold, knowing all the circumstances, is before you. One year ago the county commissioners, whose names are signed here, went up the street and back on the other side and raised $1,050,000 upon a single Liberty-loan drive. Besides Knights of Columbus and Red Cross, a score of times Ely went over the top for war drives, meeting all demands. Now those commissioners sign a petition to you setting forth the facts.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is what they always say. The department has the money. We appropriate money for that purpose, and when there is a deficiency we always appropriate for the deficiency. Congress can not ordinarily determine whether a postmaster ought to have additional clerical help. That is a matter for the Post Office Department to determine. We ought not to say that postmasters shall settle the question themselves when the department has refused to give them that assistance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to W. B. Graham, late postmaster at Ely, Nev., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,335, to reimburse him for money expended for necessary clerical assistance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EVANS of Nevada, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MICHAEL MACGARVEY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6407) for the relief of Michael MacGarvey.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] if I am correct in understanding that they have held that injury to false teeth does not constitute a personal injury but an injury to property, and for that reason the claimant had to come to Congress with a property right?

Mr. SIEGEL. That is the correct interpretation. It was held that it was injury to private property—false teeth. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $35 to Michael MacGarvey, police laborer in the employ of the depot quartermaster, Governors Island, N. Y., for damage caused to a set of false teeth incident to said service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, this is the only bill with teeth in it that has been passed. [Laughter.]

On motion of Mr. SIEGEL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WILLIAM HOLSTEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1796) for the relief of William Holsten.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow the following homestead application, subject to the compliance of the applicant with the provisions of the homestead laws applicable thereto: Homestead application 037866, Rapid City series, of William Holsten, for the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 15, township 2 north, range 5 east, Black Hills meridian.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "meridian," insert "in the State of South Dakota."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GANDY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ARTHUR J. BURDICK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1856) for the relief of Arthur J. Burdick.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Arthur J. Burdick, Riverside County, State of California, the sum of $1,981.68, in full compensation for the amount expended by said Burdick in compliance with law upon his desert-land entry No. 07331 allowed by the local land office at Los Angeles, Calif., and subsequently canceled for conflict with the grant to the Southern Pacific Railroad Co.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. KETTNER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BALTIMORE DRY DOCKS & SHIPBUILDING CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1865) for the relief of the Baltimore Dry Docks & Shipbuilding Co., owner of a dry dock at Baltimore, Md.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Baltimore Dry Docks & Shipbuilding Co., owner of the dry dock located at its lower plant, Baltimore, Md., rising out of damage to a caisson of said dry dock, caused by the collision of the United States Navy tug Tavernilla on the 16th day of February, 1918, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered by the owner of said dry dock because of said damage caused by the said naval vessel, may be submitted to the United States court for the district of Maryland, the district in which said collision occurred, under and in compliance with the rules of said court, sitting as a court of admiralty: Provided, That the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal: Provided further, That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owner of said dry dock, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: And provided further, That such suit shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this act: And provided further, That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. LINTHICUM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

J. E. ADAMS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5081) for the relief of J. E. Adams.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a patent to J. E. Adams, of Oakland, Calif., for the lands hereinafter described: Provided, That said J. E.

Adams shall pay therefor the sum of $2.50 per acre within six months after approval of this act, said lands being the east half of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 3 north, range 1 east, of the Willamette meridian, Clarke County, Wash.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "said," strike out the initial "J" and insert "James."

Page 1, line 6, strike out the initial "J" and insert "James."

Page 1, line 11, after the word "Washington," insert "formerly patented to the Oregon & California Railroad Co., and the title to which was revested in the United States by the provisions of the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. L., p. 218)."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent the title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of James E. Adams."

On motion of Mr. ELSTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry. I notice that the next bill on the calendar is a pension bill, and as I do not believe it was the intention of the House to consider pension bills to-day—because the Committees on Pensions have had several days on the floor this fall—I ask unanimous consent to pass over the pension bills without prejudice, leaving them on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the pension bills be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why not make the request that only bills in order to-day shall be called up? That would exclude pension bills and war-claims bills.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the House has already ordered that bills be taken up in their order on the calendar.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman is asking to change that order.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman will permit me, I asked the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SELLS], who is chairman of the Committee on Pensions, if he intended to call up these bills, and he said no, that he wanted them to go over until January.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the House can by unanimous consent pass over these bills without prejudice and leave them on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The same object can be attained by objecting to them and letting them remain on the calendar without prejudice.

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not want to do that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that only bills be reported to-day which would otherwise be in order to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that only those bills be considered to-day that would otherwise be in order to-day. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. Reserving the right to object, that would exclude only pensions and war claims?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is all; all the rest are in order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice on the calendar that there are only two war-claims bills. I happen to know something about one of them. I say frankly to the gentleman that I am anxious for the House to consider it to-day, as it has been pending for a long time. I am not on the committee, but since there are only two war-claims bills on the calendar I hope the gentleman will not submit the request in that form.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. These other bills were in order to-day. It was not intended to include bills not in order to-day.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am aware that I am wholly within the power of the gentleman or any other Member. If I object to the request the bill could be objected to when reached.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, the request was—although it may not have been put in that form—that the bills that were in order to-day should be taken up unless objected to. The unanimous-consent request did not make anything in order that was not in order to-day. So that these pension bills and war-claims bills were not in order and not made in order by the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Do I understand that bills reported by the War Claims Committee are not in order to-day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the claims bills, coming from the Committee on Claims, would have the preference under the rules of the House. If this is claims day, and the Chair has not investigated it——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is claims day.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Bills coming from the War Claims Committee then would not be in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not until the claims were out of the way. Under the rule the claims would have the preference.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Claims have preference over war claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And not over bills reported from the other committees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LAWRENCE BENDICH AND ANTHONY VEZICH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8645) for the relief of Lawrence Bendich and Anthony Vezich.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Lawrence Bendich and Anthony Vezich, citizens of the United States, and residents of the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, and joint owners of the gasoline freighter Protector, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said freighter and the United States submarine chaser No. 336, in the Mississippi River, about 35 miles below New Orleans, on the 2d day of February, 1919, may be sued for by the said Lawrence Bendich and Anthony Vezich in the district court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the said Lawrence Bendich and Anthony Vezich, or against the said Lawrence Bendich and Anthony Vezich in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk reported the bill for amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HENRY P. GRANT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 248) for the relief of Henry P. Grant, of Phillips County, Ark.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,574.24 to Henry P. Grant, formerly postmaster of Helena, Ark., said sum being the amount he voluntarily paid into the Treasury to make good the amount of public money appropriated by the assistant postmaster, William B. Lindsey, to his own use, who was duly tried and convicted of said crime and punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of four years.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the bill for amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARAWAY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PATENT TO CERTAIN LAND IN HURON COUNTY, MICH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 202) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the county of Huron, in the State of Michigan, for a certain-described tract of land for public-park purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent in fee simple to the county of Huron, in the State of Michigan, for the following tract of land, to wit: Lots 1 and 2, section 17, and the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 20, township 18 north, range 11 east, in Michigan, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, or other mineral deposits found in the land, and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same: And provided further, That this grant shall be subject to all prior, valid existing rights under the land laws of the United States, and that if the grantee shall fail to use the land for public-park purposes or shall devote the same to other uses the title thereto shall revert to the United States: And provided further, That said grantee shall, within two years from the approval of this act, file its application and make entry and use of the land under this act, for the purposes herein specified, and the grant herein is made upon the express condition that, within 30 days of the receipt of any request therefor from the Secretary of the Interior, the county clerk shall submit to the said Secretary of the Interior a report as to the use made of the land herein granted the county, during the preceding period named in such request, showing compliance with the terms and conditions stated in this act, and that in the event of his failure to so report, or in the event of a showing in such report to the Secretary of the Interior that the terms of the grant have not been complied with, the grant shall be held to be forfeited, and the Attorney General of the United States shall institute suit in the proper court for the recovery of said lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LITTLE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the author of the bill, or some one else, in regard to one or two provisions.

On page 2, line 8, and following, that if this land of 165 acres is granted to the county for a park within 30 days of the receipt of any requests the county clerk shall submit to the Secretary of the Interior a report as to the use made of the land during the preceding period named in such request, showing compliance with the terms and conditions; and in the event of his failure to so report, and in the event of a showing in such report to the Secretary of the Interior that the terms of the grant have not been complied with, the grant shall be held to be forfeited and the Attorney General of the United States will institute suit in the proper court for the recovery of said lands.

Now, it occurs to me that instead of putting the Secretary of the Interior to the trouble of instituting a suit to bring the land back into possession of the Government it would simplify it if it was amended so that the county would commit itself to an acceptance of it. If it is so doubtful as to whether they will take it or not, I think it would be better to have it known in advance and thus avoid a lawsuit. The Attorney General would have to bring suit if they did not go on with it, and there would be a lot of costs and expense. Could not that be avoided?

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman does not quite understand the situation. There is no doubt as to the desire of the people of Huron County. This is a bill to permit a county in my district to buy a small piece of unproductive public land which happens to remain in that county, which land is upon the shores of Saginaw Bay, by paying the regular price of $1.25 an acre, to use the land as a public park for the use of the people of that county.

Mr. LITTLE. I get that from the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. That being the purpose of the bill, the people of the county have already manifested their desire to acquire the land. The board of supervisors have taken action. It was at their instance that I introduced the bill. The Interior Department, in their desire to safeguard the interests of the public, desired not only that the bill should provide, as it does on page 2, in line 4 and following, that if the grantee shall fail to use the land for public-park purposes or shall devote the same to other uses the title thereto shall revert to the United States, but also wanted a provision that an occasional report from the officers of the county, after the land came into the possession of the county, should be made, to the effect that the land was being used for park purposes, and hence this provision is inserted to meet the requirements of the Interior Department.

Mr. LITTLE. Would the gentleman object to an amendment which did away with that and simply provided that when they took it they just filed some statement that they committed themselves to it, and thus do away with such an apparent unnecessary expense?

Mr. CRAMTON. This does not have reference to the time prior to the time the county gets the record title, but thereafter. Twenty years from now, if the Interior Department wants to know if the land is still being used for park purposes, then they should make a report. I would say that in my observations as a member of the Committee on the Public Lands I saw a great many bills go through where this was not insisted upon, and it seems to me unnecessary, but the Interior Department in this case wanted that information, and we are willing to give them that information.

Mr. LITTLE. I notice that their suggested phraseology was that on or before January 10 of each year after the expiration of the said two years a report should be submitted, but the bill provides that the county clerk shall submit to the Secretary a report whenever a request is made therefor.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman will notice, further, that the bill introduced in the last Congress contains the language calling for a report each two years, as I recall, but a bill in the form in which we have it before us now passed the Senate in the last Congress, and the department expressed their approval of that language.

Mr. LITTLE. It does not seem to amount to much, because there is no time specified wherein a report shall be requested or made, and if we are going to have one, does not the gentleman think it would be better to say when it should be made?

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman wants to put language in there that would specify the time the Interior Department shall call for a report, it would be entirely agreeable to me, but I would not like in 10 years from now to have some county clerk possibly overlook the requirement for a report and thus have the county lose title to the land because of his oversight.

Mr. LITTLE. Why do they give the county two years within which to file this application?

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman has any serious objection to that, I am agreeable to a different provision. The land has laid there since 1837, or thereabouts, without being taken up. If the gentleman objects to two years, I am agreeable to a different provision.

Mr. LITTLE. It says here that somebody did take it up and made a homestead entry, but it was afterwards canceled.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman is incorrect. The man did not follow it up, and it was lying there unused.

Mr. LITTLE. The report signed by Secretary Lane says that Henry Gouli did make homestead entry, serial No. 0220, at the Marquette land office, and that afterwards the General Land Office canceled the entry on the application of Mr. CRAMTON, the introducer of the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. He had made an entry, but he had abandoned it.

Mr. LITTLE. And the land is really not of any value for agricultural purposes?

Mr. CRAMTON. So the committee of the board of supervisors states. That is a populous and well-settled county, and if the land had been of value it would have been taken up.

Mr. LITTLE. How would they make a park of it if they can not grow anything on it?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is Saginaw Bay there. The water is always there, and they may be able to grow a few trees.

Mr. LITTLE. Some of these things seemed peculiar to me, but I think the gentleman's explanation is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent in fee simple to the county of Huron, in the State of Michigan, for the following tract of land, to wit: Lots 1 and 2, section 17, and the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 20, township 18 north, range 11 east, in Michigan, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, or other mineral deposits found in the land, and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same: And provided further, That this grant shall be subject to all prior, valid existing rights under the land laws of the United States, and that if the grantee shall fail to use the land for public-park purposes or shall devote the same to other uses the title thereto shall revert to the United States: And provided further, That said grantee shall, within two years from the approval of this act, file its application and make entry and use of the land under this act, for the pruposes herein specified, and the grant herein is made upon the express condition that, within 30 days of the receipt of any request therefor from the Secretary of the Interior, the county clerk shall submit to the said Secretary of the Interior a report as to the use made of the land herein granted the county, during the preceding period named in such request, showing compliance with the terms and conditions stated in this act, and that in the event of his failure to so report, or in the event of a showing in such report to the Secretary of the Interior that the terms of the grant have not been complied with, the grant shall be held to be forfeited, and the Attorney General of the United States shall institute suit in the proper court for the recovery of said lands.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CRAMTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CENTRAL MANUFACTURERS' INSURANCE CO.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1694) providing for the refund of taxes collected for stamp tax on certain policies under the emergency tax act of October 22, 1914, under the proviso to which act such policies were exempt.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Central Manufacturers' Mutual Insurance Co. of Van Wert, Ohio, the sum of $2,888.77, being the amount paid for stamp taxes under the emergency revenue act of October 22, 1914, on policies of such company, which policies were exempt from such tax under a proviso to said act as determined by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit in the case of Niles, collector of internal revenue, against Central Manufacturers' Mutual Insurance Co., decided June 10, 1918, and reported in volume 252 of the Federal Reporter, page 564.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this only applies to one individual insurance company as I understood the reading of the bill. How many of these claims are there?

Mr. EDMONDS. I have no knowledge of other claims before the committee of this kind. It is possible there may be others.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It seems to me there were a lot of these claims a few years ago. Whether they were ever disposed of I do not know. I think there was a bill providing for the payment of some at some time, and possibly there was talk of general legislation; however, I do not recall distinctly.

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think that the claims the gentleman speaks of a few years ago are the same as this claim. I think this claim originated in more recent years than those claims. I think the claims the gentleman refers to originated in 1909 or 1910.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is possible. Of course, it is a very small claim arising under the revenue law. Where there are not a large number of the same class, it has no protection under some construction of the statute by the Internal-Revenue Office. There have only been a few made by one concern. Sometimes it may be important to know how many claims there are and how much is involved. What does the Treasury Department say about this bill, may I ask? Have they made a favorable report upon the bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. The Treasury Department, under a letter dated September 2, 1919, makes this statement after going over the accounts:

Inasmuch as the court held that the policies of this company were exempt from the stamp tax, a basis of equity and justice is clearly afforded for refund to the Central Manufacturers' Mutual Insurance Co., of Van Wert, Ohio, of $2,859.88, the face value less 1 per cent of the stamps indicated to have been affixed, in case the evidence submitted in connection with the bill is accepted as a satisfactory showing that internal-revenue stamps of the stated face value were actually affixed to the policies in question. Such stamps were largely sold in quantities of $100 or more at a discount of 1 per cent. Upon a positive showing that the face value was paid for all these stamps, the face value may equitably be refunded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CATHERINE GRACE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1375) for the relief of Catherine Grace.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the sum of $469.50, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Catherine Grace, widow of James Grace, who died as a result of injuries received by him, the said James Grace, while in the performance of his duties as an employee of the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PREFERENTIAL RIGHT TO PURCHASE CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8084) granting to certain claimants the preferential right to purchase certain alleged public lands in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

Whereas in the governmental survey made in February, 1846, and approved December 23, 1846, certain areas in sections 29, 30, 31, and 32, township 11 north, range 10 east, fifth principal meridian, Mississippi County, Ark., containing 1,099.51 acres, being all that part of said sections which was designated as lake in the survey of 1846, and so meandered and designated as a lake on the official plat of said area and known as Golden Lake; and

Whereas many years ago the riparian proprietors, in good faith believing themselves to be the owners of said area, caused the same to be drained, reclaimed, and put into a high state of cultivation, at a very great expense; and

Whereas the said claimants are entitled to equitable consideration by reason of such labor and expenditures and improvements; and

Whereas these lands have acquired their chief and practically their entire value from these improvements; and

Whereas by decree of the Chancery Court of Mississippi County, Ark., Osceola District, at the February, 1913, term thereof, as the same appears in the records of said court, book 7, pages 43 to 54, inclusive, said lands were partitioned among the following persons as owners: G. W. House, Oliver Douglas, J. W. Rhodes, W. K. Harrison, and J. W. Rhodes, jr.; and

Whereas the United States has since asserted title to said lands and caused a corrected survey to be made, and now asserts title to said lands: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That said persons named in said decree as set out above, their heirs, administrators, or assigns, are hereby granted a preferential right at any time within 90 days after the passage of this act and the filing of the plats of said corrected survey in the United States land office in Little Rock, Ark., to purchase said lands of the United States and to pay for the same at the rate of $1.25 per acre in accordance with the divisions and allotments to said person or persons, respectively, named in said decree: Provided, however, That if the parcel of land awarded to said person or persons in such decree does not conform to the legal description of lands as returned by the corrected survey, then the person to whom the major portion of any legal subdivision was awarded by said decree may purchase all of such subdivision from the United States at the price herein named, and said purchase shall be in trust for that portion of land awarded under said decree to the person named therein, his heirs or grantees, and such purchaser, upon the issuance of said patent to him, shall forthwith convey to said cestui qui trust such land as was awarded by the terms of said decree to said person upon payment by said cestui qui trust of his proportionate part of the purchase price and entry fees for the same.

Said lands herein authorized to be purchased are all that part of said sections 29, 30, 31, and 32, township 11 north, range 10 east, fifth principal meridian, Mississippi County, Ark., not included as land in the survey made in February, 1846, and approved December 23, 1846.

The Clerk read the committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Arkansas explain this bill and say whether these are part of the sunken lands or part of the lands of the United States? Has there been any litigation——

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, this particular tract of land was meandered as a lake. It was so regarded for years and years, and the Government has frequently asserted that it had no interest in it. A levee was built along the Mississippi River and drainage was put in there, and the lands were then rendered susceptible of cultivation and the present occupants of them cleared them up years ago. They are valuable lands now. There was just a lake, but about 10 years ago the Government went down there and resurveyed all of these lands, and undertook to declare them public lands, saying that the other survey was a mistake, that it was not a lake but land at the time of the original survey. So they resurveyed this land. The Government asserted it was public land. The plats, however, have never been filed, and when that announcement was made that the Government asserted title to it certain people undertook to homestead it—went into the fields, you know. Now, afterwards an agreement was reached between the would-be settlers and the homesteaders, the original riparian owners who made the improvements and are in possession, and this bill is to carry out that agreement.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman knows there has been a lot or litigation instituted by the Government in reference to various pieces of public land in Arkansas?

Mr. CARAWAY. This land has never as yet been subject to litigation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is not included in these controversies or is related to them?

Mr. CARAWAY. No, sir; not yet.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does this bill meet with the approval of the Interior Department?

Mr. CARAWAY. It meets it this far and differs in this respect: The Commissioner of Public Lands wanted a general bill to settle all these kinds of claims. I did not want to introduce it because of some conflict about the homestead entries and whether they had been made prior to a certain time——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does he have any objection to the settlement made by this bill?

Mr. CARAWAY. Except he said the Government ought to get $6 an acre instead of $1,25; that is all.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suppose this land is worth $50 or $100?

Mr. CARAWAY. It is; yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was read for amendment.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all of the preamble.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 2, line 3, strike out all of line 3 and insert: "That G. W. House, Oliver Douglas, J. W. Rhodes, W. K. Harrison, and J. W. Rhodes, jr., named in the decree of the chancery court of Mississippi County, Ark., Osceola district, at the February, 1913, term thereof, as the same appears in the records of said court, book 7, pages 43 to 54, inclusive, their."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 4, lines 1 and 2, strike out "and approved December 23, 1846," and insert in lieu thereof "which was designated upon the township plat approved December 23, 1846, as 'Goldens Lake.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARAWAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMY E. HALL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8598) restoring to Amy E. Hall her homestead rights and providing that on any homestead entry made by her she shall be given credit for all compliances with the law on her original homestead entry and for all payments made on same.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the "whereases" be omitted in the reading and that only the bill be read, beginning on page 3, line 1.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The whereases stricken out?

Mr. HAWLEY. They are stricken out in the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to permit the said Amy E. Hall to make a new homestead entry on any tract of land, not exceeding 160 acres, open to entry under the homestead laws of the United States, which is not otherwise appropriated or reserved, and that she be given credit for all compliances with law on her original homestead entry and for all payments made upon the same, giving and granting unto the Secretary of the Interior full and complete authority to carry out the purposes and intent of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

The following committee amendment was read.

Strike out all of the preamble.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 4, line 1, strike out the words "the said."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 4, after the word "Hall," line 1, insert: "homestead entrywoman on lots 23 and 24, and south half southwest quarter northwest quarter section 17; the south half southeast quarter northeast quarter, northeast quarter southeast quarter, and southwest quarter northeast quarter, section 18, township 9 south, range 10 west, in the former Siletz Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon, whose homestead application was on January 3, 1914, placed of record in the office of the register and receiver of the United States land office at Portland, Oreg."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 4, line 16, strike out the language "giving and granting unto the Secretary of the Interior full and complete authority to carry out the purposes and intent of this act" and insert "but expressly waiving the requirements as to cultivation under the act of June 6, 1912 (37 Stats., p. 123), giving and granting unto the Secretary of the Interior full and complete authority to carry out the purposes and intent of this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ST. CROIX CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF WISCONSIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2264) for the relief of the St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2264) for the relief of the St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, to be expended under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the purchase of subsistence supplies in relieving cases of actual distress and suffering among those needy St. Croix Indians of Wisconsin whose cases are referred to in report of January 13, 1915, transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior to the House of Representatives March 3, 1915, pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress of August 1, 1914 (38 Stats. L., pp. 582–605), and printed as House Document No. 1663, Sixty-third Congress, third session.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $141,000, in full settlement of the claims against the United States of the St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin whose names appear upon the final roll prepared by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to the said act of August 1, 1914, and which final roll is contained in the said report of the Secretary of the Interior, March 3, 1915, and in said House Document No. 1663.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to distribute said fund of $141,000 per capita among said Indians appearing upon said final roll, or, in his discretion, the per capita share of each of said Indians may be credited to him and expended by said Secretary for his benefit in such manner, including the purchase of land, as he may deem proper: Provided, That no part of the funds hereby appropriated shall be paid to any person or persons as attorney's fees: Provided further, That where any of said enrolled Indians have died since enrollment the Secretary shall ascertain and pay their pro rata shares to their proper distributees, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: And provided further, That one-half of said sum shall be expended in the purchase of land in northern Wisconsin for agricultural purposes, such land to be allotted to said St. Croix Chippewa Indians, each Indian to receive land to the value of one-half of his distributive share in the fund appropriated by this act, patents therefor to be issued in accordance with the general allotment laws of the United States. The land so selected shall be situated in organized school districts, and not be purchased in bodies of more than one section, and said bodies shall not adjoin each other. Such land shall be selected by an agent of the Indian Office familiar with lands in northern Wisconsin and an agent to be selected by said St. Croix Chippewa Indians. If these two disagree as to the value or desirability of any particular tract of land they shall agree upon a third person, who shall act with the two agents aforesaid in determining such matter of disagreement. No land shall be purchased hereunder unless and until the purchasing agents, together with said third person so selected, shall in person go upon each tract so purchased.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to strike from said final roll the name of Maggie Staples, No. 39 thereof, and also strike therefrom the name or names of any other Indians who shall hereafter be found to have received an allotment of land on any Indian reservation: Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any of the persons whose names shall be stricken from the final roll by the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would say that this bill requires explanation to the House. We are appropriating nearly $150,000, and nobody here knows what it is for unless it is the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, may I be privileged to say in reply to the inquiry made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that this bill is simply to correct an injustice which has existed for a long time as regards certain members of the Lac Courte Oreille Band of St. Croix Chippewa Indians in the State of Wisconsin. Their rights are fully set forth in the treaty of September 30, 1854, and have been fully justified by investigations made by the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of Indian Affairs. These investigations made by the department are fully given in the hearings on this bill.

No one can seriously question the fact that these 95 Indians, to whom reference will be made hereafter, were absolutely entitled, not only as a matter of humanity and justice but as a matter of legal right, to participate in the very inadequate payment made by the Government to each head of a family and each Indian over 21 years of age under the terms of the treaty of 1854. To put it plainly, all of the heads of families and all Indians over 21 years of age were, prior to and in 1873, entitled to 80 acres of land as an allotment. It is true that there was a general allotment act, dated February 8, 1887, but none of the Indians for whom relief is asked in the pending bill participated in the benefits of that act, as is mentioned in Document No. 1663, Sixty-third Congress, third session, bottom of page 2. Therefore these Indians are unjustly excluded from the benefits to which they are manifestly entitled and have been so excluded for a long period of years. It seems self-evident that the Government of the United States is in honor bound to either provide allotments or pay to the Indians entitled thereto money equivalent to the value of an allotment, which would amount in each case and instance to at least $1,500. There are no lands to be allotted upon the reservations, hence the provisions of the bill now pending provide the only means by which the Government can fulfill its obligations, which have been wholly too long disregarded.

A SUMMARY OF THE STEPS TAKEN BY THE CONGRESS LOOKING TO THE RELIEF OF THE ST. CROIX BAND OF INDIANS.

During the time that Congress has unfortunately been cruelly dilatory in providing for the relief of the St. Croix Band of Indians, still something has been done in their behalf, and, as early as August 1, 1914, the following act of Congress was approved:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to cause an investigation to be made of the condition and tribal rights of the so-called St. Croix Chippewa Indians, now residing in the counties of Polk, Burnett, Washburn, and Douglas, State of Wisconsin, and said to be in a destitute condition; that he shall ascertain and report to Congress at the beginning of the next session thereof whether the said Indians belong to the Lake Superior Chippewa of Wisconsin or to the Chippewa of Minnesota; what tribal rights, if any, they have with any band or tribe of Chippewa Indians residing in either Minnesota or Wisconsin; what benefits in land and money they would have received had they removed to a reservation in Wisconsin or had not been excluded from enrollment and allotment with the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota under the provisions of the act approved January 14, 1889. (25 Stat. L., p. 642.) That he shall cause a census and enrollment to be made of the said St. Croix Chippewa, and shall report their actual conditions and needs, with such recommendations for their relief as he may deem necessary."

The Department of the Interior acted very promptly under the provisions of this act, as is shown by the preliminary report dated December 1, 1914, and known as Document No. 1253, Sixty-third Congress, third session. The final result of the investigation ordered by Congress is set out in House Document No. 1663, Sixty-third Congress, third session, which embraces a report naming the Indians whose names are placed upon a final roll and who are unquestionably entitled to the relief Congress may see fit to provide for them. It seems clear that Congress, having authorized an investigation to determine certain facts and the investigation having been completed, and having ascertained those facts, should have little hesitation in putting into effect the relief which is deserved, which is legally and morally just, and which the Indians so sorely need at this time.

The pending bill is one simply designed to carry out the recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior and to make effective what was in the mind of Congress at the time it authorized an investigation and report. The pending bill has been favorably recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, and is approved by all those who have any knowledge of the facts and of the circumstances connected with this matter. After the investigation which has been made, the results of which are before Congress, it is difficult to conceive how any reasonable man could make objection to the relief provided for unless he could make the objection that the provisions of the bill are far less than they ought to be, and less than what the Indians whose names appear upon the final roll are actually entitled to.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that this whole matter has been thoroughly investigated by the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate, and is practically a copy of the bill passed by the Senate during the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, as recommended both by the Secretary of the Interior and the Bureau of Indian Affairs to the committee in the Senate. A part of the Senate report on said Senate bill 4699 is as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred S. 4699, for the relief of the St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin, having considered the same, report thereon with an amendment in the form of a substitute, with the recommendation that when so amended the bill do pass.

By an act of Congress approved August 1, 1914, the Secretary of the Interior was directed to cause an investigation to be made of the condition and tribal rights of the so-called St. Croix Chippewa Indians residing in northern Wisconsin. Among other things he was required to ascertain what tribal rights, if any, they had with any band or tribe of Indians residing in either Wisconsin or Minnesota, and what benefits in land or money they would have received had they removed to a reservation or had not been excluded from enrollment and allotment with the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota under the provisions of the act approved January 14, 1889. The Secretary was further directed to cause a census and enrollment of said Indians with recommendations for their relief as he might deem necessary.

On March 3, 1915, the Secretary made his final report to Congress as directed (Doc. No. 1663, 63d Cong., 3d sess.). In this report 95 Indians were found to be entitled to benefits from the Government under the treaty of September 30, 1854, and that they would be entitled to between $1,000 and $1,500 each.

This bill is for the purpose of carrying out the recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior.

In a report upon a bill introduced in the House of Representatives upon this same subject the Secretary states:

In further explanation of the failure of these Indians to remove to their respective reservations following the treaty, supra, I learn from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that some of the subchiefs and many members of the band of Chief Buck did not understand that the present Lac Courte Oreille Indian Reservation established by said treaty was to be their future home; that they believed the lands embracing the waters of the St. Croix and Yellow Rivers were to be set aside for them as their home and hunting grounds; and that they never ceded or relinquished such country to the United States. I am also advised that the Indians themselves understood that there were not sufficient lands on the Lac Courte Oreille Reservation to provide for them should they have removed thereto, nor could they have made a living in such event.

I may state further that this bill, in substance as presented, was not only passed by the Senate as an individual bill but it was also later attached to the Indian appropriation bill in the Senate by the Committee on Indian Affairs, so that it has practically passed the Senate twice. The reason why it was not accepted favorably by the conferees was that the conferees of the House desired that it should receive a thorough investigation by the House Committee on Indian Affairs. In accordance with that action, which seemed reasonable, I again introduced the bill in the House in accordance with the draft as suggested and recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, and as passed by the Senate. The pending bill was submitted for consideration and report to the Subcommittee on Indian Affairs, of which Mr. ELSTON is the chairman. In the hearings by this committee I submitted all the investigations and legal data bearing on the subject, which are found in Exhibits A, B, and C in the hearings on the bill.

This bill is recommended for passage unanimously both by the subcommittee and the general Committee on Indian Affairs. It is recommended to pass by the Bureau of Indian Affairs and by the Secretary of the Interior. It has been passed twice on its merits in the Senate. Simple justice demands that the House of Representatives now pass the bill.

May I say further, Mr. Speaker, that in order to satisfy the Committee on Indian Affairs concerning the legal data on this bill I submitted a series of questions to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I wish to submit his reply at this time, so that the House can have the facts fully before them for consideration. This letter, to my mind, is inclusive and conclusive, and clearly sets forth the legal reasons for the passage of the pending bill.

This letter, Mr. Speaker, reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, October 1, 1919.

DEAR MR. NELSON: In response to your recent informal request for certain information with respect to the rights of the St. Croix Band of Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin, you are advised ad seriatim as follows:

1. The specific right of the Indians in question under the treaty.

Article 2 of the treaty of September 30, 1854 (10 Stat. L., 1109), with the Chippewa Nation of Indians, provided:

"The United States agree to set apart and withhold from sale, for the use of the Chippewas of Lake Superior, the following-described tracts of land, viz:

* * * * * * *

"Third, for the other Wisconsin bands, a tract of land lying * * * on Lac Courte Orielles, each equal in extent to three townships, the boundaries of which shall be hereafter agreed upon or fixed under the direction of the President."

* * * * * * *

The treaty also provided other benefits for these Indians, including the payment of certain annuities for a term of 20 years and allotments of land. Again, article 11 thereof gave to these Indians the right to hunt and fish on the ceded territory ceded by them, "until otherwise ordered by the President."

This treaty was signed by 14 chiefs and headmen of the Lac Courte Oreille Band, including Chief "I-yaw-banse, or Little Buck."

The act of February 3, 1903 (32 Stat. L., 795) provided:

"That with the consent of the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior, located on the Lac Courte Oreille Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin, to be obtained in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, the President may allot to each Indian now living and residing on said reservation and entitled to so reside, and who has not heretofore received an allotment not exceeding 80 acres of land, such allotments to be subject in all respects, except as to the age and condition of the allottees, to the provisions of the third article of the treaty with the Chippewas of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, concluded September 30, 1854."

Congress by act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. L., 582-605), directed an investigation of the needs, conditions, and tribal rights of the St. Croix Chippewa residing in the counties of Polk, Washburn, and Douglas, Wis., and a statement as to the benefits in land and money they would have received had they removed to a reservation in Wisconsin or not been excluded from enrollment and allotment with the Chippewa of Minnesota under the act of January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. L., 642).

An investigation made in accordance with the provisions of the act cited proved conclusively that nearly all of the so-called St. Croix or "Lost Tribe" of Chippewa were absentee members of the Lac Courte Oreille Band, which refused to remove to their reservation in Wisconsin under their said treaty of September 30, 1854, but continued to reside along the Yellow and St. Croix Rivers in Wisconsin and Minnesota, their old hunting grounds. These Indians maintained that they understood from the treaty that these lands were to be set aside for them as a home and hunting grounds; that they never ceded or relinquished this country to the United States; and that they understood there were not sufficient lands on the Lac Courte Oreille Reservation to provide for them should they remove thereto, and that they could not make a living in such event. It was also found by the investigating official that these Indians had shared in all the benefits other than lands provided for the Lac Courte Oreille Chippewa under their treaty; that of the 1,117 persons enrolled by the official mentioned 94 were found entitled to enrollment and land should they remove to their reservation. The others so listed on the census were, following the usual departmental rulings and the decision of the court in the case of Julia B. Oakes et al. v. United States (172 Fed. Rep., 305), found not to be so entitled, their status being that of descendants of members of the tribe who had adopted the habits and customs of citizens of the United States and of the States in which they resided, and have never maintained tribal relations or been recognized as belonging to the tribe on the reservation.

In reporting the matter to Congress as directed in the said act it was clearly set out that no land remained available for allotment purposes on the said reservation, and that these 94 members of the Lac Courte Oreille Band who were found entitled to land thereon should be allowed the sum of $1,500, this amount being the approximate value of 80 acres of land they would have received had they removed to the reserve and there been sufficient land for all.

2. Number of Indians who have received rights or allotments under the treaty.

The records show that in 1873 and 1874, at the time of the last payment under the treaty provision heretofore cited, there were between 1,046 and 1,253 persons who received the annuity payment.

Under the said act of February 3, 1903, and the provision in their treaty of 1854 for allotments of land 876 Indians received allotments.

3. What is our obligation as a Government under the treaty to the Indians in question?

The act of Congress and treaty referred to clearly set forth just what benefits these Indians are entitled to and what they should have received.

4. What legal rights have the Indians in question, and why should the Government grant this relief?

It is believed that the legal rights of these Indians are fully set out in the treaty and the act of Congress referred to, and in this connection reference is also made to departmental report of December 21, 1918, to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate, which is printed as Senate Report No. 672, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, and also House Document No. 1663, Sixty-third Congress, third session, which latter document contains the report of the investigating official and the roll of those found entitled to receive the benefits indicated.

5. Is there any reason to suppose that if this relief is granted it would open the door unduly to others who would have claims?

While it might be inferred from a hasty reading of the bill providing for the relief of these Indians that should it be enacted the door would be opened to other Indian claimants, I do not share this view. This is in no sense a nebulous or prima facie Indian claim. The investigation and report in the matter were made pursuant to directions from the Congress and clearly establish that these absentees, whose chief, Little Buck, was one of the signers of the said treaty, did not fully understand that they were to remove to the reservation and were to give up their old homes and hunting grounds along the Yellow and St. Croix Rivers, and the treaty itself, allowing them to hunt and fish on the ceded lands, gives color to their contention.

None of these Chippewa who were born after the last payment in 1874 were included in the list of enrolled for benefits, and many of those so included are advanced in years and in need of assistance. These proposed beneficiaries have been considered as applicants applying for tribal rights and their cases have been decided upon departmental rulings and court decisions as in other cases where absentee members of tribes have asked for reenrollment and benefits, and I feel that the right of these Indians to receive the relief provided in the bill rests upon an equitable basis and that the said action in investigating and hearing their case was a judicial determination of the matter.

Sincerely, yours,

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

Hon. A. P. NELSON,
House of Representatives.

This recital of the facts is corroborated, Mr. Speaker, in all the reports by the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane. The bill should be amended to conform to the suggestion made by the Secretary of the Interior. I believe that Congress is simply discharging a just duty to these 94 members of this tribe by the enactment of this bill. The legal and moral rights of the Indians in question is perfectly evident. The Government can do nothing less than discharge its treaty obligations to these Indians. This bill should pass.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the speech of the gentleman from Wisconsin is suggestive and illuminating, and still I think that this bill ought to come up when there is a little more chance for consideration. For the present I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, may I make a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Will this simply be passed over without prejudice and considered later?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SALE OF LAND TO SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 21, FREMONT COUNTY, WYO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6136) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain lands to school district No. 21, of Fremont County, Wyo.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell to school district No. 21, of Fremont County, Wyo., the west half, southwest quarter, southwest quarter, southwest quarter, northwest quarter, section 4, township 1 south, range 1 west, containing 14 acres, the same being a part of the Shoshone Agency reserve on the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation.

With committee amendments as follows:

Line 6, after the word "quarter," strike out "northwest" and insert "southeast."

Line 7, after the word "west," insert "of the Wind River meridian."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

Line 6, after the word "quarter" strike out the word "northwest" and insert "southeast."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 7, after the word "west" insert "of the Wind River meridian."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BENHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

F. M. BARFIELD.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6522) for the relief of F. M. Barfield.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is this bill?

Mr. CRISP. I am the author of that bill. I may remark to my good friend from Illinois that it is said that "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune." I believe this is the time to call up this bill. I got it through the House in the Sixty-fourth Congress, but it failed to pass the Senate. The Committee on Claims made a favorable report on it in the Sixty-fifth Congress, but I could not get it considered. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] was on the Claims Committee at that time, and he filed a minority report. He is not here to-day, so I think this is a splendid time to take up this bill. [Applause.]

The post office at Pinehust, Ga., was burglarized and $64.88 was stolen, and the postmaster made application for refund under the general law. He had bought a safe, but failed to change the combination on it as the post-office regulations required, and therefore the Post Office Department refused to reimburse him on the ground that he had not changed the combination of the safe. I do hope no one will object to the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to F. M. Barfield, the sum of $64.88, to reimburse him for the loss of postal funds lost through burglary of the post office at Pinehurst, Ga., on July 19, 1909.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CRISP, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JAMES W. CROSS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 822) for the relief of James W. Cross.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to James W. Cross, $92, as full compensation to said James W. Cross for personal injuries received as a result of an accident October 26, 1914, without negligence on his part, while he was engaged in the performance of his duties as a laborer at the State, War, and Navy Department Building.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOSEPH A. M'CARTHY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6881) for the relief of Joseph A. McCarthy.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Joseph A. McCarthy, of San Francisco, Calif., the sum of $5,000, on account of personal injuries received by him while employed as seaman on the United States Army transport Logan, in San Francisco Harbor, on or about the 12th day of July, 1912.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "of," strike out "$5,000" and insert "$650, as full compensation."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DEFERRED INTEREST ON FOREIGN LOANS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter written to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. FORDNEY, by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Glass, relative to the deferred interest on the loans we have made to foreign Governments, explaining the situation. I have the consent of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] to the printing of the letter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

DECEMBER 18, 1919.

Hon. JOSEPH FORDNEY,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: On October the 9th last I sent you a copy of a public statement made by me on the 26th of September, relative to the obligations of foreign Governments held by the United States Government; and also a copy of a letter written by me on October 9 to Senator PENROSE in reply to a letter from him, requesting information concerning the extension of the interest on such loans. In that statement and in my letter to Senator PENROSE I explained the policy which the Treasury proposed to adopt in respect to the funding of the demand obligations of foreign Governments now held by the United States into long-time obligations, and the funding, during the reconstruction period of two or three years, of the interest on such obligations. Notwithstanding my public announcement of September 26 and the controlling reasons which prompted the Treasury to adopt this policy, it appears from statements which have been made lately in Congress and elsewhere that there still exists a misunderstanding in respect to this question. Some of the statements to the effect that it is the duty of our Government, notwithstanding the present grave derangement of foreign exchanges, to insist upon immediate payment of interest amounting to about $475,000,000 a year, indicate a tendency to overlook certain aspects of the question and a failure to grasp the meaning of the present position of the finances of the world. While the Treasury favors such an arrangement, it does not favor the cancellation, and, indeed, has no power to cancel any portion of the interest or principal. The collection in dollars of this interest, under present circumstances, would be no less disastrous to American interests than to the interest of our debtors.

The loans to foreign Governments were made, as provided by Congress in April, 1917, for the purpose of assisting them in the prosecution of the war. Our entry into the war made it necessary for this Government to call upon the American people for vast sums of money for its own war purposes. In order to obtain such funds it was necessary substantially to close our financial markets to all other borrowings, but at the same time it became most important that our associates in the war should be able to obtain in greater amounts than theretofore the supplies which they required and which we alone could furnish.

Except for the purpose of meeting commitments for war purposes previously made with the knowledge of the Treasury, the Treasury has since last April substantially discontinued the establishment of credits in favor of foreign Governments. The program authorized by Congress for foreign loans was therefore substantially ended eight months ago.

At almost the same time the foreign Governments of their own accord, but with the hearty approval of the Treasury, ceased the "pegging" of their exchanges.

These necessary steps by the United States Treasury and the treasuries of our associates in the endeavor to reduce governmental financial activity and to return trade and finance to normal channels have been reflected in the great drop which has taken place in the foreign exchanges.

With the ending of the war and of the program of our loans to foreign Governments, it was considered appropriate, in accordance with the authority conferred by the Liberty bond acts, to take up with those Governments the funding of the demand obligations now held by the United States into long-time obligations; and in view of the fact that, as indicated by the state of the foreign exchanges, the reconstruction of Europe has not proceeded to a point where Europe can even yet pay by exports for its necessary food, it was considered by the Treasury most expedient that, as a part of a general funding arrangement, provision should be made for deferring and spreading over a later period the payment of interest which would accrue during the next two or three years.

At the time of writing, exchanges of the principal allies are quoted as follows:

Sterling, 3.86, or at a discount of 20.7 per cent.
Francs, 10.23, or at a discount of 49.4 per cent.
Lire, 12.75, or at a discount of 59.4 per cent.
Belgian francs, 9.97, or at a discount of 48 per cent.

Under these circumstances an impenetrable barrier exists which makes it impracticable for these Governments to pay in dollars the amount of interest due from them to the United States. This involves no question as to the solvency or financial responsibility of these Governments nor a failure to raise funds by loans and taxes from their people and a corresponding burdening of our people, but results from the condition of the foreign exchange market. If the Governments of the Allies were to raise immediately by taxes and loans the whole of their debt to us, those taxes and loans would produce only sterling, francs, and lire, and those foreign currencies would not furnish one additional dollar of dollar exchange because conditions are not such as to permit those currencies now to be converted into dollars. The United States Treasury has no use at the present time for any considerable amounts of these currencies and could not afford to accumulate large idle foreign balances.

If the Treasury does not defer the collection of interest, and thus add to the present difficulties in the financial and economic rehabilitation of the world by demanding an immediate cash payment of interest before the industry and trade of Europe has an opportunity to revive, we should not only make it impossible for Europe to continue needed purchases here and decrease their ultimate capacity to pay their debt to us, but should hinder rather than help the reconstruction which the world should hasten. A nation can liquidate its foreign debts only by the accumulation of foreign credits, which may be accomplished through an excess trade balance, invisible exchange items, the creation of credits by loans, or by the export of gold. Until our associates in the war, whose manufacture and trade suffered so much more than ours, have had an opportunity to resume normal industrial and commercial activities, they have not the exports with which to pay the interest due on our obligations and could make such payment only by the shipment of gold or by obtaining dollar loans in the United States.

The loans which the allied Governments have so far been able to place in our markets have not been sufficient to correct the situation. I can not believe that anyone would consider it equitable or wise, in the present circumstances, for us to require payment in gold, of which we already have enough, when the payment of one year's interest alone would exhaust about 50 per cent of the gold reserves of our debtors. While I fully realize the desirability of collecting this interest and of decreasing at once by a corresponding amount the taxes which we must collect, I should be most reluctant, without specific instructions from Congress to the contrary, to demand the immediate payment of interest, which would not only seriously retard the economic restoration of those countries, without which they will be unable to pay the interest and principal of their debt to us, but which would also destroy their power to make needed purchases in our market.

My advisers are firmly of the opinion that, in connection with and as a part of a general funding of the demand obligations into time obligations, I am duly authorized, under the Liberty-loan acts, to spread over subsequent years the interest which would accrue during the reconstruction period of, say, two or three years, and to include such amounts in the time obligations. If, however, the Ways and Means Committee of the House, which shared with the Secretary of the Treasury the initial responsibility for the Liberty-loan acts, should question my power so to act, I shall be pleased to have you so inform me at once, in order that I may lay before your committee a proposal for further enabling legislation.

Cordially, yours,

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE RAGSDALE.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House hold a session on Sunday, January 25, 1920, for the purpose of enabling the Members to pay tribute to the memory of the late J. WILLARD RAGSDALE, of the fifth district of South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House hold a session on January 25, 1920, in memory of the late Mr. RAGSDALE, of the fifth district of South Carolina. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BUFFALO RIVER ZINC MINING CO.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Private Calendar.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 728) for the relief of the Buffalo River Zinc Mining Co.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Buffalo River Zinc Mining Co., a corporation of St. Louis, Mo., the sum of $4,200, being the amount of money paid by the said company to the United States of America, on or about the 21st day of July, 1904, as the purchase price of certain public lands in Searcy County, Ark., the patents to which have since been canceled at the suit of the United States of America and the said lands having been restored to the public domain: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall first make an investigation of all the facts concerning said claim, and shall be satisfied of its justness and of the good faith of the said company and its officers, and that the acts of the agent of the company by reason of which the said patents were canceled were done wholly without the knowledge or consent of said company or any of its officers, and shall certify these facts to the Secretary of the Treasury, the expense, however, of said investigation, if any, shall be deducted from the amount found to be due said company.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why the bill provides for an investigation after authorizing the payment of the claim? Why not investigate first to determine whether the claim should be paid?

Mr. EDMONDS. The department asked the committee to leave off the proviso. They said they did not think it was necessary, and said they would have no objection to the passage of the bill if we did leave it out; but the committee felt that it was perfectly proper that the Government should make some investigation to be sure that the amount proposed to be paid is proper.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What is the amount?

Mr. EDMONDS. The amount is $4,200.

Mr. McKENZIE. The investigation might show that not over $2,500 was coming to this company, but the bill provides for a payment of $4,200.

Mr. EDMONDS. The department asked us to leave out the proviso, but the committee thought it was better to keep it in. If the gentleman desires to move to strike out the proviso, we have no objection. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to object to the bill. I am simply asking for information, that is all.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MAUDE H. MOSHER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2740) for the relief of Maude H. Mosher.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Maude H. Mosher the sum of $25,000 as compensation for injuries sustained by being knocked down and run over by an automobile truck belonging to the arsenal at Watertown, Mass.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$25,000" and insert "$25 per month for a period not exceeding 10 years."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, this is a rather unusual provision. What is it for?

Mr. DALLINGER. This is the case of a young woman in Boston who was struck by an automobile truck driven by a corporal connected with the Watertown Arsenal. The testimony, which is given in full in the report accompanying the bill, shows that the accident was due entirely to the negligence of the Government employee operating the truck. At the request of the committee the War Department had its surgeon examine Mrs. Mosher, and his report shows that the woman is permanently injured.

Mr. BEE. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts should explain that she was working and has been unable to return permanently to her work.

Mr. DALLINGER. I was about to add that Mrs. Mosher is a working girl and she has not been able to work continuously since, and never will be able to do so. She is able to work only occasionally.

The report of the examining surgeon shows the following:

The examination of patient shows an intelligent and refined woman of about 40 years of age, considerably emaciated and anemic, with a history of pain of left pelvis radiating down left thigh; pain not continuous, but of daily occurrence. This condition has been present since her injury. Mrs. Mosher complains of sleeplessness and general weakness, in addition to her pains, and of a "nervous" condition.

Physical examination reveals no deformity or lameness upon walking and no definite points of tenderness. The examination of the X-ray record at the Boston City Hospital shows diagnosis of "fracture of inferior ramus left pubic bone and fracture of transverse process fifth lumbar vertebra, left side."

The conclusion drawn from the history and examination of Maude Mosher is that she is at present suffering from neurasthenia, resulting from shock of the injury and her subsequent illness; that she has neuritis or neuralgia on left side, probably the result of injury to or pressure upon the left obturator nerve.

The opinion is expressed that the symptoms of Mrs. Mosher are real and the result of the injury received by her in August, 1916.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, any case of injury appeals to our sympathies very strongly, but whenever the Government undertakes to do anything of this sort it must do it according to some rule or it is absolutely lost. This bill was introduced for $25,000. Well, of course, we would like to pay this young lady $25,000, but the committee reported in favor of paying her $25 a month for 10 years. If the bill had been introduced for $50,000, possibly the committee would have reported in favor of paying her $50 a month. I do not know. This is not according to any rule of the Committee on Claims adopted in recent years about making compensation.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the language on page 4 of the report, where Gen. Crozier says, "And in view of the considerations hereinbefore mentioned it is the opinion of this office that such compensation should not exceed the sum of $5,000."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If they had to pay it out of the appropriations for the War Department, they would want to make it 15 cents. The officers of the Army are perfectly willing to pay any sum out of the General Treasury that does not come out of their appropriation. And yet, notwithstanding, they have repeatedly recommended to Congress that compensation should not be made in a greater amount than would be given if the person was entitled to compensation under the general law. I do not know how much this lady would receive if entitled to compensation under the general law, but it would not be according to the measure we are adopting here.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has the gentleman ever heard of a claim being paid at the rate of so much per month through an undetermined period?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There was one case in which a young lady had her scalp torn off, and I believe they made an appropriation payable in monthly installments. Otherwise that has not been the practice. This would inaugurate a new custom which, in my judgment, is liable to lead to a large expenditure of public money, because they would say right away that $25 is not enough, the injured party must have enough to support her, and if the person lives more than 10 years you must support that person for the rest of her life. That argument could not be answered.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I was about to ask the gentleman, as this provides for $25 per month for a period not exceeding 10 years, who is to decide?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suppose that means that it will be under the decision of the comptroller. The comptroller has ruled that a gratuity would not be payable to anybody except the persons themselves. If she dies, the estate would not be entitled to it. I assume that is the meaning.

Mr. LONGWORTH. For a period not exceeding 10 years does not mean at least 10 years. It might be a year. The discretion is left with some one unnamed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Congress made an appropriation for the widow of Representative Hill, of Connecticut. Mrs. Hill died before the money was paid to her. Her administrator, or somebody, made application to collect that amount of $7,500. The comptroller ruled that where Congress granted money as a gratuity it would not go to anyone else except that person; that it was not a grant to the estate, and when the person died the representative of that person could not collect the money. I do not know whether anything has been done about it since, but that ruling was made by the comptroller, and possibly the same rule would be followed here.

I think that a committee that undertakes to report bills of this sort ought to have some fixed principle on which it proceeds. It is only in recent years that the Government has endeavored to make any compensation for these cases. I have seen bills reported to pay $1,000, $500, $10,000, practically for the same injury to the same class of people. That is not the way to do legislative work.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois has brought up a matter that has been thoroughly discussed in the Committee on Claims. It appears that we are going to have a great number of damage cases occasioned by the operation by the Army of wagons, automobiles, and a number of different vehicles that have the use of streets in cities.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Some time ago we passed a law authorizing the American Expeditionary Forces to settle any claims of this sort over in France. Why would it not be a good plan for the committee to report a bill authorizing some board to settle claims on this side?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think it would not be a good idea. You do not know how many claims you would have, and you open the door for a lot of unjust claims. The courts in the different cities to-day are filled up with just such claims, many of which are exaggerated and unjust. They are claims from people who fall into gutters, people who fall over themselves, and it opens the door to all sorts of claims. I do not approve of it, and I do not think the department would. I think in cases of this kind compensation should be made to these people, and the committee agreed on this. It is about the sum that a soldier would have been paid or his family would have had he been killed or injured during the war. In the case of disability, in the case of the wife of a soldier, she would have been paid $25 a month for, I think, a period of 20 years, or until she married. In this case we give $25 a month for 10 years as a sufficient compensation. You can very well realize that if we start out by giving $5,000 in a case of this kind, the soldier or his family who only gets $25 a month could fairly complain of unfairness.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The committee has affidavits of ex parte evidence in this case?

Mr. EDMONDS. We had an Army physician in Boston visit this woman himself and make a statement.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The committee had no sworn testimony from anyone?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, yes; we have had all kinds of testimony. There is no question about the case.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Was it ex parte testimony? Were any of the witnesses cross-examined by anybody representing the Government?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; I think they were all statements.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think it very unwise to settle disputed claims of this kind on ex parte testimony.

Mr. EDMONDS. But there is not any dispute. The War Department acknowledges this.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There is the statement of the doctor here, who says "it may be" and it is "likely" that her neurasthenia and her neuritis are from the injury that she received.

Mr. EDMONDS. Of course, you could not expect the doctor, who was not her attending physician when she was hurt, to make a statement positively that her present condition resulted from that accident.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What was the physical injury at the time that it occurred?

Mr. DALLINGER. A fractured pelvis. She was very badly injured and was taken to the hospital, and at one time they were not sure that she would get well.

Mr. EDMONDS. I am of opinion that the committee can not very well bring out bills paying a lump sum to people who are injured through war activities without taking into consideration the amount paid to soldiers and the families of soldiers for similar injuries occasioned by war activities.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does not the gentleman also think it would be a wise policy, if the Committee on Claims is to undertake to pay claims of this character, to take testimony from witnesses under cross-examination?

Mr. EDMONDS. We have had probably all of the testimony that is necessary. If it were disputed by the War Department, then I would say that we would have to have further testimony, but it is not disputed by the War Department.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But we are responsible for the payment of this money, and not the War Department.

Mr. EDMONDS. Let us assume that you take the case to court. What would happen? The War Department, the party responsible, would go into the court and acknowledge that they had occasioned the damage, would they not?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They would acknowledge that the accident occurred, but the question is the measure of the damage, the amount of injury sustained. What is the testimony in respect to that?

Mr. EDMONDS. The War Department, after examining this woman at the time she was injured, reported, through Gen. Crozier, that $5,000 was not out of the way—at least, Gen. Crozier said that—and instead of granting that we are paying her $3,000 in monthly installments of $25.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But there is very little testimony showing the nature of the permanent injury in this case.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield at that point, the statement of Gen. Crozier is that if she incurred any permanent injury such injury must be very slight. The Acting Judge Advocate General advises against our passing this class of cases, and the only Army officer to give a favorable impression is Gen. Crozier, who makes the statement that if there is any permanent injury it is very slight.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. I want to state that that was in 1917. In 1919 we had an Army surgeon examine her, at the request of the Committee on Claims, and he found that she is permanently injured as a result of the accident.

Mr. EDMONDS. In answer to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], I do not believe it is possible to make a positive statement right away that a person is permanently injured, and that was the reason the committee refused to pass the claim until the Army surgeon had visited her and made the report.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Are we to understand that this is the beginning of a policy of the committee to pay claims in such cases not in lump sums but in monthly installments?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think it is the beginning of such a policy. I think it is the understanding of the committee that claims arising out of the war should be treated on the same basis as other war liability cases are.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then I would like to make this suggestion to the gentleman and to the other members of the Committee on Claims: If this bill becomes a law, how is the money going to be paid? There will be a special appropriation item in an appropriation bill every year which will have to be explained every year and which will probably cost the Government in time spent in explanation more than it will amount to. In addition to that, there would have to be a separate account kept in the War Department to pay this money and in the Treasury Department in the books there. If the committee is going to begin payments of this sort, it seems to me they ought to provide that these payments shall be made by the Pension Office out of the pension funds, so as to avoid every year special items, special accounts, special action by the War Department. We have two or three cases now where we pay $100 a month to the widows of surgeons who died in Cuba in the yellow-fever investigation carried as special items in the military appropriation bill. Every year somebody reserves the point of order on the items, not knowing that they are specially authorized by law, and they have to be explained.

I have not heard the military appropriation bill for the last two years, but before that I had heard this same thing gone through with since these items went into the law.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman is right; both the last two bills had exactly the same thing.

Mr. EDMONDS. If the gentleman will yield for a question, is it the gentleman's opinion that the Committee on Claims ought to bring out a bill instructing the Pension Bureau to pay $25 a month? Does the gentleman think the Committee on Claims would have any jurisdiction over pensions of that character?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, they could report a bill providing this money should be paid and paid through the Pension Bureau. Of course, they could not provide in this bill that the appropriations for pension purposes should be used for that purpose.

Mr. EDMONDS. Then how would we make an appropriation to carry out the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Make the appropriation here for it.

Mr. EDMONDS. In the bill to be paid through the Pension Bureau?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was read for amendment.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$25 per month for a period not exceeding 10 years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to No. 37, which is the only bill passed over without prejudice early in the day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 37. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What is it? What the gentleman wants to do is to return to the unfinished business.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I object. We will take that up after a while.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

CLAIMS GROWING OUT OF INSURRECTION IN MEXICO.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 80) to correct an error in the wording of the appropriation of $71,000 made in the act approved July 9, 1918, and to authorize the Secretary of War to pay said sum to respective parties entitled thereto.

Whereas under the provisions of "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, among other things, an appropriation of $71,000 was made to enable the Secretary of War to pay to the heirs or legal representatives of citizens of the United States killed on the American side of the line at El Paso, Tex., Douglas, Ariz., and other points, as found and ascertained by the commissioners appointed pursuant to the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution directing the Secretary of War to investigate claims of American citizens for damages suffered within American territory and growing out of the late insurrection in Mexico," approved August 9, 1912; and

Whereas under the terms of said resolution of August 9, 1912, the duly appointed commission therein provided for afterwards reported recommending that the amount of indemnity due American citizens killed or wounded at El Paso, Tex., Douglas, Ariz., and other points (as appears by the report of said commission transmitted by the Secretary of War to the Congress of the United States under date of December 5, 1912, and being House Document No. 1168, Sixty-second Congress, third session) was $71,000, of which total amount of $71,000 indemnity so found the amount of $42,000 was as indemnity for deaths and the sum of $29,000 was indemnity for those wounded; and

Whereas by an error in the wording of the appropriation contained in said act approved July 9, 1918, $71,000 indemnity was directed to be paid for deaths alone, when by the wording of the act the Secretary should have been directed to pay the indemnity so found to each of those entitled to the same in the aggregate of not more than $71,000, whether as indemnity for death or wounding: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to pay or cause to be paid out of the $71,000 heretofore appropriated by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, the sum of $42,000 to the heirs, executors, or representatives, or parties entitled to receive same, for the deaths of those ascertained and reported by the commission appointed under the terms of joint resolution of August 9, 1912, and that he be further directed to pay out of said $71,000 so appropriated the remaining sum of $29,000 to those wounded, or to their heirs or proper legal representatives, the said sums of $42,000 and $29,000 to be paid to the proper parties in the respective amounts as found and reported and set forth on page 20 of said House Document No. 1168, Sixty-second Congress, third session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let us know something about this. Why do we extend a public law by a private bill?

Mr. CALDWELL. I think the gentleman will remember all about this case, because it originated in the Sixty-second Congress. The gentleman was not only here, but——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is a long time ago.

Mr. CALDWELL. Before I came; but the gentleman is wonderfully bright and has a wonderful memory, and I think he will recall it. The situation was this——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am always willing to learn, sitting at the feet of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CALDWELL. I thank the gentleman. I started to say in 1911 there was trouble on the Mexican border, and following that an inquiry was made and a commission appointed, and they made report here, as represented in House Document 1168, Sixty-second Congress. Following that, in 1918, the military appropriation bill carried an appropriation of $71,000 to pay those claims, but in writing the bill, in writing the provision, they said for the "death," and part of those injuries which were reported and approved and were included in the $71,000 were for wounds. Now, all this seeks to do is to correct the verbiage of that appropriation that Congress made.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This appropriation was made last July.

Mr. CALDWELL. Nineteen hundred and eighteen; yes, sir; but the proposition arose in 1911.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not in the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman does not understand. In the Sixty-second Congress an inquiry was started, and that Congress had practically committed itself to this proposition. The appropriation act of 1918 was in the military appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It was the appropriation act of 1919, if the calendar is right—only recently. The gentleman's recollection ought to be at least sufficient to say whether it was this year or last year.

Mr. HAYDEN. It is the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. CALDWELL. It was the appropriation act we passed in 1918.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And the calendar says "act approved July 9, 1919."

Mr. CALDWELL. No; July 9, 1918.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. All I know is the calendar.

Mr. CALDWELL. Well, I have House joint resolution No. 80 in my hand, a resolution introduced by Mr. HUDSPETH, of Texas.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I see; it is a typographical error in printing the calendar.

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the joint resolution for amendment.

The Clerk read the joint resolution for amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the preamble.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LANHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on bill 61?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nevada asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the bill indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MAJ. GEN. ENOCH H. CROWDER.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2867) to authorize the President, when Maj. Gen. Crowder retires, to place him on the retired list of the Army as a lieutenant general.

Be it enacted, etc., That in view of the long and faithful services of Maj. Gen. Enoch H. Crowder, Judge Advocate General of the United States Army, and especially his conspicuous services as Provost Marshal General in conjunction with the various State and Territorial executives and the local and district boards, in the execution of the selective-service law, the President is hereby authorized, when that officer retires, to place him on the retired list of the Army as a lieutenant general, with the retired pay of that grade as fixed by section 24 of the act of Congress approved July 15, 1870; and to grant him a commission in accordance with such advanced rank.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

RELEASING CLAIM TO SQUARE OF LAND IN CITY OF FORT SMITH, ARK.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9089) releasing the claim of the United States Government to the block or square of land in the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, upon which is situated the old Federal jail, to the city of Fort Smith for a site for a convention hall, community building, and other public purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent granting, remissing, releasing, and quitclaiming all right, title, claim, and interest of the United States of America in and to the block or square of land in the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, bounded by Second and Third Streets and Rogers and Parker Avenues, fronting 300 feet on Second and Third Streets and 290.25 feet on Rogers and Parker Avenues, upon which is situated the old Federal jail, being a part of section 8, township 8 north, range 32 west, to the city of Fort Smith, Ark., for a site for a convention hall, community building, and other public purposes.

The committee amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why the Government of the United States should cede to the city of Fort Smith a block of land for private purposes?

Mr. WINGO. It is not for private purposes; it is for public purposes. It is for the same reason that they have ceded all the other Federal jails, except this one, either to the States or the municipalities or the counties. The report of the Attorney General shows that. This is an old jail on land that originally was bought for military purposes in 1838. In 1871 it was transferred to the Department of Justice for use for jail purposes. As soon as the State of Oklahoma was admitted to the Union the jail was abandoned for such use and has not been used since, except to store contraband liquor in. It is an old, abandoned building, but the reason why the citizens of Fort Smith wish to have the building conveyed to them for public purposes is that it is a historic site and they wish to preserve it for community purposes and to take care of it.

Mr. MADDEN. Do you mean to say that they wish to use the present building?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; they wish to use it, so far as it is capable of being used. It must be for public purposes and not for private purposes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why should the Government give this property away?

Mr. WINGO. The Government has no use for it, and should convey it to Fort Smith for the simple reason that it has conveyed every other old Federal jail in the West.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It may have done so. I do not remember. There has been quite a lot of controversy in reference to such things, and it may have been done, but it certainly has not been done with every old jail in the West. Why should the Government, when it owns a piece of property, paid for out of a general fund, contributed by all the people, and it no longer needs that property, give it to a particular set of people, no matter how meritorious the case may be?

Mr. WINGO. Of course, the same question arises as to every case of that kind, and possibly arose as to the United States penitentiary in Washington Territory; the penitentiary at Walla Walla, Wash.; the Territorial penitentiaries in Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, and Colorado; and in some of those cases not only have we given to the cities the sites but in one or two instances we have conveyed the unexpended appropriation for the construction of the building. And in this case there is a small square of land there, an old, historical brick building, and they want to preserve it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman says that we passed special bills in all these other cases?

Mr. WINGO. Either special bills or by items in appropriation bills.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think we ought to have time to look this up and see what we did.

Mr. WINGO. I hope the gentleman will not object to this. That is shown in the report. The committee looked into that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is only a matter of a short time.

Mr. WINGO. I will be very frank with the gentleman. If this is not passed now, when will we get it?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This bill will be on the calendar.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will not this be something of a memorial or museum property?

Mr. WINGO. Yes. I think it should be conveyed to the city of Fort Smith, aside from the proposition of the benefit to the people there in Fort Smith. It is a historical place. It is not being preserved now. It will be a burden upon the people there to preserve it. The Federal Government will not do it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is nothing in this bill, as I recall, that requires the city of Fort Smith to preserve it.

Mr. WINGO. Yes. Maintained for public purposes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is another thing.

Mr. WINGO. That is a restriction upon it. The city of Fort Smith is bearing other burdens on public property there. True, it agreed to do so when the grants were made. The city is spending hundreds of dollars every year maintaining a driveway to the Federal cemetery there, when it is outside of the residential part of that community. It maintains it as a burden to that city and takes care of it like it takes care of the residential streets. And, so far as property is concerned, the city has a greater burden than the Federal Government has given them of benefit, so far as property is concerned.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think we ought to look into that, then.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is willing to take the report of the committee?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have great confidence in the report of the committee.

Mr. WINGO. What fact does the gentleman want?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Here is a proposition of presenting Government property to a city, with the excuse that it is to be used as a convention hall. Now, it may be very important for Fort Smith to have conventions, but, after all, there is no special reason why the Government of the United States should construct a convention hall there. We have had a great many propositions to have the Government construct a convention hall in Washington, where the Capital is located, but we have never acceded to that request.

Mr. WINGO. That is not this proposition. They could not erect a large convention hall on that small tract if they wanted to do so. But it is to be preserved as a hall there for historical purposes and used by historical societies in that community. Just why the word "convention" was written in there I do not recall. It is not a very happy word, though I think the idea was that historical societies could use it as a meeting place. That is how the term "convention hall" came to be written in there. It is not a very happy term. But this is just as reasonable a proposition as another bill that was passed this afternoon for the donation of 10 acres of land to be used for school purposes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not at all. It was an entirely different situation.

Mr. WINGO. That was a community purpose, was it not?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That was to grant Indian lands for school purposes, largely for the benefit of Indians, and in that bill we put a provision that they should pay for the land.

Mr. WINGO. One dollar and twenty-five cents an acre.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. That makes $2.50 difference between that bill and this one.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is what the land is worth.

Mr. WINGO. It is not worth one ten-thousandths of what that land in the other bill was worth. It is of no use to the United States Government, but it is of some historical value for these people to use it and preserve it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the fact is that wherever the Government of the United States owns property and it is not in active use some one wants to come along and wants to grab it. That is the case everywhere. They have got the notion that it is the duty of the Government, if it has anything, to give it to somebody else, and if it has not got anything, they want to raise taxes to buy it. It is one or the other all the time.

Mr. WINGO. I will say this to the gentleman, that so far as I am concerned I resent the suggestion that either I or the people whom I have the honor to represent want to "grab" anything. The history of the Fort Smith reservation shows that they have not wanted to "grab" anything. I have just cited the fact that we are cheerfully carrying a great burden on account of the Federal cemetery there. This is a historical proposition, which I think the gentleman would favor if he knew of it. This structure can be kept there as an old, run-down building. In recent years it has never been used by the Government except to put contraband booze in it, and if you want to retain it as a booze container and want to denounce us as a bunch of land grabbers you can do it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Arkansas speaks as though the citizens of Fort Smith begrudged the money that they spent for taking care of the roadway to the cemetery.

Mr. WINGO. I did not say that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman says that it is a great burden, and a virtue on the part of the citizens at Fort Smith to maintain that road, and yet everywhere else where there is a Government cemetery near a city the city maintains the road leading to it.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is the one that brought up the question of burden. The gentleman is the one who is accusing people of having selfish purposes. I repudiate the suggestion. We have not a selfish purpose. The gentleman is the one that has raised the question of selfish purpose.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, they want to get the land belonging to the Government for nothing. The gentleman gives as an excuse for that the heavy burden that the citizens there are bearing.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Illinois has voted for numerous bills giving the jail properties in a similar situation elsewhere to other cities, and gentlemen have voted for two bills not only to convey a jail but in one instance devoting thousands of dollars of unexpended appropriations for the construction of a jail. The gentleman can object to this little pile of mortar in a historic place if he wishes to. It is in his power to do so. I do not beg that this shall be done.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman need not beg. The gentleman is mistaken when he said that I voted for the bills he referred to, if my recollection is correct. The gentleman speaks without knowing anything about it. The gentleman is just guessing. He does not know anything about it.

Mr. WINGO. I know only what the record shows.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; the gentleman does not know what the record shows. The gentleman can not show the record.

Mr. WINGO. I can tell the gentleman every date in connection with this matter. I can tell the gentleman everything in connection with these jail transfers. I have every one of the cases briefed, and I know the controversies connected with every one of them. I do not go into court without having the facts.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman can not cite where I voted for any one of them. I ask the gentleman to show it.

Mr. WINGO. Has the gentleman voted against any of the appropriation bills since I have been a Member of Congress? If so, which one?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not going to answer that question.

Mr. WINGO. Certainly you are not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman is undertaking to say what I have done without knowing anything about it.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; I have been here and I have seen the gentleman.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman has been here——

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will look up the record, he will find that he entered into a discussion of one of these jail bills.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order. I do not want to delay other gentlemen if there is objection to my bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent granting, remissing, releasing, and quitclaiming all right, title, claim, and interest of the United States of America in and to the block or square of land in the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, bounded by Second and Third Streets and Rogers and Parker Avenues, fronting 300 feet on Second and Third Streets and 290.25 feet on Rogers and Parker

Avenues, upon which is situated the old Federal jail, being a part of section 8, township 8 north, range 32 west, to the city of Fort Smith, Ark., for a site for a convention hall, community building, and other public purposes.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "Arkansas," insert "in trust."
Page 2, line 7, after the word "purposes," insert "Provided, however, That if said land shall not be used for such purposes it shall revert to the United States."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, there is another amendment that is suggested to me. I will call the attention of the chairman of the committee to it.

In line 7, page 2, I think the word "and" should be "or," so that it will read—

Or other public purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO: Page 2, line 7, strike out the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The title to that bill should be corrected to correspond to the amendment that was agreed to, I take it.

Mr. WINGO. I ask unanimous consent that the title be amended to conform to the text.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the title be amended to conform to the text. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CERTAIN OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES ARMY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2448) for the relief of certain officers of the United States Army, and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who reported this bill is not present, and I doubt if there is anyone here who can fully explain the provisions of the bill. I ask that it go over.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ROBERT T. LEGGE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1317) for the relief of Robert T. Legge.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $250 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay Robert T. Legge, a citizen of McCloud, Shasta County, in the State of California, compensation for professional operation performed on John Moran, who was injured while an employee of the United States Forest Service.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "$250" and insert "$150."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN M. FRANCIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 176) for the relief of John M. Francis.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John M. Francis, father of late Cadet John C. Francis, West Point Military Academy, who died on duty at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., the sum of $181, burial and transportation expenses.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ESTATE OF THOMAS H. HALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2716) to relieve the estate of Thomas H. Hall, deceased, late postmaster at Panacea, Fla., and the bondsmen of said Thomas H. Hall, of the payment of money alleged to have been misappropriated by a clerk in said office.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the estate of Thomas H. Hall, deceased, late postmaster at Panacea, Fla., and the bondsmen of the said Thomas H. Hall as such postmaster, be, and they are hereby, relieved of the payment of $544.73, together with the amount of the costs which may have accrued on account of the United States bringing an action to enforce the payment of said sum, the said sum being the amount of cash and funds held by the Post Office Department to be due from said Hall's estate to the United States for money misappropriated to his own use by a clerk in said office while the proffered resignation of said Hall was pending in the Post Office Department and while the said clerk was acting postmaster with the consent and acquiescence of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know why the bondsmen in this case should be relieved from peculations by a clerk in the post office?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, Thomas H. Hall was a postmaster at Panacea, Fla., a small post office. He was taken ill and was ordered by his doctor to come North. He went North. He resigned his position in the post office and understood that his resignation had been accepted and that his successor had been appointed. When he came back, however, he found that such was not the case. It was acknowledged that he left his resignation with the Post Office Department, and he went with his Representative to the Post Office Department here in Washington to see that it had been accepted. When he got back he found that his assistant postmaster had stolen a certain amount of money. Mr. Hall made good part of it, but the balance of it is still due. At the present time Mr. Hall is dead and his assistant is dead. His estate, which is made up of a small amount of land around Panacea, Fla., is being sued by the Post Office Department for the balance of this money, $546. This case particularly appeals to me because I do not think Mr. Hall intended to do anything wrong; that his understanding when he left Washington was that the Post Office Department had accepted his resignation. It appears that a new man had been appointed, but through some mix-up the appointment never arrived in Florida, and the assistant kept on acting and embezzled these funds.

Mr. MADDEN. What became of the assistant?

Mr. EDMONDS. He died. Everyone connected with the case is dead, but the children of Hall and Mrs. Hall are left, and all they have in the world is this small amount of money.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk again reported the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

By direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, Mr. SNYDER, chairman of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 11368) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arizona reserves all points of order on the bill.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes with the unanimous vote of the Committee on Indian Affairs, 20 members being present. I desire to state that the estimates which we were forced to consider in the preparation of the bill amounted to $17,471,763.39. The current law carries $15,311,108.84. The amount allowed by this bill is $13,136,113.39. The saving under the current law is therefore $2,173,995.45 and the saving under the estimate made amounts to $4,235,750. [Applause.]

I want also to say to the House that in this bill there are provisions which I do not think are subject to a point of order which will make it unnecessary in the future to appropriate certain large amounts, running into millions of dollars, which have been heretofore appropriated.

JOHN A. GAULEY.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, a short time ago the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] asked unanimous consent to return to No. 37 on the calendar, a bill (H. R. 2396) for the relief of John A. Gauley. I told him at the time that I would not object to doing so later, and I hope that he will make the request before we adjourn.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I shall object to returning to any bill or taking up any other bill on the Private Calendar for the balance of the day.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill passed this morning, H. R. 3458.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a statement by the Public Ownership League of America, accompanying the petition for public ownership of the railroads.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a statement by the Public Ownership League of America. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PONTOON BRIDGE ACROSS THE CHATTAHOOCHEE RIVER, GA.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution 137, authorizing the Secretary of War to construct a pontoon bridge across the Chattahoochee River at West Point, Ga., and for other purposes.

The Clerk reported the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That, in order to provide immediate temporary relief for the city of West Point, Ga., necessitated by the recent flood of the Chattahoochee River, which washed the bridge away at that point, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to detail the necessary engineers to construct and maintain a pontoon bridge across the Chattahoochee River at West Point, Ga., it being understood that the city of West Point will provide the necessary materials not owned by the Government and loan material, and to permit the use of such bridge as a highway, under the supervision and regulation of the mayor or other proper authorities of such city for such time as the Secretary of War shall determine to be necessary.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to construct and maintain a pontoon bridge across the Chattahoochee River at West Point, Ga., and to loan to the city of West Point, Ga., without expense of transportation to the Government, the necessary material for such construction now in possession of the War Department and not needed for immediate use: Provided, That the use of such bridge as a highway under the supervision, regulation, and control of the duly constituted authorities of said city of West Point, Ga., is hereby permitted for such time as the Secretary of War shall determine to be necessary: And provided further, That all cost of construction shall be borne by the city of West Point, Ga., and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations for the return of the material to the Government herein authorized to be loaned as he may deem necessary."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, this is a Senate resolution which directs the Secretary of War to construct a pontoon bridge at West Point. The amendment submitted authorizes the Secretary of War to construct at the expense of West Point.

Mr. WRIGHT. The provision is to authorize the Government to furnish the necessary material and the Government engineers.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was inclined to think that we might pass the Senate bill, but I shall not object.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the joint resolution for amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS PEARL RIVER, MARION COUNTY, MISS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10847) granting the consent of Congress to Marion County, State of Mississippi, to construct a bridge across the Pearl River, in Marion County, State of Mississippi.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Marion County, State of Mississippi, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Pearl River, at a point suitable to the interest of navigation, at or near "the Branton old ferry," located on the following described lands: The south half of the southwest quarter of section 19, township 5 north, of range 19 west, and the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 26, township 5 north, of range 12 east, all of said lands being located in Marion County, State of Mississippi, in accordance with the provisions of the act "to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this sounds like an ordinary bridge bill, of which there are a number on the calendar. Gentlemen on both sides of the aisle have asked to be recognized by unanimous consent for consideration of bridge bills. The reading of this bill would not indicate that there was anything extraordinary in the necessity for its consideration. Unless there is some extraordinary urgency for the passage of the bill I shall have to object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman will hear me. Recently we have had great floods in Mississippi. Nearly all of the bridges have been washed away and the good roads destroyed. The counties through which this highway is proposed to be built are able to float bonds to renew the bridges. But before the floods came the counties through which this highway is to run had already, as I understand, voted bonds to build this bridge. So if this bridge is built it will serve both counties, and we can get along without the other bridges until the counties can arrange to float more bonds. It will work a great hardship on these people if this bridge is not constructed. The bridges, as I read in newspapers, are all down, and no means of transporting goods or lumber. I have recently received a message from these people, urging the passage of this bill immediately.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If they have to issue bonds to construct this bridge——

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The bonds are already authorized, as I am informed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The bridge will not be constructed for six months or a year, anyhow. It will not have any effect on these flood conditions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I will say that the highway is to be built to the river, and they can not cross the river without the consent of Congress. I took it up with the Secretary of War and he has given consent, and they are ready to begin work as soon as they get the consent of Congress. It will not cost the Government anything. The bonds are, as I understand, already floated, preparatory to the building of the bridge. It will not cost the Government a nickel.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This bill might have been introduced a long time ago and reported a long time ago.

If they have constructed a highway up to the river and now want to construct a bridge they have been extremely negligent, or their Representative, in not asking the consent of Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I am a new Member——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not accuse the gentleman of being negligent. This bill was reported on December 16; another bill for a bridge was reported December 17. That was placed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I do not think it will hurt anybody if the right to construct this bridge goes over until January.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I trust the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know the gentleman said that he is new in the House. Since we have had a Unanimous Consent Calendar it is very seldom we consider these bills except on unanimous-consent days. I have noticed that we have passed a few lately, but I think it is bad practice. The gentleman is a proper, modest new Member of the House, and I congratulate him upon that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I trust the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, I think we ought to maintain the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield? This is right in the neighborhood of my district, and I know the gentleman from Mississippi has related the facts. This flood came——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not doubt it.

Mr. QUIN. And washed those bridges out.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not doubt the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi in the slightest degree; but this flood will not be overcome by authorizing the construction of a large bridge there. Now, we just had a proposition to construct an entirely different kind of a bridge. That was an emergency proposition and this is not.

Mr. QUIN. The gentleman will understand the other bridges have been washed away.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; and they will still be washed away a long time before this bridge is built.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman is talking about unanimous-consent day. We have not done it this session, of course, but the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Adamson, never waited for a unanimous-consent day. I have seen him many, many times here, after the Journal was read on an off day, ask that bridge bills——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman's recollection and mine do not agree. I was the minority leader, and I kept track of things in the House very accurately at that time. Once in a while, when there was an emergency matter or just at the end of a session of Congress, Mr. Adamson was permitted to bring up a number of bridge bills.

Mr. RAYBURN. And the two gentlemen always worked in harmony.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, let me ask for the benefit of the RECORD. I think it is safe, if any gentleman does object to the consideration of this bill—if the gentleman from Mississippi will give attention—I think it is safe for the gentleman from Mississippi to tell his constituents that there is assurance of a certainty that this bill will become a law and they can make their immediate arrangements for the construction of this bridge. I can not understand that Congress will not give its consent for the construction of the bridge.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, I think there is no doubt.

Mr. GARNER. It is a mere question of time now until the next unanimous-consent day will come up, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is a question of the orderly procedure of the House.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would like to call attention—as I understand it, the bonds to construct this bridge are already authorized?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. So I am informed.

Mr. CRAMTON. And as soon as this bill can become a law the actual construction of the bridge would begin?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That is my information.

Mr. CRAMTON. And hence whatever delay there is now is so much delay in the beginning of the construction of the bridge?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The consent of Congress is all that is desired.

Mr. CALDWELL. And winter is coming on.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "interest" and insert "interests."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Page 1, line 8, after the word "ferry," strike out all of lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, down to and including the word "located," in line 1, page 2.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "act," insert the words "entitled 'An act.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS TO-MORROW.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, on to-morrow, in addition to the bill reported by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, which will be brought up under a special rule, the House will have before it the Sweet pension bill, with Senate amendments, and possibly during the day the bill providing an extension of the life of the sugar board. It is very important that we have a good attendance to-morrow. I hope that none of the Members in anticipation of the coming holiday season will leave the city.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. RAKER. There will possibly be no committee meetings to-morrow. A good many Members want to get away in the afternoon, say at half-past 3 or 4 o'clock, and could we not meet at 11 o'clock in the morning?

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to inform the gentleman that I have two committee meetings myself.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think that will help matters, because it is barely possible that we will be called upon to act rather late in the afternoon on matters from the Senate.

Mr. RAYBURN. It seems to me it would expedite the Sweet bill very much to meet at 11 o'clock. It will be sent to conference, and I do not think the conferees will be in session many minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. There are committee meetings to-morrow—a number of them—and I believe we can dispose of the business before the House without any difficulty by meeting at 12 o'clock. And without further conference with gentlemen on committees I do not feel justified in asking the House to meet at 11. I have never done that except after conference with the heads of the committees.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HICKS, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence until after the recess of Congress, on account of official business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 20, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, transmitting list of property belonging to the United States and under his charge as Doorkeeper in the various rooms of the House in the Capitol Building and folding room in the House Office Building as of December 2, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 534); to the Committee on Accounts and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports from the War Department, Navy Department, and the Post Office Department, showing aircraft on hand as of November 1, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 535); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report on authorized transfers of appropriation for payment of lawful obligations of the Military Establishment already incurred during the fiscal years 1918 and 1919 and for which no appropriations are available (H. Doc No. 536); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. FORDNEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11309) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to fix compensation of certain laborers in the Customs Service, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 516), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11025) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Tombigbee River near Iron Wood Bluff, in Itawamba County, Miss., reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 517), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

R. 11053) to transfer the county of Early from the northern judicial district of Georgia to the southern judicial district of Georgia, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 518), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DENISON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10920) declaring Platte River to be a nonnavigable stream, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 519), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4383) to further amend section 858 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 520), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LANGLEY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11276) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 521), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11368) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 522), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, December 20, 1919.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, December 16, 1919.)

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dillingham	Kellogg	Norris
Ball	Edge	Kenyon	Nugent
Calder	Gay	Keyes	Ransdell
Capper	Hale	Lodge	Robinson
Chamberlain	Harrison	McNary	Sheppard
Cummins	Henderson	Moses	Smoot
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Spencer
Dial	Jones, Wash.	New	Trammell

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-two Senators have answered the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. HARDING, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. KIRBY, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. STERLING, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts answered to their names when called.

Mr. ELKINS, Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. GRONNA, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. KING, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. MCCORMICK, and Mr. WADSWORTH entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. KING. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is necessarily absent from the Senate.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] are absent on official business.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] are detained from the Senate on public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

SUGAR EQUALIZATION BOARD.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, if there is no objection, I desire to introduce a bill.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not wish to object, but the Senator knows we have a unanimous-consent agreement first to take up the sugar bill.

Mr. SPENCER. I think a bill can be introduced by unanimous consent.

Mr. GRONNA. I call attention to the agreement that this morning we are to dispose of the sugar bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I raise the point of order that under the unanimous-consent agreement nothing can be considered except the sugar bill.

Mr. GRONNA. That is what I had in mind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3284) to provide for the national welfare by continuing the United States Sugar Equalization Board until December 31, 1920, and for other purposes.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President is authorized to continue during the year ending December 31, 1920, the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.), a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Delaware, and to vote or use the stock in such corporation held by him for the benefit of the United States, or otherwise exercise his control over the corporation and its directors, in such a manner as to authorize and require them to adopt and carry out until December 31, 1920, plans and methods of securing, if found necessary for the public good, an adequate supply and an equitable distribution of sugar at a fair and reasonable price to the people of the United States. Sections 5 and 10 of the act entitled "An act to further provide for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917, as far as the same relates to raw or refined sugar, sirups, or molasses, are hereby continued in full force and effect until December 31, 1920, notwithstanding the provisions of section 24 of said act: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall expire as to the domestic product September 30, 1920: And provided further, That the zone system of sale and distribution of sugars heretofore established by the said United States Sugar Equalization Board shall be abolished and shall not be reestablished or maintained, and that sugars shall be permitted to be sold and to circulate freely in every portion of the United States. The termination of this act shall not affect any act done or any right or obligation accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any civil case before the said termination pursuant to this act; but all rights and liabilities under this act arising before its termination shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if the act had not terminated. Any offense committed and all penalties, forfeitures, or liabilities incurred prior to such termination may be prosecuted or punished in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been terminated.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] has an amendment which he desires to propose to the amendment of the House.

Mr. MCNARY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House with an amendment on page 2, line 4, after the word "product," to strike out "September" and insert "June."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, I take it that the object of the pending bill is to secure for the American people an adequate supply of sugar. The question which arises is, How can that best be done?

From the figures that have been presented from reliable sources it appears that there is no actual shortage for the year so far as the United States is concerned. There is absolutely no doubt that there is a world shortage.

This shortage, however, applies to almost every commodity that is used for human consumption. The prices of all foods have advanced under war conditions. The price of sugar has not advanced in the same proportion as have the prices of other food products. Clothing has advanced more than 100 per cent; shoes that before the war cost $5 are to-day selling for $15. Cotton and woolen goods are abnormally high.

Permit me to call attention, Mr. President, to some of the increases that have taken place within the last year or two. Wheat went up from an average before the war of 85 cents a bushel to a minimum price fixing of $2.25 a bushel for the lower grades, with the sky the limit for the upper grades.

Corn went up from a normal price of about 55 cents a bushel to $1.95.

Beef rose about 300 per cent, too.

Pork rose about 325 per cent.

Cotton rose about 200 per cent.

Sugar would have risen from 5 cents to 25 cents a pound, but it was handcuffed and a ball and chain was put on it, and 7.2 was the maximum price allowed for 96 test sugar, which the Louisiana sugar planters largely made. This was a rise of about 50 per cent.

Rice rose about 50 per cent, too.

There has, however, been no suggestion of placing a license or further continuing war conditions on any of the necessary commodities which are imperative for the comfort and well-being of our citizenship.

It has been said that the reason for the increase in the price of the commodities referred to is due to the fact that the United States practically raises or produces these articles within her own confines, but that sugar must be singled out for this war-time control, even though the country is normally at peace, because of the fact that she only produces about 50 per cent within the United States and her island possessions of the amount that the American people consume.

Every student of political economy knows full well that the United States is capable of producing a much greater quantity of sugar, and that if given proper encouragement, by treating sugar like other American farm products, the day will come when all of the sugar which is necessary for American consumption will be produced in this country.

Unfortunately from a political standpoint sugar cane is grown in only a small portion of the United States, but there is a great possibility even in this restricted territory of having an increased production.

The sugar-beet industry has grown by leaps and bounds.

The source of supply, aside from the domestic crop, is Cuba. Cuba has been the supply house for years and always will be until this Government adopts a more liberal policy to those who till the soil and who are endeavoring to make the sugar industry equal all the demands of the American people.

Such legislation as that contained in this bill is simply playing into the hands of the great refining interests of the country, and is working hardship upon those engaged in actual production. There seems to be no complaint from those who are simply laundering sugar from foreign countries, because, under the system of having but one buyer—the Sugar Equalization Board—the refiners do not have to compete with each other, and can depend on the Government for the supply of sugar which they otherwise would purchase.

Under the system of control of the equalization board the refiner is not required to make large advance investments, but can pay for his sugar as received. Furthermore, prior to the control, by their own testimony, they refined sugar at a profit of six-tenths of 1 cent per pound, whereas under the equalization board they were allowed 1.54 cents, and are confidently expecting even more, perhaps as much as 2 cents.

This bill could well be called an act to benefit Cuban planters to the detriment of loyal American citizens engaged in a great agricultural enterprise to produce sugar in the United States; and further as a special act to add to the coffers of the Sugar Trust.

You have not heard the voice of those engaged in the laundering process of sugar—for that is all that the refiner does—raised against the provisions of this bill. This great combination of capital, located along the eastern seaboard, will naturally be grateful to the Government for helping to perfect and make stronger a trust that only a few years ago Congress was investigating and striving to hold in check. The powers of this great trust have so far extended, and its influence is now so great, that even at this time those who were loudest against it now acquiesce and favor legislation to accomplish the very thing which the Sugar Trust has for so long a time been endeavoring to do.

It has always been thought by those who have given the subject much study that the refining interests were very close to each other, and while at times they disagreed this would not occur now, with the Government buying all of the available supply of sugar at the present inflated famine price and parceling it out to the various refiners according to their capacity, giving them whatever profit they desired or decided upon for the laundering process, and then deal it out to the American consumer.

What is the reverse of this proposition? It is that with no governmental control, Mr. Sugar Trust and Mr. Refiner will have to go to Cuba, as they have always done in the past, to buy the supply that the Cubans will sell them. Will they buy it at a price of 10½ and parcel it out to each other? That has not been the custom in the past. As a matter of fact, American capital owns great interests in Cuba. The Sugar Trust has large interests in some of the magnificent estates of that fertile island. While these holdings may not be in the same corporate name, you will find that the principal stockholders of the trust are the principal stockholders in the great sugar industries in Cuba. The quotations which were given to the Senate on yesterday evidenced the fact that December is higher by more than 2 cents than February. If this law should not be enacted, I believe that the December quotation would drop almost immediately—that the price of sugar in Cuba is being stimulated by the legislation which is now pending.

Some Senators may smile, if they will, at the statement in the minority report made by Dr. Taussig, of the equalization board, and which has been read in the Senate, but I predict that his statement would come true if this bill should be defeated at this time, and that the American people throughout the broad expanse of this great country would gain at least 2 cents a pound on a year's supply of sugar.

This shortage is only temporary, and why have we this shortage? It is because we have consumed more sugar in a short time than ever before in the history of the country. Let me give you some figures showing the consumption by way of comparison for the years 1918 and 1919.

The following table gives the per capita consumption by quarters for the two years as reported by the Sugar Equalization Board:

	Pounds.
First quarter, 1919	20
First quarter, 1918	18
Second quarter, 1919	26
Second quarter, 1918	24
Third quarter, 1919	24
Third quarter, 1918	15

Total for nine months, 1919, 70 pounds.
Total for nine months, 1918, 57 pounds.

This explains the shortage. It is not due to the fact that the United States has not a full supply of sugar under normal consumption. The figures that have been given of the production in the United States and her insular possessions, together with the amount available in Cuba, can not be disputed. But if the American public intends to consume a year's supply in nine months, the only remedy is to produce more sugar; and that can not be done by the narrow-minded policy which has existed in the past of making sugar the political football to be kicked at the convenience of every aspirant for office or every politician who seeks to perpetuate himself in office by trying to fool the American public.

The production of beet sugar can be greatly increased. It has done more to build up the West than any other single crop. It has helped to make the soil more fertile. In rotation with wheat, it has been the means by which larger returns of wheat have been made, and it has added to the resources of that great western country to a marvelous degree.

The cattle industry has increased, due in a large measure to the feeding of the by-products which come from the beet factory; and the beet pulp is considered one of the important winter foods for cattle.

Cane-sugar production can be increased, not perhaps in the same degree as can the beet production, but a large portion of that great empire, Texas, thousands of additional acres in Louisiana, and a great deal of Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, and Florida, could produce sugar cane to great advantage. But if this annual spectacle, or even now semiannual—or perhaps I would be right in saying almost a monthly performance on the part of overzealous statesmen to get sugar on the forum—is continued, you may well expect the United States in time to be entirely dependent upon some of our congenial neighbors for its sugar supply, and a great industry which should be developed, and which is an essential, employing thousands of American workmen, will be but a matter of history.

Suppose the great cotton industry should be licensed. What would be the result? The people would rise everywhere in their just indignation and demand to know what right Congress has to single out cotton, the greatest agricultural crop of the South, to be dealt with in such an unjust manner; and few there be, if any, representatives upon this floor from sovereign States who would contend for such a principle. Has it come that the Government is to engage in private enterprises? Has it come that the United States is to take over the private business of this country? If the experiment is to be tried let it first be done with some of our public utilities. Efforts in this direction thus far have not been very successful; and, I dare say, they will prove more unsuccessful when we reach the unhappy time that American enterprises and American spirit will be crushed by the cruel hand of the Government engaging in all classes of business.

Is wheat being licensed in this dawning day of peace? If so, I have not heard of it. Wheat is even more important for human consumption than is sugar; and I wish indeed that it could be found profitable to grow it in abundance in the extreme southern section of this country. Nature, however, has decreed otherwise. The prosperity of America depends upon the prosperity of her farmers. The wheat man is entitled to, and I want to see him receive, full compensation. The Government guaranteed a price during the war. At that time it was thought to be a liberal proposition, and there was much discussion and fear that the Government would meet with great loss in guaranteeing such a price for this great staff of life. It has not, however, resulted, as some of the economists of the time thought, in loss to the Government, as wheat to-day can be sold on the open market for more than that which the Government pays.

We must encourage production, acreage must be increased, more intensified farming conducted, so that the yield per acre will be greater. The great agricultural colleges of this country have done much in this direction, and to them are due the great improvements in scientific agriculture which we have witnessed within the past few years.

In my opinion, Government control of sugar is desirable only in times of extreme emergency, and then has to be very carefully handled to produce beneficial results. During the war the matter was handled by Mr. Hoover and his assistants, including, during the latter part of this period, the present equalization board.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GAY. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I take it that only a very few Senators will have an opportunity to speak, as the time is limited; and while the Senator has touched upon the price of wheat, I want to say to him that I wish he would incorporate in the RECORD the actual condition, not as some economist or professor would state it, but as the condition actually exists.

I will say to the Senator that the facts are that for the last month, at least, the actual price of wheat is at a premium of $1 above the price guaranteed by the President of the United States. In other words, the price of $2.26 in Minneapolis has been $3.26. I am simply mentioning this to show how this law is functioning, and how absolutely impossible it is for even Mr. Hoover to control the situation. I note that the Senator is about to enter upon an explanation in regard to Mr. Hoover, and I have no objection to that.

Mr. GAY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I am not making any apology for Mr. Hoover.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope the Senator will, because Mr. Hoover will need sympathy when the American people get the full information.

Mr. GAY. I am not standing here in defense of Mr. Hoover.

Mr. GRONNA. I simply wanted at this time to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the law has not worked out as it was suggested upon this floor by Senators and as it was figured out by the economists of the country.

Mr. GAY. I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that that is exactly in line with the statement I have just made.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator also referred to the fact that we were fearful we would lose money. Let me say to him that the only people who were charged any profit were the people of the neutral countries, and the Wheat Corporation took out of the pockets of the farmers of this country $27,000,000 just for the small amount of grain which was sold to the neutrals. And $3,000,000 of that was used by the Wheat Director for the expenses of the Wheat Corporation.

Mr. GAY. I thank the Senator for this interruption.

With the cessation of hostilities the extreme emergency passed, and in my opinion it would have been well had control ceased shortly thereafter. The equalization board continued to function, however, its only policy being to get sugar to the American people as cheaply as possible consistent with a price which was fair to the producers, and which had already been agreed upon. This is apparently a very laudable purpose, but it omits any consideration of the law of supply and demand. The result of it this year has been an excessive consumption on the part of the American people, which has gone unchecked, and which has resulted in the present shortage.

This shortage is now considered another emergency, necessitating a still further extension of Government control. The termination of this further period is again fixed at the end of the calendar year, at a time when, if any further economic mistakes are made, we will be in the midst of another shortage. The first suggestion I should make in regard to the bill would be that Government control should cease on March 1, when the Cuban production is at its height, when there is temporarily at least enough sugar, and when, therefore, the phychological effects of a shortage are absent.

Let me add right here that it does not matter, in my opinion, whether you have the Sugar Equalization Board or whether their services end on December 31; I am convinced that the price of sugar will be much less in February and March than it is now, for it is only natural that when the Cuban supply comes in the price will fall, and the Sugar Equalization Board will not be able to control that matter one way or the other. A transition from any Government regulation to normal conditions at this time would be far less abrupt than during the last three months of the year.

I am of the opinion that the passage of this bill at this particular time would be of very little practical value. The foundation of all our domestic prices is the price of Cuban sugar, and the time to deal with that question effectively was, as we all know, last August.

The Sugar Equalization Board apparently takes the position that its only function is to continue to get sugar to the American people at less than the market price. The American consumption at its present rate is all out of proportion to the world supply, and can only be checked by conformity to the market price or by putting the American people on rations. In spite of the expressed opinions of several Senators, the board apparently does not concede that it could fulfill a useful function, first in assuring the American people that through their contracts a large supply of Cuban sugar was actually coming to the United States, and in so handling this sugar, even at the market price, as to prevent the wild speculation which is likely to result from the sudden lifting of the controlled price and to prevent local shortages and inequalities of distribution. This being the attitude of the board, it seems futile to commit them to a program in which they themselves have no confidence.

Even the moderate measure of control contemplated by the present bill is subject to all the inherent disadvantages of Government regulation. Chief among these is the difficulty of getting first-class men to administer it. I do not believe that the Government will succeed in getting men of the present grade of the personnel of the Sugar Equalization Board to continue indefinitely to give their time to this work. Other manifest disadvantages are a certain inelasticity, the fact that certain large questions of policy may rise to the level of political questions, and the fact that a Government board desires to do the popular thing, of which the insistence of the present board on keeping the price of sugar at 9 cents on the Atlantic coast in the face of the economic situation in the country is a conspicuous example.

The producers of the country are in an unfortunate position. They honestly believe with Dr. Taylor that sooner or later the present excessive consumption of sugar in the midst of a world shortage will have to be checked by a higher price, or else there will be a succession of shortages in the last three months of each year. On the other hand, they have no desire to become profiteers, and feel that it is particularly unfortunate if Government regulation should be lifted just at the time of extreme stringency, for which that regulation is in part responsible, leaving producers to bear the onus of any excessive rebound of prices. For these reasons I fear that very little practical good can be accomplished by it.

In the debate on the McNary bill yesterday the questions of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] were very pertinent. He asked, in effect, what advantage the Sugar Equalization Board would have at the present time in purchasing Cuban sugar over the refiners dealing in the open market.

In answer, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] stated that the stabilization of price is a great element to the Cubans, that they would rather sell at a certain figure that would give them a profit than to sell here and there to individuals, and that they plainly desired to sell to the American Government the bulk of what remains.

In this the Senator from Oregon confused conditions which may have existed last August with conditions existing to-day. The above statement would not be supported by anyone in the sugar trade as true at the present time. Last year, under war conditions, the Cubans put their affairs into the hands of a committee, and up to September of this year, before it became apparent that there was to be a sugar shortage and that substantially higher prices would prevail, it is possible that an arrangement could have been made along the lines and governed by the motives indicated. On the last of September, at the time that the Cuban offer was withdrawn, President Menocal stated definitely that he could no longer control the numerous Cuban producers. They have since been acting independently or through newly formed associations which were organized not for the benefit of the United States but to get the maximum price possible.

It is apparent to anyone in the sugar business that the Cuban producers would expect to demand and receive a better price from a Government board which had been charged with the duty of purchasing their sugar than they would from the refiners in the ordinary course of business dealings. The refiners are a canny bunch who have been doing business with Cuba for the past 50 years. They are not talking about 20-cent or 25-cent sugar, nor about the extreme haste necessary to secure America's share of the Cuban crop. They have sized up the supply and demand, and particularly the purchasing power of Europe, against the present rates of exchange, as accurately as the next man. If they have left 3,000,000 tons of the crop unbought, it is because they have not lost their heads and are confident that in the next 60 days there will be a great deal of Cuban sugar looking for purchasers.

Prices, as you know, have ranged from 8 to 8¼ cents f. o. b. Cuba for deliveries as late as April and May, and I doubt if a single member of the equalization board could be found who would say that he expected to better these figures if directed to purchase all the sugar that was left. On the contrary, the proclamation of the President vesting the food control powers in the Attorney General, together with statements issued in connection therewith, was followed by a decided increase in their ideas of values by the Cuban producers. (Willett & Gray, Nov. 26, p. 544; Facts About Sugar, Nov. 29, p. 425.)

It seems remarkable that, in the face of the universal complaint of the present situation in which control by the Sugar Equalization Board has landed us, it should be so generally assumed that a continuance of that control is the right solution of that difficulty. If it were in the power of the Sugar Equalization Board to continue its present policy of furnishing the country with sugar considerably below the market price, and with no check on consumption by rationing, this policy would again result, as it has resulted this year, in nine months of cheap and abundant sugar and three months of acute shortage.

One reason for the present high price is that manufacturers have become excited; have gone to Cuba to buy sugar and have refiners work it up on toll. The refiners have stopped this practice, and the sugar market is easier. A little business sense is needed, a little shrewd trading.

The Senator from Ohio a few days ago called attention to the great increase in the cost that would come to the people of his State with a soaring price of sugar; but let the Senator look at the subject from another angle, if he will. It is true, and no one can deny, that with every advance of 1 cent in the price of sugar the 5,000,000 people of Ohio, based on the consumption of 92 pounds per capita, would mean an increase of $4,600,000 per year for their cost of sugar, but I contend that with the resumption of trade conditions as in normal times, there would be a saving of 2 cents, if not more, in the sugar bill for the people, which would mean a saving to the people of his State, based on the consumption of this year, of $9,200,000, and to the people of the United States of $193,200,000. This, I believe, can be accomplished without further interference or attempted governmental control.

Mr. President, these facts can not be disputed. There is absolutely no justification to single out the great sugar industry of the United States to be treated as is the liquor business, and other classes of business which have been practically outlawed. I say to you that the principle which you are now invoking will rise to haunt some of those who are so much in favor of it. I contend it is a false doctrine. It is absolutely unfair, unjust, and un-American.

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD an article from the Sugar Trade Journal, and also some telegrams and some statistics which I have here relative to the amount of sugar being produced, and the consumption in this country.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Weekly Statistical Sugar Trade Journal, Dec. 18, 1919.]

RAWS.

The week under review has been under the influence of the proposed legislation in Washington regarding further control of sugar in the United States by the Sugar Equalization Board. The bill, known as the McNary bill, passed the Senate on Friday, December 12.

After passing the Senate, the bill was presented to the House for consideration. The House of Representatives added an amendment to the bill, and the House bill contains the licensing clause of the food-control bill, and with this clause inserted the Sugar Equalization Board will have full control over the import, manufacture, and distribution of sugar, and it further provides that no one can do business in this product unless they have a license.

For the information of our readers we give herewith section 5 of the food-control law now in force, but the provisions of which expire on a presidential proclamation of peace:

"SEC. 5. That, from time to time, whenever the President shall find it essential to license the importation, manufacture, storage, mining, or distribution of any necessaries, in order to carry into effect any of the purposes of this act, and shall publicly so announce, no person shall, after a date fixed in the announcement, engage in or carry on any such business specified in the announcement of importation, manufacture, storage, mining, or distribution of any necessaries as set forth in such announcement, unless he shall secure and hold a license issued pursuant to this section. * * * Whenever the President shall find that any storage charge, commission, profit, or practice of any licensee is unjust, or unreasonable, or discriminatory and unfair, or wasteful, and shall order such licensee within a reasonable time fixed in the order to discontinue the same, unless such order, which shall recite the facts found, is revoked or suspended, such licensee shall, within the time prescribed in the order, discontinue such unjust, unreasonable, discriminatory, and unfair storage charge, commission, profit, or practice. * * * Any person who, without a license issued pursuant to this section, or whose license shall have been revoked, knowingly engages in or carries on any business for which a license is required under this section, or willfully fails or refuses to discontinue * * * shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any farmer * * * or other persons with respect to the products of any farm, garden, or other land owned, leased, or cultivated by him, nor to any retailer with respect to the retail business actually conducted by him, nor to any common carrier, nor shall anything in this section be construed to authorize the fixing or imposition of a duty or tax upon any article imported into or exported from the United States or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia; * * *."

However, the sugar-control bill is not yet a law, as, owing to the differences in the bills passed by the House and Senate, same will have to be sent to a conference committee, consisting of a certain number of Senators and Representatives, and if this conference committee can agree, the then adjusted bill is sent back to the House and the Senate for passage. The House and the Senate usually pass a bill agreed on by their conferees. When it is passed by both Houses as just stated, it is then presented to the President for signature, when the bill becomes a law.

The bill does not direct the President to use the functions of the equalization board, but only authorizes him to use its powers if he finds it necessary for the public good. It may be possible that the sugar situation will be so improved by the time the bill becomes a law that the President will find it unnecessary to use the Sugar Equalization Board. This is, of course, presuming that he signs the bill when it is presented to him.

Usually when a bill of this importance is introduced into Congress both Houses give consideration to parties interested in the business, and they have hearings and try to educate themselves on the subject at issue from parties that are well versed in the line of trade under consideration. In this instance they have passed a bill that is not in favor with the sugar trade, and even the equalization board, the people most interested, are also down on record as not being in favor of the bill, one of their reasons being that it is now too late to make any arrangements to secure an adequate control of the situation. A large part of the Cuba crop is already disposed of, the quantity being variously estimated at from 1,250,000 to 1,500,000 tons, and as Cuba is also decidedly against any further control of sugar, in our opinion it would be a very difficult matter for the equalization board to induce Cuba to sell the balance of their crop.

It is unfortunate that such legislation should have been introduced just at a time when the sugar situation seemed at the verge of materially improving, and it would only be a question of a very short time before sugars would be selling on a reasonably fair basis, taking into consideration the world's market for sugar. As an indication of this, the following range of quotations will give an idea of the situation: For December shipment sales have been made at from 12 cents to 12⅛ cents; for January, 10 cents; but for February–June shipments the quotation is only 8¾ cents to 8⅞ cents. Here in a period of a few months we have a decline of almost 3⅛ cents per pound, and we hardly see the necessity of any further control of sugar to put prices of this article on any lower level. As it is, if the equalization board starts to enter the market as a buyer in competition with others, it will mean only one thing, an immediate advance in sugars, and the sugar position for February–June shipments, instead of selling at 8¾ cents to 8⅞ cents, as they were when there was no thought of control, the quotation is more likely to advance to 9½ cents. All quotations mentioned above are f. o. b. Cuba.

The pending legislation in Washington is naturally disturbing our market, and buyers and sellers can not see their way clear to operate, and since the bill has passed the Senate there has been very little attempt to do business. Occasionally, some buyer is willing to take the chance of doing business, and a small sale of May shipment is reported to New Orleans at 9¼ cents cost and freight to that port, and another sale was made to an operator in New York of 15,000 bags of sugar for prompt shipment at 12⅛ cents f. o. b. Cuba, which we consider establishes a spot quotation of 13.55 cents duty paid, and which we now quote as the spot value. Other sales reported as we go to press, early January at 10½ cents cost and freight, 11.54 cents duty paid, and February at 9 cents cost and freight (10.04 cents).

REFINED.

The refined situation goes on without any particular change, the equalization board's committee still distributing limited amounts of sugar. Raw sugars, whites and otherwise, continue to arrive to the trade, and there are some 15,000 or 20,000 tons more of this sugar that will arrive, for the greater part, during the month of December. These sugars are helping out the shortage materially.

NEW SUGAR REFINERY.

New York, December 16, 1919.—Earl D. Babst, president of the American Sugar Refining Co., to-day confirmed the announcement by the Board of Trade of Baltimore that the company had secured a site in the Locust Point section of Baltimore, and would soon build one of the largest and most complete sugar refineries in the world, employing upward of a thousand men and women. The refinery will not only serve Baltimore, Washington, and Richmond, but portions of the Middle Atlantic and Central States, and will relieve the strain on other Eastern refineries during the times of sugar stress. This marks the revival of the sugar refining industry in Baltimore, which has not been active for 20 years.

CUBA.

New crop is progressing most favorably. More centrals are grinding than ever before at this early season of the year, and likewise the receipts of new-crop sugars are the largest. Cuba's production, which will be on the ascendant right along now until February–April, when the peak of weekly manufacture will be reached, will likewise increasingly alleviate the shortage at present in this country. Even after the height of production is reached Cuba continues manufacture in excess of demand and export shipping facilities. Receipts during the past week at the shipping ports were 12,669 tons against none during corresponding week last year, and 11,932 tons in 1917. There are 60 centrals grinding compared with 27 last year, and 50 at corresponding date two years ago. Centrals that have commenced the crop since last report are: San Lino, Stewart, Julia, Washington, America, Constancia, Rey, Elia, Espana, Niquero, Josefita, Rosario, Baragua, Mercedes, Adelaida, San Francisco, Saratoga, Toledo, Narcisa, Ciego de Avila, Cape Cruz, Lincoln.

New-crop exports during the week were 3,867 tons, all to the United States Atlantic ports. New-crop stock at shipping ports is 15,010 tons. This latter amount is augmented, of course, by stocks on plantations and on railways between plantations and ports. The rapidity with which the new crop is progressing may be judged by the fact that on December 15 the steamship Commodore Rollins arrived at New York with about 1,600 tons of new-crop sugars consigned to the Howell refineries.

The total exports old and new crop sugars during the week to the Atlantic ports were 18,918 tons, while 3,300 tons old-crop sugars were consigned to Europe.

Mr. Himely, Federal Sugar Refining Co.'s agent in Habana, estimates 1919–20 Cuba crop at 4,446,429 tons, provided labor and weather conditions continue normal. He cabled Tuesday afternoon that 69 centrals were working.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Our regular monthly cable is at hand, reporting exports during November of 7,000 tons to San Francisco and 1,000 to oriental countries. Although the Philippine crop usually starts in November, the shipment to

San Francisco is undoubtedly old crop 1918–19 sugars, as practically the entire new 1919–20 crop is reported sold to oriental destinations. The shipments of 43,000 tons in November, 1918, are shown in detail in the table appearing elsewhere.

EUROPE.

Advices from various producing countries in Europe state that adjustments have been made in the expected outturns for the 1919–20 campaign.

FRANCE.

The outturn of the beet crop for 1919–20 will be close to 170,000 tons refined sugar against 110,000 tons the preceding crop.

BELGIUM.

The crop is outturning about in accordance with previous estimates. Until final figures are received we will continue to estimate the crop at 125,000 tons.

HOLLAND.

Previous estimates of outturn will not be attained, according to latest reports, and we reduce the estimate of the 1919–20 beet crop of this country to 200,000 tons.

DENMARK AND SWEDEN.

Both these countries will produce good-sized crops, the former about 160,000 tons and the latter from 125,000 tons to 150,000 tons, in both cases more than sufficient for home wants.

GERMANY.

Advices from Germany continue discouraging, there apparently being no favorable feature, as the crop is being made under discouraging weather, coal, transportation, and labor conditions. The outturn now looks as if it would not exceed 750,000 tons.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA.

While reports are not of the best, there has thus far been no material change in estimates.

SUGAR TRADE VIEWS ON THE M'NARY BILL—CONTINUANCE OF FEDERAL CONTROL MAY KEEP PRICE UP—ALL AGREE THAT LAW COMES TOO LATE TO BE OF VALUE AND MAY PROVE TROUBLESOME—REGRET UNHAPPY EXTENSION OF UNCERTAINTY.

In the sugar trade the efforts making to continue Government control of prices and distribution during 1920 is viewed with disapproval, not alone because it would perpetuate the disadvantages of conducting business under artificial conditions and arbitrary regulations but for the reason that it promises to injuriously affect the interests of the consuming public by keeping prices at an abnormally high level. Willett & Gray said on Saturday:

"The United States Senate to-day passed what is known as the McNary bill, continuing the powers of the Sugar Equalization Board during 1920. This bill has been amended somewhat since its introduction in the Senate and we are without details at present of what such amendments include. The bill now goes to the House for consideration and, if passed by the House without change, will be presented to the President for his signature; after signing it will become a law.

"The entering of the Sugar Equalization Board as a buyer of Cuba sugars in competition with Europe and other buyers means only one thing—a considerable advance in the price of sugar, not only for near-by positions, but for practically the whole crop. The bill will not relieve the sugar situation one particle, and it is unfortunate that such a bill should be passed when the situation was becoming generally easier and the crisis in sugar passed."

In their weekly review of the sugar situation, Lamborn & Co. said:

"The sugar trade has again been thrown into a state of unsettlement by announcement from Washington that the Senate has passed the McNary bill. This bill, according to our advices, merely continues the Sugar Equalization Board in power during 1920 and only authorizes the board, under direction of the President, to purchase available raw sugar. The bill, we understand, eliminates the licensing system and also the embargo provision. The zoning system and price-fixing system will also be abandoned. In our opinion the passage of the bill does not change the situation in the least, aside from adding another buyer to the field. Without the licensing feature, the zoning and price fixing systems, it will be a rather difficult matter for the equalization board to exercise control. Furthermore, before the bill can become a law it must be passed by the House of Representatives and also be approved by President Wilson.

"There is some doubt in the minds of the trade as to whether the President will sign the McNary bill, if passed by Congress, inasmuch as the equalization board has from time to time advised him that it was too late to consider a continuation of Government control. It is understood, too, that the bill gives the President discretionary power as to whether he exercises the control incorporated in the law. The bill does not direct the President to take action, but gives him the power to do so if he sees fit."

Czarnikow-Rionda Co. express the opinion that such a law as contemplated by the McNary bill as now drawn would prove valueless, and add:

"Furthermore the time has long since passed when any deal could be made that would be mutually satisfactory to producers and buyers. The best course to pursue now is to let the normal law of supply and demand govern, and the situation will speedily right itself. In present transitory period from control to decontrol, with large demand and small supply, any attempt to forecast with accuracy the actual value of sugar would be useless, and it will only be after the turn of the year when supplies begin to arrive that the actual value of sugar, based on supply and demand, can be determined. With this country bare of supply, and with an appetite that will require considerable sugar to satisfy, present indications point to a heavy refined demand for at least the first three months of next year; moreover, while the entire refining capacity of the country might well be employed solely for home consumption, a large portion of that capacity must be devoted to filling earlier European purchases. Refiners' reluctance to buy raws appears to be influenced partly by a lack of knowledge as to the attitude of the Department of Justice toward merchants, and the undesirable publicity that would result from any attempt to enforce a war measure which should operate only during war times and periods of fixed prices, and not during normal times when an open market rules.

"Another reason for their aloofness may be the hope that producers will weaken in their ideas and make larger offerings than have come upon the market for some time past.

"In view of the existing acute scarcity of sugar in this country, bordering almost on a famine, the present hardly seems to be an opportune time to attempt to bargain for prices, as the question involved is not so much a matter of price as of actual needs to be cared for. The start of domestic buying of raws must be made soon, as Europe, notwithstanding the recent unfortunately heavy decline in exchange, has not yet finished purchasing on this side."

During the delivery of Mr. GAY's speech,

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. GAY. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I am sensible of the limitations of time that have been imposed upon this discussion, and I shall not attempt to interrupt it, much as I would like to take some part in it. But I will be obliged to the Senator if he will permit me at this phase of his speech to ask leave to insert some statistics upon the general subject, which I received a few days ago from Mr. Lowry, of the Federal Sugar Co., and which largely tend to sustain my own view that the attempt to legally regulate prices by taking control of some particular article of commerce, and confine its effort to that, must necessarily prove unjust and abortive.

Mr. GAY. I shall be very glad, indeed, to comply with the Senator's request, and ask that it come in at the conclusion of my remarks.

The statement submitted by Mr. THOMAS is as follows:

"According to recognized statistics, the following supply is available for 1920:

	Tons.
Beet sugar, carried over on Jan. 1, 1920	500,000
Hawaiian, new crop	500,000
Porto Rico	426,000
Philippine import, probable	100,000
Louisiana, 1920, production, conservatively estimated	200,000

"New crop beets available before January 1, 1921, 400,000 tons.

"Probable import from other foreign countries, 75,000 tons.

"Cuba, estimated production, 4,446,000 tons.

"Total supply, 6,647,000 tons.

"Canada, Mexico, and all the European countries combined took in raw sugar from Cuba and in refined sugar from the United States a total in 1919 of 1,600,000 tons.

"If they do the same in 1920, although England states they will use 500,000 tons less, it would still leave us with 5,000,000 tons. Against this our 1919 consumption was 4,200,000 tons, so that on the figures it does not appear that a shortage is probable, and to purchase the crop at present high values would be a move to sustain the market, rather than control it. As an indication of price tendency, let me point out that sugar in Cuba for December delivery has sold at 12¼ cents; for January, is selling at 10½ cents; and for February and March delivery, at 9 cents, a clear indication that as the crop comes on the price will be reduced, and the general opinion of the sugar trade is that present prices can not be maintained."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon to the House bill to provide for the national welfare by continuing the United States Sugar Equalization Board until December 31, 1920, and for other purposes, limits the provisions of the act to the domestic production of sugar to June 30, 1920. As the bill passed the House the power of licensing the sale of domestic sugar by the Sugar Equalization Board was extended to September 30, 1920, and to the Cuban crop until December 31, 1920.

In the first place, Mr. President, I want to express my dissent to any sort of legislation granting to any board created anywhere the power to license, giving power through the licensing system to control any industry in the United States. I now predict that by the passage of this bill no advantage will come to the consumers of sugar of the United States. I resent any charges on the part of Mr. Palmer, the Attorney General, or any other person, that the beet-sugar producers of the country desire to profiteer on the sugar sold by them, and I have no question of a doubt but what this statement can be proven, that the charges and the intimations that have been made emanating from the Attorney General's office are false.

Any Senator who is interested in this question need but take up the hearings held before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry during the month of October, and he will find recorded in those hearings statements which will prove beyond a question of doubt that as far as the beet-sugar producers of the country are concerned they were not only willing but they were anxious to have the people of the country know that they did not desire an excessive price for the sugar produced by them. They were willing to turn all the sugar produced by them over to the equalization board. They were willing to have the equalization board say just what price should be paid by the Government for their sugar. And now they are to be criticized and charges are made against them as profiteers for the unselfish position that they have taken in the sale of their product, which is used by all the people of the United States.

The Attorney General, Mr. President, sent out telegrams to all the beet-sugar producers in the United States warning them against profiteering and naming a price at which beet sugar should be sold.

The beet-sugar producers of the West paid $10 a ton for sugar beets raised during the present year, and that price was fixed and approved by Mr. Hoover.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Did the Attorney General also send telegrams to some men in Louisiana, who had a wheelbarrow full of sugar, as to what they should charge; and, if he did, what was to be their price?

Mr. SMOOT. The hearings do not disclose that, and therefore I am unable to say; but it is generally reported—and not denied—that sugar produced in Louisiana could be sold for 17 cents per pound with the approval of the Attorney General. I do know that shortly after the beet-sugar factories began to produce sugar, in the State of Washington, where the Utah-Idaho Sugar Co. operates two factories, a United States attorney seized 53,000 bags of sugar which had been produced in those two factories. I immediately telegraphed to the company to find out the conditions—whether it had the 53,000 bags of sugar on hand and whether it had been actually seized. It developed that the greater part of the sugar had been sold, not at profiteering prices but at the price which had been fixed by the Attorney General in his telegram. It was not delivered because of the fact that it was impossible to get cars in which to load it.

Learning that to be the case, I telephoned to the Attorney General's office and asked for Mr. Figg, the man who had the matter in hand, if he had authorized the seizure of the sugar. He informed me that he knew nothing about it; that no intimation even that it was thought advisable to do so had been submitted to him. He was in absolute darkness about it, and had no information whatever as to the condition existing.

I told him what I had received in the way of telegrams. I told him what the condition was, and he then said that I could rest assured that if such was the case he would take action in the matter within 24 hours.

Of course, we know there is a propaganda from one end of the country to the other to make it appear that the administration is actively engaged in cutting down the high cost of living; but I say to Senators now—and to the American people—that the high cost of living is not going to be cut down in the way this bill provides, and it is not going to be cut down, so far as sugar is concerned, by the passage of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Or any other.

Mr. SMOOT. Or any other bill, as suggested by the Senator from Colorado. Why Congress should act on a bill of this character touching only the one product produced in the country, the manufacturers of which are apparently willing to have the agency created by Congress to say at what price it shall be sold, I can not understand. I know that I speak the minds of all the beet-sugar producers in the country when I say that they are the last persons who desire sugar to soar in price.

I want to state at this time that my inclinations are—or were—to see that the bill never passed the Senate; but——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not wish to take the Senator's time, because I know it is limited, but I venture the suggestion that any bill of this kind to be at all effective should be mutual. Not only should the producer be forbidden to sell above a certain price but the consumer should be forbidden to buy above that price and punished if he does. In that way we would have an intelligible scheme, which might or might not work. Of course it would not overcome what, I think, is an immutable commercial law, which is that an attempted regulation of prices by legislation, as history has demonstrated, I think, almost without exception, must be a failure.

The only way in which prices can be regulated in the long run is for the consumers to refuse to buy after the price reaches a certain dimension. That is the way we used to do in the good old days before the Government was supposed to be a universal regulator of everything from raising wheat to the running of nurseries. It is that to which we have got to come sooner or later. The people have it in their own hands, and all of the complaint about Government inability to regulate price and reduce the cost of living is one of the consequences of the attempt of the Government to do something that no Government on earth ever did or ever can do.

Mr. SMOOT. The statement of the Senator from Colorado can hardly be controverted. I want to say that I think one of the most sensible actions that have been taken in the United States touching the question of high cost of living was taken the other day by the women of Illinois. They formed themselves into an association and laid down some 10 or 12 principles which they are going to follow, so reports say, and the principle one was to refuse to buy all high-priced commodities. If the balance of the country would follow the same policy, I want to say now that the high cost of living would begin to decline at a very early date.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is it not a fact that the Sugar Equalization Board is now in existence?

Mr. SMOOT. It is now in existence, and now has all the powers that it ever had.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is it the theory of the advocates of the bill that by giving a homeopathic dose of another year of the Sugar Equalization Board, under which these high prices have prevailed, they are going to get lower prices? I should like to ask the Senator further what reason is advanced by the advocates of the bill that excuses the Sugar Equalization Board from responsibility for the present situation?

Mr. SMOOT. The hearings covered that question very fully. The Sugar Equalization Board recognize that they have the same power now that they had a year ago, and that power does not lapse until December 31 of this year, but they positively refuse, and so testified before the committee, to exercise that power unless the power be extended another year.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They have been exercising the power, have they not?

Mr. SMOOT. They have.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Buying sugar and exporting sugar?

Mr. SMOOT. They have been doing it since the power was granted by Congress.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the condition that existed in the great fruit-growing sections of the State of Washington a few months ago. The fruit crop was coming in, and a large part of it was wasted and lost because there was no sugar with which to preserve it. A considerable portion of the crop is usually preserved and canned in a way which requires the use of a certain amount of sugar, and the sugar was not available.

Ordinarily an ample supply of sugar is obtainable from the beet-sugar production of California, but the Sugar Equalization Board absolutely prohibited the shipment of California sugar to the State of Washington at the most critical time in the season when it was most needed, and at the same time they were doing that and depriving our own people of the necessary sugar they were shipping vast quantities of sugar to Europe.

I have a statement here as to the amount which they did ship to Europe over the signature of the Sugar Equalization Board. I called the attention of the board to the emergency that existed in the State of Washington——

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator might add there that sugar was sold cheaper for exportation by 38 cents a hundred pounds than it was sold to the American people.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On October 7 I received the following telegram from the Sugar Equalization Board:

Referring your telegram October 7 regarding exports, quantities in long tons: To Royal Commission, which made out of their own sugar, not available for United States consumption, January to September, inclusive, 339,338 tons.

That was shipped to Europe. I asked them for the different periods.

Last six months—

That was the last six months prior to October 7 last—

Two hundred and seventy-one thousand tons—

Shipped to Europe.

Last two months 17,000 tons.

So they were still shipping sugar to Europe at the very time when our own people were suffering from a sugar famine.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one moment until I finish reading the telegram.

Other exports, January to September, inclusive, 154,000 tons. Last six months, 124,000 tons. Last two months, 41,000 tons.

The last exports referred to consist of shipments that were not made by the British Royal Sugar Commission, according to the statement of the Sugar Equalization Board.

Total all exports, including Royal Commission, January to September, inclusive, 493,000 tons.

This was shipped from our country to Europe while our own people were paying exorbitant prices and suffering from a sugar famine.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Oregon, with permission of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to make a brief observation. This was sugar that was never acquired from the Cuban producers by the Sugar Equalization Board. In the purchase of the crop of 1919, to which the telegram referred, it was agreed that the Allies might have one-third of the crop. That was bought by the British Royal Commission and equally distributed to Italy, France, and England. We took two-thirds of the crop. The figures which the Senator from Washington gave referred to sugar purchased by the British Royal Commission for the three nations, our allies during the war. At no time do I think the sugar purchased by the Sugar Equalization Board was ever shipped abroad.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is partially wrong in that last statement. It is true that most of the sugar that was exported was exported under the agreement as referred to by the Senator made by the Sugar Equalization Board at the time of the purchase of the last year's Cuban crop. The agreement was that the Allies should have one-third, as the Senator said, and the United States two-thirds of all the sugar that was purchased by the Equalization Board from Cuba. I wish to say, however, that there was sugar exported from the United States, as the Senator from Washington has stated, and that came about in this way:

Speculators—and I say that in the broadest sense—purchased sugar at the price that the Equalization Board had fixed and then exported that sugar.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] states that the shipment of sugar to which I referred was sugar that had been allocated to the Royal Commission. Evidently the Senator did not hear the telegram from the Equalization Board. They segregate in the figures which I just stated the amount which was shipped to the Royal Commission and state separately the amount that was allowed to be shipped out of the country whether by the Sugar Equalization Board or under their authority aside from the amount that was shipped to the Royal Commission. Furthermore, the total amount exported was exported under the authority of the Sugar Equalization Board, since the Royal Commission obtained its sugar through that board.

Referring your telegram of October 7, regarding exports, quantities in long tons: To Royal Commission which made out of their own sugar not available for United States consumption, January to September, inclusive, 339,338 tons. Last six months 271,000 tons. Last two months 17,000 tons. Other exports, January to September, inclusive, 154,000 tons. Last six months 124,000 tons. Last two months 41,000 tons. Total, all exports, including Royal Commission, January to September, inclusive, 493,000 tons.

Their statement there is of the separate quantities that were shipped of the total amount.

Mr. GAY. For what month was that, if the Senator will state it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was during the nine months preceding October 7 last.

As to the attitude of the Sugar Equalization Board during this period and the manner in which they did undertake to control the distribution of sugar in the United States, showing absolute responsibility for the condition that existed, I have here a further telegram from the board itself, which I received on October 17:

Your telegram with extracts from Kelly-Clark Co., Spokane, Wash., received—

This was in regard to complaint made by sugar dealers in the State of Washington that they were threatened with a sugar famine. They could not get sugar from the ordinary sources from which they supplied themselves, and they were endeavoring to get permission from the board, exercising war powers and controlling the distribution of the necessities of life, to get some sugar. This is the answer that I received from the board:

When purchase of beet sugar made by this board for distribution in middle, central, and northwest, situation was very serious and required prompt alleviation. We have arranged with Union and Alameda Beet Cos. of California to borrow from 10,000 to 15,000 tons beet sugar, which has been placed in hands of Ralph P. Merritt, Berkeley, Calif.; George M. Rolph, of C. & H. Refinery; and Mr. Drescher, of Union & Alameda Co., as committee to distribute this sugar in west coast territory, where it will be most needed. Statement regarding Atlantic coast and Gulf refiners having sufficient cane sugar to supply territory west of Chicago is not quite in accordance with facts. Sugar situation in East requires rationing, and we have also formed a distributing committee here to dispose of available cane supplies for the balance of the year in the most equitable manner. Regret can not change allocation of beet sugars already purchased, and respectfully refer Kelly-Clark Co. to Ralph Merritt, Berkeley.

That is, they referred the Spokane dealers to one of their agents. To determine whether or not those who needed sugar not only for domestic purposes, but in vast commercial enterprises, could buy on the market it was necessary to go to see some unknown agent of the Sugar Equalization Board. Yet it is said that the Sugar Equalization Board is not responsible for the present condition of supply, distribution, and price of sugar, and it is proposed to get relief from this situation by extending its life and powers.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I have only a moment left.

Mr. HARRISON. We having met at 10 o'clock, and the opponents of the bill having utilized all the time, I was wondering if they were going to allow those who are friendly to the bill any time?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; we are not to have any time.

Mr. HARRISON. I merely wanted to know.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Sugar Equalization Board at the time referred to was creating zones and allowing sugar to be sold in one zone as high as 17 cents a pound while it was being sold in another at 10½ cents a pound.

When interrupted, Mr. President, I was going to state that the only reason I would allow this bill to become a law—if I could prevent its enactment—is that, while no one can tell precisely what the Sugar Equalization Board is going to do if it is given the powers conferred by the bill, no matter what may happen, the sugar producers of this country will be charged with being responsible for the high price of sugar, if the high price of sugar is maintained. Those who want to get control not only over the sugar industry but of all of the industries of the United States, through the license system, no doubt would use that claim to further the ends of the nominee of the Democratic Party in the coming national election. The administration desires to get this power now; but if this bill does not become a law, no matter whether the price of sugar remains where it is now or not—and I do not believe it will remain as high as it is, even if no legislation at all were enacted—it will be charged throughout the country that the high price of sugar—if it be high—is blamable upon the sugar producers and upon those who did not allow this legislation to pass.

I am not going to vote for this bill. I will not vote to place in anybody's hands licensing power of any business of any character. It is wrong in principle, and no man should have that power, I do not care who he may be.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] has asked me to read the following telegram from George A. Zabriskie into the RECORD. The telegram was sent to Hon. G. N. HAUGEN, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, and is as follows:

[Telegram from the chairman of the United States Sugar Equalization Board.]

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN,
Chairman House Committee on Agriculture,
Washington, D. C.:

Replying to your wire of the 13th the United States Sugar Equalization Board is unanimously of the opinion that without the powers of licensing, embargo, and distribution control its continuation could not serve any useful purpose, and these powers the McNary bill fail to provide. Furthermore, the time has gone by when a considerable portion of the 1920 Cuban crop can be purchased at a reasonable price. The Equalization Board was a war measure dealing only with last year's crop and this has all been distributed. It has no control over domestic sugars now available in fair volume nor new Cuban sugars which are now beginning to move.

GEO. A. ZABRISKIE.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will allow me, I think it only fair to remark that that telegram refers only to the original bill, which did not contain the licensing feature. The present bill does contain that feature, and continues it up to the 30th of June.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that.

Mr. McNARY. I think that statement should follow the reading of the telegram.

Mr. SMOOT. I would have made the same statement.

Mr. President, I had no objection whatever to the McNary bill as it originally passed. That bill gave the Sugar Equalization Board the right to purchase and distribute sugar, but it did not give them the licensing power, and I wish to say that, so far as the beet-sugar producers of the United States are concerned, no licensing system is necessary, and Mr. Zabriskie so admitted.

I stated before the committee, in behalf of the sugar producers of the country, that all the sugar produced from beets could be purchased by the Government, if they wanted it, and the price fixed at whatever the Government officials thought was right. Why, Mr. President, when a price of 10½ cents was suggested by the Attorney General no beet-sugar producer in this country had sold sugar above that price. Yet within 30 days, when the zone system was created, the Sugar Equalization Board on its own accord purchased 200,000 bags of sugar to be shipped into one of the zones of the United States at 11 cents a pound. The board had a right then to purchase that sugar under existing law. I wish to say in behalf of the Sugar Equalization Board that they recommended to the President of the United States early in July, as I remember, the purchase of the Cuban sugar crop; and they could have purchased the Cuban crop then for $5.88 per hundred delivered in New York, whereas to-day, because they did not purchase that sugar, the American refiners are paying all the way from 10½ to 11 cents a pound for December delivery.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to correct the Senator. The Senator is simply misinformed. It is not correct to state that this sugar could be laid down in New York for $5.88. The Senator must remember that there were transportation charges and duty to pay.

Mr. SMOOT. I am saying that that was the price of Cuban sugar f. o. b. New York, and that is exactly as testified to before the committee. Of course, I recognize, and am perfectly willing to say, that the price of 10½ cents now for sugar f. o. b. New York means that the tariff is to be added to that price, just the same as it was to be added to the price of $5.88. If I were going to say that the price was $5.88 plus the tariff, which would amount to about a cent a pound on Cuban sugars, then I would say also that the sugar to-day was 10½ to 11 cents plus the same amount of tariff.

Mr. President, that is exactly the situation as it is to-day. If I had the time I should like to have placed before the Senate the estimates of the sugar crop of the world and other data; but that is impossible.

I should like to state, however, that even without this legislation the price of sugar is sure to decrease, and the Attorney General can not go before the American people and say after the price has declined that it was through any efforts of his, for that will not be true.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for just a word?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask permission to incorporate in the RECORD without reading a telegram from New York, dated December 18, addressed to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram referred to is as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., December 18, 1919.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

In their deliberations, has the Senate considered the quantity of sugar that will be available from our sources of supply in 1920? Assembling the recognized statistics they are January 1, 1920, domestic beets carry over 500,000 tons net crop; Hawaiian, 500,000 tons; Porto Rican, 426,000 tons; Philippines (for shipment to the United States), 100,000 tons; next year Louisiana crop, 200,000 tons; new crop (domestic beets available for sale before Dec. 31, 1920), 400,000 tons; imports from other foreign countries, 75,000 tons; Cuba's production, 4,446,000 tons; total, 6,647,000 tons. Canada, Mexico, and European countries in all took in 1919 from Cuba and the United States a total of 1,600,000 tons. England proposes to reduce her consumption in 1920 by 500,000 tons. Assuming that other countries take up this decrease and that the same amount is shipped abroad as last year, it still leaves an available supply for the United States in round figures of 5,000,000 tons. In 1919 we consumed 4,200,000 tons. This explains why many of us are not unduly excited at this time. The tendency of the market is shown by the fact that December sugar is sold at 12½ cents, January at 10½, and February at 9. Furthermore, I do not believe that these prices will hold after the new crop gets under way. To buy the crop at present values would be a move to sustain and not to check the market is my opinion. Incidentally we never had a sugar shortage when the market was left to the trade to furnish the supplies, although on the declaration of war a shortage greater than we have ever seen was caused by the locking up in the Central Powers and Russia of tremendous stocks intended for export. In supplying a market experience shows that individual effort counts for something, perhaps because they do not all make the same mistake at the same time.

C. A. SPRECKELS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I merely wanted to remark that December sugar is now selling in New York at 12 cents, January sugar at 10 cents, and sugar for February delivery at 9 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. February sugar is quoted at 8¾ cents to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 11.30 o'clock having arrived——

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That can not be done. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate is to vote at this time. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the House amendment with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GAY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I am paired with him during that absence, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], I vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. In his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. In his absence, not knowing his position on this question, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. THOMAS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a general pair, has not voted. I therefore transfer my pair with him to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], and that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] are detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family, and that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is detained by death in his family.

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 12, as follows:

So Mr. MCNARY's motion that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House with an amendment was agreed to.

RAILROAD CONTROL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, in speaking upon the pending bill day before yesterday I inserted a clipping from a newspaper concerning the subject of wages of employees. I am in receipt this morning of a letter from the Director of the United States Railroad Administration denying the truth of the recitals in that article. I ask leave to insert his statement in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, December 19, 1919.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: I notice in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of 18th instant you referred to the following as an instance of wage increase by the Railroad Administration:

"A Wabash Railroad water tank, operated by electricity, is tended by a farmer, who turns on the switch in the morning, works all day at his own business, and turns the switch off at night. For this he was formerly paid $20 a month. Under the Government Railroad Administration he was classed as an electrician, his time was figured for the entire day, and he was allowed $300 a month and given over $2,500 back pay."

It is evident that you have been imposed upon in this matter by being led to accept as true an utterly irresponsible and untrue charge which was circulated some time ago, and which at the time I challenged and denied. As is so frequently the case, however, the untrue charge continues to receive currency and the denial never overtakes it.

I have been unable to find anything in the wage transactions of the Railroad Administration which resembles this statement in any respect, and such a case could not have been evolved from the principles of wage adjustment adopted by the Railroad Administration.

Sincerely, yours,

WALKER D. HINES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDGE in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Sheppard
Ball	Gay	Lenroot	Simmons
Bankhead	Gerry	Lodge	Smith, Md.
Borah	Gronna	McCormick	Smith, S. C.
Capper	Hale	McKellar	Smoot
Chamberlain	Harding	McNary	Spencer
Colt	Harris	Moses	Sterling
Culberson	Harrison	Nelson	Sutherland
Cummins	Henderson	New	Thomas
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Townsend
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Trammell
Dillingham	Kellogg	Overman	Underwood
Edge	Kendrick	Phipps	Wadsworth
Elkins	Kenyon	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	Keyes	Pomerene	Warren
Fletcher	King	Ransdell	Watson
France	Kirby	Robinson

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRONNA in the chair). Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

[Mr. LA FOLLETTE resumed and concluded his speech. See Appendix.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 3.30 o'clock having arrived, the pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that is in violation of the unanimous-consent agreement, which was to vote at 3.30 o'clock. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CUMMINS. On the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. During that absence I am paired with him, and therefore must withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and asking that this announcement may stand for the day, on this question I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when Mr. NEWBERRY's name was called). I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. NEWBERRY] and his pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. As he is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], which I transfer to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] and withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. He has stated to me, however, that he would vote as I shall vote on this question, and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote, and I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], on account of death in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 65, as follows:

YEAS—11.

Ashurst	Henderson	La Follette	Sheppard
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Gronna	Kendrick	Nugent

NAYS—65.

Ball	Gay	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Gerry	McLean	Smoot
Borah	Gore	McNary	Spencer
Brandegee	Hale	Moses	Stanley
Capper	Harding	Myers	Sterling
Colt	Harris	Nelson	Sutherland
Culberson	Harrison	New	Thomas
Cummins	Hitchcock	Overman	Townsend
Curtis	Kellogg	Phipps	Trammell
Dial	Kenyon	Poindexter	Underwood
Dillingham	Keyes	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Edge	King	Ransdell	Warren
Elkins	Kirby	Robinson	Watson
Fernald	Knox	Sherman	Williams
Fletcher	Lenroot	Simmons
France	Lodge	Smith, Ga.
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Smith, Md.

NOT VOTING—19.

Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Smith, Ariz.
Calder	Newberry	Phelan	Swanson
Fall	McCumber	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Johnson, Calif.	Owen	Reed	Wolcott
Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Shields

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. CUMMINS, and Mr. MCKELLAR asked for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I transfer my pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. If present, he would vote "yea" and I would vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). As I have already announced, I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who is absent an account of illness in his family; but I understand that I can transfer that pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I therefore make that transfer and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I would vote "nay."

Mr. ASHURST (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Arizona was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is absent on the business of the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. He is absent, and not knowing how he would vote I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as before regarding my pair and its transfer and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Notwithstanding my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], I feel at liberty, from the information I have received, to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—46.

Ball	Hale	Myers	Stanley
Bankhead	Harding	Nelson	Sterling
Brandegee	Hitchcock	New	Thomas
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Townsend
Cummins	Kellogg	Poindexter	Underwood

So the bill was passed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Sentate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. ROBINSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

PAYMENTS OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8778) to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5 and 18.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, and 30, and agree to the same.

REED SMOOT,
HOWARD SUTHERLAND,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

BURTON E. SWEET,
JOHN J. ESCH,
SAM RAYBURN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have not signed the conference report, but notwithstanding that fact, at this late hour of the session, considering the importance of the passage of the bill and the substance of the legislation involved in it, I shall make no objection to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I offer the following concurrent resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 23) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That when the two Houses complete the business of this day (calendar day of Saturday, December 20, 1919), they shall stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian Monday, January 5, 1920.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to state that it will be necessary to have an executive session, but before going into executive session I should like to suggest that if there is any morning business it might be disposed of at this time, because it will be necessary for us to remain some time longer in session in order that the sugar bill and other bills may be signed by the presiding officers of the two Houses and there may be an opportunity to send them to the White House.

LUDWIG C. A. K. MARTENS.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I am directed to report back favorably Senate resolution 263, directing the Foreign Relations Committee to investigate the status and activities of one Ludwig C. A. K. Martens.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE. I am authorized by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back the resolution favorably, and I shall be glad if it can be considered and disposed of now.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution which had been submitted by Mr. KENYON on the 16th instant, as follows:

Whereas one Ludwig C. A. K. Martens claims to be an ambassador to the United States from the Russian Soviet Government; and

Whereas according to newspaper reports he refuses to answer certain questions before the Lusk investigating committee in the city of New York, a committee appointed to investigate propaganda against this Government, on the ground that he is such ambassador and entitled to diplomatic privileges; and

Whereas said Martens has headquarters in the city of New York and is alleged to be directing propaganda against this Government; and

Whereas according to his testimony before said Lusk committee he came to this country as a German citizen and is a member of the Communist Party, pledged to overthrow capitalistic systems of government the world over; and

Whereas said Martens, according to his said testimony, regards this Government as a capitalistic government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations is hereby authorized and directed, through the full committee or through any subcommittee thereof, to investigate as speedily as possible the status of said Martens; what alleged government or power in Europe he represents; what, if any, recognition of any kind has been accorded him by this Government; whether or not he is an alien enemy; what propaganda, if any, he is carrying on for the overthrow of governments; and all facts and circumstances relating to his activities in this country and his alleged diplomatic representation, and make report to the Senate of such findings.

The said committee is hereby empowered to sit and act at such time and place as it may deem necessary; to require, by subpœna or otherwise, the attendance of witnesses, the production of books, papers, and documents; to employ stenographers at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page. The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses. Subpœnas for witnesses shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee thereof. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The expenses thereof shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I move to amend the resolution by inserting on page 2, in line 11, after the word "representation," the following:

And all facts relative to the activities of any other party, parties, or organization bearing upon or relating to Russian propaganda in this country.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have some objection to it. As I understand the proposition, here is a man who is pretending to represent as an accredited agent to the United States a government which has never been recognized by the United States, and we are inquiring into his activities and into his nationality and into his citizenship and his right even to presume to represent Russia here, even if we had recognized Russia.

To go into the entire question of propaganda, as it is called, in America representing sympathy with or antagonism to Russian Bolshevism opens an immense and a very wide field. As I understand the resolution, it is merely to inquire into this man's impudence and insolence in pretending to be the representative of a country of which he is not even a citizen and a government which we have not even recognized. To lay down the bars and bring before the committee an investigation of the whole Russian question, the Bolshevistic question, the socialistic question, and Russian socialism, which is entirely different from the socialistic question in other parts of Europe, is opening too vast a field, I think.

As for myself I should be opposed to the adoption of any resolution with all that latitude, nor was it so reported by the Foreign Relations Committee in the form in which the chairman offered it.

Mr. BORAH. That is true; but I said at the time I would reserve the right to offer the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. BORAH. I simply desire if we are going into the question of Russian propaganda, to have the resolution sufficiently broad to cover the question of Russian propaganda. It will throw no light on the situation, neither will it help the situation, to know whether Mr. Martens really represents Russia or not. In fact, that could be ascertained without any senatorial investigation whatever. If we are going into an investigation of propaganda, there are some other activities which will be interesting and concerning which we ought to know, and I have offered the amendment to cover the Russian propaganda in this country. If we do not find it all, we do not want any, I presume.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The original resolution was not intended to cover the question of sympathy of American citizens with Bolshevism or against Bolshevism. It was intended merely to cover this man Martens's activities, the man who has recently refused to answer certain questions of a legislative committee. I think this particular matter ought to be confined to him and to the question of his right to refuse to answer, and his right to pretend to represent a government of some sort not recognized by the United States when he is not an accredited representative of such a government.

Mr. BORAH. The original resolution is not confined to that. It permits the investigation of propaganda connected with this man.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand, but it is only in connection with this man. The committee's idea was this: Here is a man who comes to America pretending to represent a government of some sort, claiming diplomatic privileges, and claiming secrecy and the custody of certain materials of various kinds connected with the I. W. W. and connected with all radical movement in America. The resolution was intended for the purpose of spotting him out, and that was all it was intended for.

Now, to spread out further, you might just as well go still further and spread it over all sorts of Bolshevistic or I. W. W. or socialistic propaganda in the United States from any source whatsoever, whether Russian or not. The very point and object of the resolution was to expose the position of this man Martens and the impudence and insolence of his pretending to be a diplomatic agent and refusing to obey the mandates of a committee of the Legislature of the State of New York.

Mr. BORAH. We will expose Mr. Martens if the facts are as supposed, and we will also expose some other gentlemen who are just as dangerous to the country and just as pernicious in their activities and bearing upon our relationship with Russia probably as much as Mr. Martens. Why not clean up this Augean stable while we are at it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. My reply is that the resolution was not intended to clean up the Augean stable. If you stretch the scope of the resolution as far as the Senator proposes to stretch it, then you have lost this little island Martens in a continent of inquiry, and the object was to spot him.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I desire to say merely a word as the author of the resolution. Of course I have no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. The committee will be able to go as far as it pleases and sit where it pleases.

My attention was directed to the activities of this man as the alleged representative of the Russian socialistic government. The Lusk committee in New York is making an investigation of the general subject of propaganda against our American institutions. This man was placed on the stand and answered some questions, enough to show that he was a member of the communist party, that he really believes in the destruction of all government which he termed as "capitalistic government," and that he believes this to be a capitalistic government.

He is a German and served in the German Army. He never registered in this country as an alien enemy and violated our laws in not so doing. He has a large office in New York with many clerks, and is carrying on, as I understand from reliable sources, a great propaganda against the institutions of our country. I felt that that ought to be investigated by the Senate, especially in view of his refusal to answer questions of the Lusk committee on the ground of ambassadorial privilege. That is why I introduced the resolution. I think we ought to get these facts. I have understood since that Mr. Martens had left New York and taken with him papers and documents the Lusk committee wanted, and that he had gotten those papers and documents beyond the reach of the Lusk committee. It seems to me a very proper matter of Federal inquiry.

I do not, however, want to be in the position of objecting to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and I hope the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] will not object to it. The committee may go as far as they desire, take up this Martens matter first, give us that publicity, and then go ahead with the other so far as they think is advisable.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a moment ago I said that if this amendment was adopted the Martens island would be lost in a continent of investigation. Of course that was almost an Irish bull, for you can not lose an island in a continent. I meant lost in a hemisphere.

I do not want the Senate to lose the idea of investigating Martens and his pretended credentials to America from an alleged government which we have never recognized and to spread it clear out and make it an inquiry into every phase of opinion concerning Russian activities. It seems to me to be losing sight of the point in issue.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, just one word and I will consent to take a vote on the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest to the Senator from Idaho that he might offer a resolution later to involve the remainder of the matter if he wants it investigated and leave Martens to be first investigated.

Mr. BORAH. The committee could report on Martens at any time and segregate that matter if the committee desired to do so and then go ahead with the other matter; but the intertwining and interlacing of this Russian propaganda makes it necessary, in order to have anything like a successful or sane investigation, to have power sufficient to cover the subject matter. I do not care to go into the mere question of sympathy with Russia or with the Russian form of government as it now exists; but I want to get light upon the real activities of certain organizations in this country with reference to Russian propaganda; and I venture to say that it will be found quite as interesting and perhaps just as distasteful to the Senator from Mississippi, if it is as I understand it to be, as Mr. Martens.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would not object to the Senator offering a resolution, but I merely want to single this man out and have him investigated.

Mr. BORAH. I do not object at all to any investigation being made of Mr. Martens; I do not wish to cover it or camouflage it; neither will I do so by this amendment. I simply want sufficient power to cover the question of Russian propaganda, whether it is connected with him or not; and we shall not have a complete investigation of Martens until we get that. I hope we shall adopt the amendment and proceed with other business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the position taken by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and I should regret to have the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] accede to the request of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and accept the tendered amendment.

Mr. President, months ago there were evidences that Mr. Martens was engaged, together with Mr. Noureteva, his secretary, in Bolshevist propaganda and in activities which had for their purpose the destruction of our Government. As advocates and representatives of Bolshevism they seek not only the overthrow of this Republic but the overthrow of all organized governments. There might not be objection if Mr. Martens or anybody else, in good faith, sought to aid the suffering people of Russia by securing contributions from the charitable people of the United States. Indeed, there might not be legal grounds for opposing Mr. Martens if he solicited funds to aid the soviets in Russia. While I might not interpose to prevent efforts of the character last mentioned, I would regret to see people so unwise and unpatriotic as to make contributions to aid the soviets of Russia, controlled by Lenin and Trotski. I have no objections to Russians soliciting funds for the purpose of aiding Kolchak or Denikin or the other factions in Russia opposing Bolshevism. These leaders are not attacking the United States or organized governments and are not attempting to organize the "proletariat" of the world into one international body, and to establish a dictatorship, which would overthrow all nations, obliterate all national lines, and plunge the world into chaos and ruin. The activities of Mr. Martens were so pernicious and sinister and so clearly directed against our Government and our institutions and were so calculated to bring about confusion, if not revolution, in this country that many Americans protested against his being permitted to remain in the United States, and some felt constrained to appeal to the authorities of the Government to have Mr. Martens deported.

I communicated with the Secretary of Labor some time ago calling attention to the activities of Mr. Martens and others associated with him in their revolutionary movements in this country. I made no objection to Mr. Martens's praising the soviet government of Russia; I submitted no objections to his soliciting funds for the absolutism of Lenin and Trotski. I contended that he and his associates were trying to overthrow organized governments, including the United States, and to incite the radicals and anarchists and the opponents of our form of government to deeds of violence against this Republic and its laws and institutions. It was against such movements that I was led to protest.

The information which I received from the Secretary of Labor was unsatisfactory. I invited his attention to the act of October, 1918, within whose terms the activities of Mr.

Martens clearly came, and asked the Secretary of Labor to take steps under the law to deport Martens because of his violation of the act to which I have just referred.

A Senator at my side asks me what the reply of the Secretary of Labor was. As I recall, his reply was that there was no law under which he could deport Mr. Martens. Of course, Mr. President, the position of the Secretary of Labor is not tenable. If newspaper reports are correct, and in the light of information which came to me and the truth of which I feel very sure can be easily established, Mr. Martens could be deported under the provisions of the act of October, 1918. He was engaged in a movement here, as other Bolshevists have been engaged in other countries, to overthrow government. He was secretly and otherwise aiding the communist and revolutionary parties in the United States in their efforts to create industrial paralysis and political revolution.

I do not now recall the date of my letter to the Secretary of Labor, but in connection with the same matter I offered a resolution in the Senate, being Senate resolution 33, on the 23d day of May, 1919, which in part is as follows:

Whereas one L. C. A. K. Martens, together with a number of other aliens, maintain in the city of New York a so-called "Russian Soviet Bureau," which pretends to represent the so-called soviet or bolshevist organization dominated by Nicolai Lenin, which has by force usurped the public authority and has destroyed public order in Moscow, Petrograd, and other parts of Russia; and

Whereas said bureau is supported by funds obtained from said Russian bolshevist organization, and is seeking to obtain possession and control of the several Russian consulates in the United States and to become recognized as the official representative of the Russian Government in the United States; and

Whereas said Martens and said Russian Soviet Bureau pretend to be seeking, on behalf of said bolshevist organization, trade relations with the United States; and

Whereas said bolshevist organization under the domination of Lenin has pretended to abrogate the legal institution of private property, without which contracts of sale and exchange and commercial relations are impossible; and

Whereas the institution of property is an essential part of human liberty and is the fundamental concept of law; and

Whereas no government is fit to exist or to be recognized by the United States which does not acknowledge and legalize the institution of property and provide legal process for the vindication of trespasses against property and for the enforcement of contracts with respect thereto; and

Whereas commercial and political relations are impossible with a government which does not recognize the institution of property and the legality of contracts for trade and exchange and which does not give legal sanction to credits which arise in transactions of trade; and

Whereas the bolshevist organization of Russia, under the domination of said Lenin, professes principles which are inconsistent with the liberty and law of the United States and which are essentially anarchistic and despotic and without the pale of the law of nations; and

Whereas it is inimical to the interests of the United States that aliens professing such principles and propagating the same be permitted to be in the country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be, and is hereby, directed to institute proceedings under existing law for the deportation from the United States of said Martens and other aliens employed with said so-called Russian Soviet Bureau in the city of New York, and all other aliens who are known to adhere to said so-called soviet or bolshevist organization.

Mr. President, because of the press of public business nothing has been done by the Senate with the resolution which I introduced and to which I have just called attention. Since its introduction, Mr. Martens, emboldened doubtless by the inactivity of the Senate and supported by radical and revolutionary elements in the United States and by newspapers owned and controlled by them, has been more aggressive and active than before in his efforts to spread the poison of bolshevism.

These revolutionists have penetrated every part of our country and have sought to cause strikes, destroy industry, spread discontent and revolution among the people and prepare the way for the triumph of a wicked and destructive internationalism. They have not sought to secure reforms or evolutionary development or to proceed under the law and under the Constitution to modify or change existing economic or political conditions. They have preached force, violence, sedition, treason, murder, revolution, and the establishment of a cruel, tyrannous class government, which finds its prototype in the bloody and diabolical dictatorship of Lenin and Trotski.

Martens has been a part of this movement in the United States. It was for this reason I urged his deportation. Claiming to be a representative of an alleged government, he sought to interfere with the domestic affairs of the United States and to sow the seeds of a bloody revolution.

Everybody is familiar with the insolent reply which Mr. Lenin made to the telegram sent to the revolutionists in Russia by Mr. Wilson.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that has been forgiven. Since that time, as it now appears, the President has communicated with Lenin and Trotski and undertaken to make peace with them.

Mr. KING. I do not agree with the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. That is the fact, it seems.

Mr. KING. But if it be a fact that Mr. Wilson has done what the Senator from Idaho says, it would not receive my approval, and I am sure it would not receive the approval of the great majority of the patriotic citizens of the United States. Mr. Wilson, as I understand, sought an opportunity to bring about peace in Russia and to aid by suggestion in the establishment of law and order. The American people are not in favor of recognizing Nicolai Lenin and Leon Trotski and the form of government, if it may be so denominated, which they represent. We have not forgiven Trotski and Lenin their betrayal of the Allies and the Russian people, and their insolent messages to this country and to other peoples demanding that they arise and destroy by blood and revolution their cherished institutions, their laws, and governments.

Mr. President, Mr. Martens has been interested in spreading the doctrines of revolution in the United States. He has not in an honorable and friendly way been seeking recognition by this Government as the ambassador of the Bolshevist government of Russia. If he had contented himself with knocking at the door of the State Department and asking recognition as the representative of a de facto government, if not a de jure one, I would not object to his presence in the United States, and no one would have reason for urging his deportation.

Mr. Lenin has a right, perhaps, to send his representative to our shores for the purpose of urging this Government to accord recognition to his military dictatorship. And, of course, it is for the government to which his accredited representative goes to determine what shall be done with respect to the request made. Mr. Martens has not acted as an ambassador or a reputed ambassador, or an accredited representative, but he has acted here as a revolutionist, as the representative of a revolutionary faction which seeks the conquest of the world.

His masters have endeavored to destroy Germany, overthrow Hungary, and prevent her reorganization; overwhelm brave and suffering Italy and undaunted and glorious France, as well as the new nations of Europe, which are groping out of darkness into the light of liberty and stable government. Martens believes that all governments must be destroyed. Our country is regarded as an odious expression of capitalism, and one which must surely be destroyed. He is not an ambassador, but an enemy; he has not sought to conduct himself as the representative of a civilized nation, but he has adopted the methods and behavior of a conspirator against our Government and the peace and welfare of the American people.

We have a right, when aliens come to our shores for the purpose of attacking our institutions and our laws, to demand that they be deported; and I here and now want to denounce some of the officials of the Labor Department for their failure to deal with Martens and other revolutionaries who are in our country. It would seem that there have been and still are officials in the Labor Department who are more interested in protecting aliens who would steal into our midst and rob us of our liberty than they are in enforcing the law and preserving the integrity of the Republic.

The failure of the Senate to act upon the resolution which I introduced doubtless led the distinguished Senator from Iowa to offer his commendable and timely resolution.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I did not know, or if I did it has escaped my recollection, that the Senator had introduced that resolution, or I certainly should have consulted with him before introducing this one.

Mr. KING. Oh, Mr. President, I do not want my distinguished friend to feel that I am at all affronted at the introduction of this resolution or his failure to consult with me prior to its introduction. I am glad that he offered his resolution. His resolution in the light of present conditions is better than mine, and will reach the situation which is now confronting us.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I want to suggest to the Senator that there is a phase of the subject which makes desirable an investigation of the so-called Martens bureau in New York, entirely separate and apart from a general investigation of Russian propaganda in America.

Mr. Martens claims to be the ambassador to the United States from the Russian Government. He has not presented his papers to Washington, or, if he has, he has not followed them up by establishing a residence here; but he has opened an office, consisting I think of two floors in the great Woolworth Building, where he has employed a large force of clerks, and these are engaged in an active propaganda of some sort in the United States. The State of New York has had its attention called to this condition, and it has appointed a commission, called the Lusk commission, to investigate Martens and his activities. In that investigation they seek to secure—upon the assumption, of course, that they have a right to do so—certain documentary articles or evidence in the possession of Martens. The latter declines to produce them, and shelters himself behind his assumed position of ambassador to the United States; and in that connection I understand that he has also removed many of his documents, if not all of them, beyond the jurisdiction of the State of New York, and therefore beyond the jurisdiction of the Lusk commission.

Now, I take it that if an individual comes to America as the reputed ambassador of a government which the country has not recognized and assumes to indulge in such activities, it may not only be the right but under certain circumstances the duty of the Government of the United States to aid the State of New York to ascertain what the real conditions are. I do not think that ever before in the history of this country, with the possible exception of the accrediting of Genet from the French revolutionary government, any so-called ambassador has assumed such prerogatives as this man Martens seems to have assumed and exercised. That being the case, I would suggest that this resolution, as prepared by the Senator from Iowa, be confined to Martens and his activities, for the reason that he claims to be an ambassador to this country and is protecting himself in whatever he may be doing by virtue of that claim. If he had presented his commission to Washington, if it had been accepted and an exequatur issued, he would have no more right to conspire against this Government or to do anything that would even seem to be a reflection upon it than any other ambassador.

Public opinion has very distinctly denounced the activities of von Bernstorff and Dernburg when, previous to our entry into the war, they took advantage of their official positions in this country to disseminate German propaganda and very seriously interfere with our activities and, of course, with the various contracts and agreements of the Allies with manufacturers in the United States for military equipment. It is an astounding proposition that a man can come to this country as the accredited official representative of a foreign country, whether we recognize it or not, and assume to mingle in our domestic activities, even in the most friendly way. If the Department of Labor has not interfered and if the Department of State has not interfered, then the people's last resort is the Senate of the United States; and the investigation, I think, should be confined to this man and to those who are under him.

Mr. KING. If I interpret the position of the able Senator from Colorado correctly I entirely agree with the observations which he has made and with the conclusions which he has reached. Mr. President, just a word further.

The principal object of this resolution, as I understand it, is to investigate the contention of Mr. Martens that he is the accredited representative of a foreign government, and to investigate whether he is an alien enemy, whether he is a German national and is still a subject of Germany, and what propaganda he is carrying on for the overthrow of governments, and all facts and circumstances relative to his activities in this country.

There is no purpose to inquire into what he did in Russia for the revolution or what moneys he may have collected in the United States for transmission to the Russian people. He is known to be a German, to have failed to register as an alien enemy, to make the claim to be the representative of a faction which is destroying Russia, and aiming at the destruction of civilization. He has defied the State authorities, who are uncovering his slimy trail, and seeks refuge behind the claim of immunity as an ambassador from a foreign government.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] will put his finger upon some organization, alien in character, and aver that it is seeking to overthrow our Government and carrying on a propaganda here against this Government, I shall gladly join with him in asking for an investigation; but let us see what the position of the Senator from Idaho is. He seeks to amend by adding to the resolution these rather general, certainly not specific or enlightening, words:

> And all facts relative to the activities of any other party.

What activities? Activities in regard to soliciting funds for the Kolchak government or for Esthonia or for some other of the factions in Russia? There is nothing to indicate.

Mr. BORAH. Well, suppose that were the purpose; what harm could it do? What possible injury could it do? I want the Senator to bear in mind, however, that I am not seeking to limit the investigation in regard to Martens at all, nor seeking to prevent the uncovering of his activities; but I am thoroughly satisfied that there are other individuals in this country who are carrying on a propaganda quite as vicious and quite as pernicious.

Mr. KING. Against this Government?

Mr. BORAH. Against this Government.

Mr. KING. To destroy it?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; to destroy it, if they shall carry out their purpose.

Mr. KING. Aliens?

Mr. BORAH. Aliens, yes; and professing to be representatives of some Russian government. Now, I do not see why we should protect one class and seek to uncover another. Let us have the propaganda in its full import, and let us judge, after it comes in, as to what effect it probably would have upon our Government or upon any policy which we might adopt which would be for the welfare of the American people or the American Government. I know that millions of dollars are being expended, if I am correctly informed—and I have seen much evidence of it, aside from my direct information—which ought not to be expended in this country without its being known for what purpose the money is being expended.

Mr. KING. Of course, I have not in mind what the Senator refers to. I know that we have in this country—and I am not complaining—representatives from the so-called Irish republic, soliciting funds and trying to place a bond issue for the purpose of aiding in the establishment of an Irish republic. I should not feel like investigating activities of that character. I should not feel like asking for an investigation for the purpose of ascertaining whether Mr. Martens or anybody else was soliciting funds from credulous and foolish or unpatriotic Americans to transmit to Lenin and Trotski. If they will confine their activities in efforts to establish a government in Russia, I have no complaint. I may differ from them; I may regret it; I may regret that an American would listen to them or make contributions for the maintenance of that government. But the resolution before us indicates—and it is a matter of common knowledge—that Mr. Martens's activities here are directed against this Government, against our form of government.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. KING. And the curbing of those activities is one of the reasons why this resolution, as I understand, has been offered.

Mr. BORAH. If I were seeking to throw any embarrassment in the way of the investigation, I would be subject to the implied criticism which is being lodged against me. I am not seeking to do that. I am seeking to enlarge instead of to curtail. I am perfectly willing that the fullest investigation shall be made of the matter about which the Senator is deeply concerned, and I do not disagree with him. But I am sure the Senator upon reflection could have no possible reason for objecting to a fuller investigation.

Mr. KING. None, if it is pertinent and germane.

Mr. BORAH. It is with regard to Russian propaganda. I do not like to state upon the floor of the Senate the matters which I have in mind. The Senator has the advantage with reference to Martens, because it has been exposed, an investigating committee was called, the Lusk committee has gotten the facts, and therefore we are able to state with some degree of certainty what Martens has been doing. My information is such that I personally have no doubt about it, and I think that if you look about you into what has been going on for the last eight or nine months no one can have any doubt about it. Why not, therefore, Mr. President, have a complete investigation? The committee can stop whenever it thinks it is irrelevant or impertinent to go further. I think, Mr. President, that it is fair the resolution be such as to give the committee power to go as far as the committee wants to go.

Mr. KING. It will be observed by Senators that the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho gives us no information as to the character of the investigation which he desires to be had or the activities which he desires investigated. What does this imply? The language is:

> Of all facts relative to the activities of any other parties or organizations bearing upon or relating to Russia or Russian propaganda in this country.

If the Senator will say that there are organizations here engaged in a propaganda hurtful to our Government, I shall not make the slightest objection to having the committee investigate them.

Mr. BORAH. I have no doubt that they are hurtful to our Government. But I do not know how the Senator might view it. I do not want the Senator to vote for it upon the supposition that when the facts are investigated he might conclude that they are not hurtful to our Government; but that is my belief, and I have been deeply interested in it for the last three or four months. I would like to ask, Mr. President, if this resolution is subject to objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that unanimous consent was granted for the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Unanimous consent was granted on my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the Chair was in the Chamber at the time the proceedings in reference to the resolution occurred, and recalls that leave was asked, and that the then occupant of the Chair declared the resolution passed, but subsequently somewhat informally declared that that action was reconsidered. So the present occupant of the Chair holds that leave was granted for the consideration of the resolution, and the pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. KING. I did not understand that the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I said, Mr. President, that so far as I had power I would accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is true.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection whatever to broadening the scope of the inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The actual proceedings of the Senate were that when the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] offered his amendment the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] stated that so far as he was concerned he had no objection to accepting it. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] took the floor, but in the meantime the Chair declared the amendment agreed to and the resolution passed. But, upon some question being raised, an objection being made, the Chair then made the statement that the whole matter would be taken back. Those were the actual proceedings. So the present occupant of the Chair holds that unanimous consent was given for the consideration of the resolution, and the pending question is the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that we are not concerned in the activities of any organization in this country that does not affect the welfare of this country. Just as I suggested a moment ago, I should not object to an investigation into the activities of individuals said to be soliciting funds for the Republic of Ireland, so called, or to aid the Egyptians, or to aid the East Indians, or to aid the Russians. The Senator's amendment, in the parlance of the street, is an "omnium gatherum." He does not give us any light. We do not know what the Senator wants us to investigate, whether it is the efforts of individuals to solicit funds for the Russians or whether it is the activities of individuals against our Government. If the Senator says now that there are organizations in this country seeking the overthrow of our Government, seeking by force and violence to destroy the institutions of this country, and that he has those in mind in seeking the adoption of this amendment, then I have no objection to it. But if it is a mere expedition into the clouds of rumor and hearsay, and into immaterial and irrelevant matters as to whether funds have been gathered in the United States to help Russians, I shall object; it seems to me that would not be relevant or material to the question involved.

There has been an investigation by the Senate already of Bolshevist propaganda in the United States, and there is nothing before us indicating the wisdom or propriety of any other investigation concerning Russia or activities in the United States relating to Russia. The resolution before us does justify an inquiry by the Senate concerning Mr. Martens and his activities against the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I can assure the Senator that I am not desirous of the investigation for the investigation's sake. I introduce about as few resolutions for investigations as anybody, because they seldom amount to anything. We have investigations, and the reports of the investigating committees pass into the archives, and that is the last of them. But I do think and I say to the Senator that I believe the information which would be gathered upon this is of great importance to the Senate and of great importance to the country. It is not a mere expedition to find out about subscriptions to funds. It it for the purpose of uncovering certain activities which I think are injurious and pernicious to our interests as a people and as a Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Idaho. [Putting the question.] The Chair is unable to determine.

Mr. BORAH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair that I have made several times to-day, I withhold my vote.

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I notice that he is not present, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], and as he is absent I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and the transfer of it, I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). First transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—34.

So Mr. BORAH's amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that morning business is in order.

I send to the desk a resolution which I desire to offer. I ask to have it read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 265), as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate shall appoint a committee of 10 Senators, who shall consider the ways and means of securing at the earliest possible moment the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany and report to the Senate such a resolution of ratification as in their judgment will meet with the approval of not less than two-thirds of the Members of the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, there are just a few words that I desire to say in reference to the resolution.

The leader of the majority party in the Senate has presented and the Senate has agreed to a resolution of adjournment for the Christmas holidays. After strenuous months of work we are about to take the usual Christmas holiday recess and go to our homes, rejoicing that our sons are no longer in Europe and that the battle line has ceased to fire. But as we go home we must recognize the fact that, although the young men of America have rendered their full degree of service to their country and their country's call, the Senate of the United States is still marking time as to the consummation of actual peace.

I do not offer the resolution by way of criticism. We may differ, we may contend, but we will never reach an agreement in this body by which we can secure peace if we continue to maintain the treaty of peace on the battle line either of party dispute or personal difference.

Some days ago I urged on the Senate that immediate action should be taken to secure the ratification of the treaty of peace. I was hopeful that something might be accomplished before the recess for the Christmas holidays took place. I believe and feel that there is a general desire in the Senate of the United States to work out some understanding by which the treaty of peace can be ratified and a two-thirds vote secured to such a resolution.

From some statements in the press of the country I judge that there is some misunderstanding as to my own position in reference to the matter. I shall therefore take the liberty of imposing upon the Senate again for a few moments to state my own position.

The day after the President laid the treaty of peace with Germany before the Senate, I think it was, I made a speech in the Senate defining my own position in the matter, and I have not myself changed that position. It was that I recognized that the treaty was a pact growing out of the compromises of 26 nations; that it did not entirely meet with my views, but I thought, in the main, it first led to immediate peace, and finally through the covenant of the league of nations it led to conditions that in the future would secure the peace of the world.

I was willing to take it and try it, and I refused to make any compromise myself until a vote was obtained in this body on unconditional ratification of the treaty of peace. Finally I proposed that resolution and that vote myself. It did not obtain the two-thirds majority that was necessary to secure its passage. It did not even obtain a majority vote in the Senate. I recognized that that vote was an expression of the sentiment of the Senate which could not be overcome and must be reckoned with.

That being the case, I do not intend that my views dogmatically expressed shall stand in the way of peace for the people whom I represent, and I have stated that now that I realize the treaty of peace can not be ratified along the lines that I desire, I am willing to yield and endeavor to make compromises to secure the consummation which I believe must be in the heart of every Senator who is a Member of this body.

I believe the wise course to pursue is to endeavor to secure a ratification of the treaty of peace with reservations that will preserve the league of nations for the future and yet meet with the consent of Members of the Senate who are unwilling to unconditionally ratify it, that will at least secure the votes of two-thirds of the membership of this body. That is my real position in the matter.

In the midst of that debate the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] asked me if I would be willing to vote for a resolution offered by himself that proposed to ratify the treaty of peace in all its essential features, so far as war was concerned, merely exempting from it the covenant of the league of nations temporarily, so far as we were concerned, and leaving it to the future determination of our country. I stated that I desired, first and foremost, to secure the ratification of the treaty of peace with as mild reservations as it was possible to obtain to secure the votes to pass it, but if in the last analysis no resolution could be passed through this body, with reservations or without them, relating to the covenant of the league of nations which would ratify the treaty of peace, then I would be willing to ratify it, leaving the league out of the ratification for the present, not rejecting it finally, but leaving it to the determination of the American people to decide whether they would accept or reject it finally.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. So that the record may be clear, I merely want to ask the Senator from Alabama a question. As I understand the Senator, he is making this statement as to the Knox resolution as his personal view?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely desire to say that I differ very materially from the Senator on that point. Under no circumstances would I vote for the Knox resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sure of that.

Mr. McKELLAR. And I think most of the Senators on this side of the Chamber feel the same way as I do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I said the other day that I felt sure that at this time there were few Senators who were willing to go that far, and that I only expressed my view. It is not what I desire or what I wish. I merely express my view of the situation. As a last resort I would go that far rather than deny to the American people the consummation of their heart's desire—the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr KING. Is it not a fact, Mr. President, I ask the Senator, that even the reservationists—not the mildest, but those who wanted rather strong reservations—did not go that far, and that it never has been at any time necessary to go as far as the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] indicates—in other words, that we might obtain ratification of the treaty without excising from it the league of nations?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the Senator. I do not think it is necessary to go that far, and I so stated the other day. I did not inject the question myself. The Senator from Pennsylvania asked me the question. I have few concealments about me; I am always willing to express my views candidly, and when the Senator from Pennsylvania asked me for my opinion I expressed it. It is not my desire to go so far and I do not think it is necessary to do so.

I offer the resolution that I now do because I do not think it is necessary. I believe that an agreement can be reached in this body to ratify the treaty of peace by reservations that can receive the vote of 64 Members of the body without going to the extent that the Senator from Pennsylvania proposes to go; but I want my constituency to understand that I am not seeking peace with reservations and to recognize the line on which I thought the treaty should be ratified—unconditional ratification. When I can not attain that result, I do not propose to stand in the way of peace. In the last analysis, if this treaty can not be ratified by mild reservations, then, so far as my vote is concerned and my responsibility to the people of America and to my constituency is concerned, I am willing to write peace in this document and go to the American public to determine who is right and who is wrong in rejecting the covenant of the league of the nations, for which I stand. I do not, however, believe that it is necessary or will be necessary to reach that conclusion. I do believe that if the Senate is not willing to ratify the peace treaty with proper reservations, then the American people will demand of the Senate of the United States that there shall be a final ratification of peace before many weeks have elapsed.

Mr. President, we are about to go to our homes to enjoy the Christmas holidays. I do not know that anything in the way of the ratification of the treaty of peace could be accomplished by our staying here in session for the next week, but I believe some body, representing the United States Senate, must take this matter in hand; that it must be declared their official duty to endeavor to reach an agreement that will secure the votes of 64 Senators in order that we can get together. We can not stand on the floor of the Senate and reach an agreement. There must be proposals, compromises, and consideration. That can only be done by a committee that is representative of the Senate, making proposals and discussing the matter with the various Members of this body.

If the Senate will pause now and agree to this resolution and allow the President of the Senate to appoint a committee of 10 Senators, I have no doubt he will make appointments, and he should properly do so, on the recommendation of the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. LODGE], the leader of the other side, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], representing this side of the Chamber.

I myself have no proposal as to who shall constitute that committee; but I believe if a committee of that kind is appointed, a committee on ways and means to secure ratification of the treaty of peace, by the time we meet in session in January a plan may be worked out, and probably will be worked out, under which the contending forces in this Chamber may get together so that we may celebrate the new year by acclaiming the peace of the entire world.

The resolution can work no injury; it can work no harm to any man. If the committee fails, it can do no injury; if it succeeds, I am sure the work of the committee will be acclaimed by the Nation. I hope there will be no objection. I hope that the leadership on the other side and the leadership on this side will now evidence a willingness to come together in a committee looking to the consummation of peace by the ratification of the treaty, looking to carrying out, and enabling the Senate to carry out, what I know and what every other Senator knows is in the heart of every American citizen at this Christmas season.

Mr. President, I know that the resolution which I have introduced must go over one day for consideration in the absence of the consent of the Members of this body. I therefore ask that the resolution may be considered without objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which he offers.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not think on the eve of adjournment that it is possible to consent to that. I certainly am not able to consent to it, because before I myself undertake to deal with any such question I should like an opportunity to consult the Republican membership of the Senate. I think, perhaps during the holidays, we can consider the subject matter without appointing a committee, if there are any proposals made to us. Therefore, Mr. President, I ask that the resolution go over under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a certified copy of a joint resolution passed by the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, ratifying the amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquor, which will be printed in the RECORD and placed on the files of the Senate.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution ratifying a proposed amendment of the Constitution of the United States of America.

Whereas both Houses of the Sixty-fifth Congress of the United States of America, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America in the following words, to wit:

"Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America.

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment of the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States provided by the Constitution:

"'ARTICLE —.

"'SECTION 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the expertation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

"'SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

"'SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.'"

Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas.

SEC. 2. That certified copies of this preamble and joint resolution be forwarded by the governor of this State to the Secretary of State at Washington, D. C., to the presiding officer of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

I, Tom J. Terral, secretary of state of the State of Arkansas, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of house joint resolution No. 1, passed at the regular session of the Forty-second General Assembly of the State of Arkansas on January 14, 1919, and approved by the governor of Arkansas on the 15th day of January, 1919.

Witness my hand and seal of office this 16th day of December, 1919.

[SEAL.] TOM J. TERRAL,
Secretary of State of Arkansas.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. POMERENE. I send to the desk a resolution unanimously adopted by the faculty of Toledo University, Ohio, favoring the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany, and ask that it may be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOLEDO UNIVERSITY,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Toledo, Ohio, December 12, 1919.

Senator ATLEE POMERENE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the last meeting of the university faculty the following resolution was unanimously adopted, and the secretary requested to forward copy of same to you:

"We, the officers of Toledo University, are convinced of the supreme importance of the ratification by the Senate as soon as possible after the beginning of the next session of the treaty of peace, with such interpetative reservations as may be proper and necessary, and we urge the Senators from Ohio to promote such action. We believe that a majority of the most intelligent and public-spirited citizens of all parties in the State will support them in favoring a resolution ratifying the treaty of peace with the league of nations covenant in terms that will readily permit the other signatories to acquiesce in the conditions stated by the United States."

Very truly, yours,

LUCILLE E. MACK,
University Secretary.

Mr. POMERENE. I have also received a telegram from the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, of Ohio, bearing upon the treaty of peace with Germany, and I ask that it may be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, December 16, 1919.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Over a year has elapsed since the armistice was signed, and we have no peace; a bleeding and stricken world asks for succor and security, and we are still haggling over the terms. Our own industry and commerce is left without direction, because conclusions can not be made definite without the knowledge of the terms of peace. We believe that the situation is as serious as has been any confronting the country since its beginning, and without criticisms or attempting to lay the responsibility upon any shoulders we earnestly urge that all efforts be exhausted to bring about an agreement, not only upon the peace terms but upon the league of nations. We believe that with the exception of an unimportant minority the people of the United States desire to have a league of nations, and that they realize that a draft of such a covenant is accompanied by almost insuperable obstacles. We realize that a legalistic interpretation of the terms, whatever they may now be or whatever they may eventually become, may involve the possibility of an abandonment of some of our cherished traditions. It may even involve greater sacrifices on our part. But would we be unprepared to make such sacrifices for the purpose of procuring for all mankind the elimination of war and the arbitrament of international disputes by force of arms? We believe that not only the peace of society but the establishment of stable government is hazarded by any further delay, and we therefore sincerely hope that the differences which may have arisen may be speedily allayed, so that we may, together with our recent Allies, concern ourselves with the consideration of a properly effective reconstruction program which will as speedily as possible restore to human life its security, provide for the stricken people opportunities for rehabilitation—physical, mental, and moral—and reestablish quickly international communication upon a basis of permanent friendliness and peace.

THE CLEVELAND CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.
By order of the board of directors:
PAUL L. FEISS, President.
MUNSON HAVENS, Secretary.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two short resolutions.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution 3.

NATIONAL RETAIL COAL MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION,
Chicago, Ill., December 5, 1919.

After consideration and discussion of Senate bills S. 3296, S. 3297, and S. 3378:

In re Senator McKELLAR'S bills, S. 3296 and S. 3297, the executive committee voted unanimously that these bills receive hearty approval and that the secretary-manager be instructed to convey to Senator McKELLAR the fact of this approval and support. Also that the coal trade of the country be made acquainted with the text of these proposed laws with a request for similar approval and support.

In re the bill of Senator EDGE, S. 3378: It is the opinion of this committee that the proposed legislation as covered by this bill deserves and has its support. The secretary-manager be, and is hereby, instructed to communicate this opinion to Senator EDGE and to acquaint the coal trade of the United States with the text of this bill and urge similar approval on the part of our constituent members.

Adopted.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., December 19, 1919.

Senator KENNETH McKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I quote below resolutions unanimously adopted by the board of directors of the Brooklyn Coal Exchange, Brooklyn, N. Y., on December 16:

"Resolved, That the board of directors of the Brooklyn Coal Exchange, having in mind the necessity for prompt and adequate legislation with respect to the admission to citizenship in the United States of foreign-born persons and their education in American principles, language, and Government, heartily approve Senate bill 3296, introduced by Hon. K. D. McKELLAR, and asks the support and cooperation of the Senators from New York State in an effort to have this bill passed without delay.

"Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Senator K. D. McKELLAR.

"Resolved, That the board of directors of the Brooklyn Coal Exchange, realizing the serious consequences to our Government and people which will inevitably result from the continuous defiance of law and authority, the preaching of anarchy and sedition, on the part of enemies within our borders, and the absolute necessity for immediate legislation which will effectually destroy this red menace, indorses and approves Senate bill 3297, introduced by Hon. K. D. McKELLAR, and begs support of this bill by the Senators from New York State.

"Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Senator K. D. McKELLAR."

Yours, very truly,
NATIONAL RETAIL COAL MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION,
ELLERY B. GORDON, Secretary-Manager.

He also presented a memorial of Local Grange, No. 77, Patrons of Husbandry, of Hillsdale, Mich., remonstrating against compulsory military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of Local Lodge No. 293, International Association of Machinists, of Parsons, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Cummins railroad bill and praying for a two years' extension of Government control of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 586, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Concordia, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the suppression of Bolshevism and the deportation of disloyal aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. CURTIS presented a petition of E. M. Stanton Post, No. 23, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Howard, Kans., and a petition of Victor Post, No. 293, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Fort Dodge, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation granting increased pensions to veterans of the Civil War and their widows, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Willowdale and Garden Plains, in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 569, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Iola, Kans., and a petition of Local Lodge No. 127, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Great Bend, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation for the suppression of Bolshevism and the deportation of disloyal aliens, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. FLETCHER presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Lakeland; of Local Lodge No. 708, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Tampa; and of Edward De Saussure Post, No. 9, American Legion, of Jacksonville, all in the State of Florida, favoring the suppression of Bolshevism and the deportation of disloyal aliens, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. KEYES presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 876, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Laconia, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the suppression of Bolshevism and the deportation of disloyal aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. KNOX. I desire to report from the Committee on Foreign Relations a substitute for Senate concurrent resolution 17 and Senate joint resolution 136. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report a joint resolution repealing joint resolution of April 6, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and Germany. I ask that it go to the calendar and be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 139) repealing the joint resolution of April 6, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and Germany, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the joint resolution of Congress passed April 6, 1917, "declaring a state of war exists between the Imperial German Government and the Government and people of the United States and making provisions to prosecute the same" be, and the same is hereby, repealed, to take effect upon the ratification of a treaty of peace between Germany and three of the principal allied and associated powers: Provided, however, That unless the German Government notifies the Government of the United States that it acquiesces in and confirms irrevocably to the United States all undertakings and covenants contained in the treaty of Versailles conferring upon or assuring to the United States or its nationals any rights, powers, or benefits whatsoever, and concedes to the United States all rights, privileges, indemnities, reparations, and advantages to which the United States would have been entitled if it were a ratifying party to the said treaty, the President of the United States shall have power, by proclamation, to prohibit commercial intercourse between the United States and Germany and the making of loans, or credits, and the furnishing of financial assistance or supplies to the German Government, or the inhabitants of Germany, directly or indirectly, by the Government of the United States or the inhabitants of the United States.

Any violations of the prohibition contained in such proclamation by the President shall be punishable as provided in section 16 of the trading-with-the-enemy act, approved October 6, 1917.

It is further resolved, that the United States reaffirms the policy expressed in the act of Congress approved August 29, 1916, in the following words:

"It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to adjust and settle its international disputes through mediation or arbitration, to the end that war may be honorably avoided. It looks with apprehension and disfavor upon a general increase of armament throughout the world"— and the authorization and request made in said act to the President that he—

"invite all the great Governments of the world to send representatives to a conference which shall be charged with the duty of formulating a plan for a court of arbitration or other tribunal to which disputed questions between nations shall be referred for adjudication and peaceful settlement and to consider the question of disarmament, and submit their recommendation to their respective Governments for approval"— is hereby renewed.

And it is further resolved in the language of said act that the representatives of the United States in said conference "shall be qualified for the mission by eminence in the law and by devotion to the cause of peace," and said representatives shall be appointed by the President and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

DAVIS CONSTRUCTION CO.

Mr. CAPPER (for Mr. FERNALD), from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2861) for the relief of the Davis Construction Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 343) thereon.

COLUMBIA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 3331) granting the consent of Congress to the Interstate Construction Corporation to construct a bridge across the Columbia River, between the States of Oregon and Washington, at or within two miles westerly from Cascade Locks, in the State of Oregon, and granting a license to construct and maintain the approach to said bridge over property belonging to the Government of the United States, and I submit a report (No. 342) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 3, to strike out the words "That the consent of Congress" and insert "Authority," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., Authority is hereby granted to the Interstate Construction Corporation, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near a point within 2 miles westerly from Cascade Locks, in the county of Hood River, State of Oregon, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That a license is hereby granted to the Interstate Construction Corporation, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate an approach to the bridge mentioned and referred to in section 1 of this act over property belonging to the Government of the United States, said approach to be constructed as near as practicable upon the following locations, to wit: Across an area 200 feet in width, the center line of which originates and bears as follows: Beginning at a point on the section line between sections 12 and 13 in township 2 north, range 7 east, Willamette meridian, in Hood River County, Oreg., 4,494 feet west of the southeast corner of said section 12, township 2 north, range 7 east, whence extending in a straight line bearing north 76° 44′ west to an intersection with the north shore of the Columbia River, in the State of Washington, the exact location to be fixed by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting authority to the Interstate Construction Corporation to construct a bridge across the Columbia River, between the States of Oregon and Washingon, at or within 2 miles westerly from Cascade Locks, in the State of Oregon, and granting a license to construct and maintain the approach to said bridge over property belonging to the Government of the United States."

FORT DOUGLAS MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. THOMAS. From the Committee on Military Affairs I desire to make a favorable report on the bill (S. 3327) granting certain rights of way and exchanges for the same across the Fort Douglas Military Reservation in the State of Utah, and I submit a report (No. 341) thereon.

I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is a bill prepared by the War Department, and a temporary permit has already been granted for the building of the line across the Fort Douglas Reservation, Utah, expecting that this bill would become a law, and thus approve the action that has already been taken by the War Department. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was to add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to Salt Lake City, a municipal corporation, organized and existing under the laws of the State of Utah, a perpetual easement and right of way for the operation, maintenance, repair, and renewal of a conduit and pipe line to be located not more than 25 feet easterly from the conduit and pipe line of the said city now constructed over and upon the Fort Douglas Military Reservation in said State, the same being connected with the water-supply system of the said city; and also for the construction, operation, maintenance, repair, and renewal of all valve houses which may be deemed necessary in connection with said pipe line: Provided, That the said conduit and pipe line must be at all times maintained entirely below the surface of the ground; that the ground must at all times be kept in such condition as will enable troops to pass over the same without hindrance; that no fences shall be constructed to prevent the passage of troops; and that all work done upon the reservation in pursuance of this grant shall be to the satisfaction of the post commander and under such regulations as he may prescribe in the interest of good order and discipline; and that in case of the removal of the conduit or pipe line or any of the valve houses the ground shall be restored by the grantee to its original condition.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 266) authorizing the printing of the bill to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Committee on Revision of the Laws in the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to print additions and amendments to H. R. 9389, or other bills concerning the same subject, if in its judgment necessary, in the style and form in which said bill is now printed, with such variations thereof as the said committee deems in the interests of efficiency and economy, and to so continue until final enactment thereof in both Houses of the Congress of the United States.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONDITION OF JEWS IN UKRAINE.

Mr. LODGE. I report unanimously from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with amendments, Senate resolution 259, offered by Mr. SPENCER on December 12, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. THOMAS. Let the resolution be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 259), as follows:

Resolved, That the attention of the Senate having been called to the awful massacre of members of the Jewish race in the Ukraine and to the existence and execution of pogroms, which indicate a determination to exterminate the Jews of Ukrainia, it is requested of the State Department that such information as may be available, not inconsistent with the public service, be transmitted to the Senate showing the actual conditions in the Ukraine, and indicating what steps, if any, have been taken or are contemplated on the part of our Government in the matter.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, in line 2, to strike out the word "awful" and insert "reported"; in line 7, to strike out the word "service" and insert "interest"; in line 8, after the word "Ukraine," to strike out "and indicating what steps, if any, have been taken or are contemplated on the part of our Government in the matter."

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3578) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to transfer Roxy Ann Mountain to the city of Medford, Oreg., to be used as a public park; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 3594) authorizing the Secretary of War to make donation of a captured German cannon and cannon balls to the Pullman State College, of Pullman, Wash.;

A bill (S. 3595) authorizing the Secretary of War to make donation of a captured German cannon and cannon balls to the State Normal School, of Cheney, Wash.;

A bill (S. 3596) authorizing the Secretary of War to make donation of a captured German cannon and cannon balls to the State Normal School, of Ellensburg, Wash.; and

A bill (S. 3597) authorizing the Secretary of War to make donation of a captured German cannon and cannon balls to the State Normal School, of Bellingham, Wash.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 3598) granting a pension to Elias J. Quick; and

A bill (S. 3599) granting an increase of pension to W. H. H. Hursh (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3600) for the relief of Jesse Dotts (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 3601) granting a pension to Florence E. Thornburgh (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 3602) granting an increase of pension to Pleasant H. Ripley (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

RAILROAD STATISTICS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, about three weeks ago I requested the Interstate Commerce Commission to furnish me with a statement showing the increased revenues of the railroads caused by the raise in rates, and the increased expenditures of the railroads caused by the increase in wages, showing the income and the outgo, the first by virtue of the increased rates, and the second by virtue of the increased wages.

They have sent me a table showing the facts that I requested, and in reference to the first item, I find that the increased revenues by virtue of the increased rate of fares and charges were $1,833,000,000 over and above what the same tonnage would have produced at the previous rates.

I find that the excess cost by virtue of the increased wages over what it would have been to the railroads was $1,775,000,000; or 97 per cent of the entire increased revenues by virtue of the increased rates were absorbed by the increased wage scale, leaving but 3 per cent out of that total.

I requested also a statement of the increased cost due to the general or flat raise that was extended under order 97. I find that there has been an additional increase to the shopmen for time and half-time and for overtime, and the slow freight service, clerks, maintenance of way employees, and miscellaneous adjustments, amounting to a little over a hundred million dollars.

This table also gives the different divisions of labor, the increased number of employees, the reduction of hours, the amount of service rendered in the aggregate per hour up to July, 1919, giving a detailed statement of the difference between the roads under Federal control and the roads under private control during the test period.

I ask that the first communication I send up be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 18, 1919.

Hon. E. D. SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: There is inclosed herewith a statement covering the various topics concerning which you requested information from our statistician yesterday.

Respectfully, G. B. MCGINTY, Secretary.

While statistics of revenues and expenses are available for October, 1919, the wage data are available only as late as July, and it is necessary to put all steps in the following series of computations on the same basis.

I. The volume of traffic under Federal control up to and including the month of July, 1919, was as follows:

Class I roads only.

	Ton-miles of revenue freight.	Passengers carried 1 mile.
Year ending Dec. 31, 1918	398,442,020,000	42,566,343,000
Seven months ending July 31, 1919	196,289,549,000	25,856,377,000
Total	594,731,569,000	68,422,720,000

II. The average revenue per ton-mile and per passenger-mile at the rates prevailing in 1917, before Federal control, and in 1919, after the rate increases coming into effect subsequently, were as follows:

	Calendar year 1917.	First seven months of 1919.	Increase.
Revenue per ton-mile ..... mills	7.15	9.73	2.58
Revenue per passenger per mile ..... cents	2.09	2.53	.44

III. Applying the increases shown under paragraph II, we get the following approximation of the increase in money which would have been paid by the public on the traffic of 19 months if the higher rates now enjoyed by the Railroad Administration, as compared with those prevailing in the calendar year 1917, the last year of private control, had been in effect from January 1, 1918:

Increased freight revenue	$1,534,000,000
Increased passenger revenue	301,000,000
Total	1,835,000,000

IV. The aggregate time worked by employees of Class I railroads during Federal control from January 1, 1918, to July 31, 1919, was as follows:

	Calendar year 1918.	First seven months of 1919.
Reported on hourly basis ..... hours	4,950,985,160	2,499,458,577
Total	7,450,443,737
Reported on daily basis ..... days	71,534,214	41,494,450
Total	113,028,664

V. The average rates of pay per hour and per day for the year 1917 and in July, 1919, the latest month available, were as follows:

	Year ended Dec. 31, 1917	Month of July, 1919.	Increase.
Reported on hourly basis ..... per hour	$0.318	$0.532	$0.214
Reported on daily basis ..... per day	3.334	4.930	1.596

VI. Applying these increases, we get an increased compensation on the aggregate time above shown as follows:

Reported on an hourly basis	$1,594,400,000
Reported on a daily basis	180,400,000
Total	1,774,800,000

This takes account not only of the increased rate per hour, but also of the additional men required because of the shorter working day.

VII. Comparing the increase represented by the freight rates and passenger fares, under paragraph III above, with the increase due to increased basis of compensation and reduction in hours per day, we have the following:

Payable by public	$1,835,000,000
Received by labor, or 97 per cent	1,775,000,000

The balance would be absorbed by increased prices of materials.

It should be noted that the higher basis of freight rates and passenger fares shown above was not actually operative during the whole period of Federal control, nor was the wage basis of 1919 actually used during the whole period of Federal control.

VIII. The number of freight cars and their average capacity is shown by the following table:

Date.	Number of freight cars.	Average capacity (tons).
June 30, 1915	2,341,567	39.7
June 30, 1916	2,313,378	40.5
December 31, 1916	2,329,475	40.9
December 31, 1917	2,379,472	41.5
December 31, 1918	2,380,879	41.5

IX. The ton-miles and passenger-miles in the last two years under private control compared with the two years of Federal control are as follows, for a mileage corresponding to Class I roads under Federal control:

Year ended—	Ton-miles.	Passenger-miles.
Dec. 31, 1916	360,751,781,794	34,502,599,882
Dec. 31, 1917	392,623,247,073	39,381,719,320
Total	753,375,028,867	73,884,319,202
Dec. 31, 1918	398,442,019,620	42,566,342,892
Dec. 31, 1919	366,308,547,875	44,788,784,401
Total	764,750,567,495	87,355,127,293
Per cent of increase, 1918 and 1919 over 1916 and 1917	1.5	18.2

The ton-miles are based on the revenue and nonrevenue ton-miles shown in the operating reports issued by the Railroad Administration. The nonrevenue ton-miles have been excluded on a percentage basis. In completing the year 1919 the 1918 figures have been used for the months for which 1919 data are lacking, namely, November and December as to ton-miles, and October, November, and December as to passenger-miles. The 1916 and 1917 figures published by the Interstate Commerce Commission have been slightly reduced to bring them to a basis comparable with the mileage of Class I roads under Federal control.

X. The railway operating revenues, expenses, and railway operating income during and since the test period may be summarized as follows:

Year.	Railway operating revenues.	Railway operating expenses.	Operating income as defined under the Federal control act.
Three years ending June 30, 1917	$3,374,060,692	$2,280,653,433	$906,524,492
Year ended Dec. 31, 1917	4,050,463,579	2,858,212,210	974,778,937
Year ended Dec. 31, 1918	4,913,319,604	4,006,864,762	690,418,778
Ten months of 1919	4,292,802,493	3,615,440,558	481,082,531

XI. Statement as to various wage increases. This information is given in a separate statement which is being prepared by the Railroad Administration. (Attached hereto.)

XII. Prices of railway materials. The following data from the Federal Reserve Bulletin for October, 1919, are illustrative:

Year and month.	Coal, bituminous, run of mine.		Steel rails, open hearth, Pittsburgh
	Average price per short ton.	Relative price.	Average price per short ton.	Relative price.
July, 1914	$2.20	100	$30	100
August, 1914	2.20	100	30	100
1915	2.20	100	30	100
1916	2.20	100	35	117
1917	4.40	200	40	133
1918	4.10	186	57	190
1919	4.00	182	47	157

XIII. The amount of the corporate surplus of steam roads at the close of each year, 1900–1918, is shown in a separate statement attached.

PHILOSOPHY OF RACE.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD, at the request of certain of my constituents, a copy of a speech delivered by Bolton Smith, one of the leading citizens of Tennessee. The speech contains the views of Mr. Smith on race relations and is entitled to careful consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The speech referred to is as follows:

A PHILOSOPHY OF RACE RELATIONS.

[By Bolton Smith.]

"I am not disposed to minimize the difficulties presented by our race question, but I have long believed they could be met and overcome more easily if there existed an intelligent philosophy of race relations; and it is with the purpose of arousing your thought on the subject that this paper has been prepared.

"When we think of negro progress we ask ourselves: 'Will not this progress result in a growing demand for social equality, and since we will never consent to social equality, why should we make our problem more difficult by aiding the progress which would seem to lead to it?' So firmly fixed is this thought that as soon as anyone begins to discuss the lynchings of negroes or to call for their better education many people at once conclude you are an advocate of social equality and intermarriage as the ultimate solution of the race question. But surely there is a middle ground between these two extremes—a point where we can take our stand, not as a matter of compromise, but by finding the common ground between extremes—the underlying truth which gives to both northern and southern opinion such vitality as each possesses. The North appears to think most often of justice to the negro, the South of the preservation of the purity of the white race. I believe these are the two sides of one and the same shield—the blood of the race must be kept pure, but so must its ideals—the former without the latter is like the body without the soul. America has a great task before her. Divided opinion on the race question is a poor preparation for meeting it. The duty of presenting a philosophy which will reconcile both views and on which North and South can both stand clearly rests with the South, and I feel sure such a philosophy would have been sought for long ago but for the apprehension that it might reinforce the claims of social equality. That such an apprehension is utterly unfounded is my belief, and the corner stone of the philosophy which I would suggest for your consideration is that justice and determination to develop the best in the negro will have precisely the reverse effect of that which many have feared.

"Even the most miserable man in the world would be unwilling to cease to be himself in order to become the most prosperous and contented man in the world. He would like to have the things the other man has, but he would insist upon remaining himself; for to turn into anything but himself would be death—extinction more complete than that meted out to the criminal on the scaffold. This is the natural feeling of the negro. He would like to have many of the things the white man has, but I can not imagine he would really like to be a white man. If at times he appears to act from different motives and shows contempt for his own race and a desire to enter ours, it is because he has been educated by us to the belief that no member of his race can become a self-respecting man or live a life of dignity and attainment—that all the prizes are denied him because of some incapacity, real or supposed, of which his color is the brand.

"We know that all normal white men have a desire to better their condition, but the gulf between the accomplishments of the two races is so wide that it has never occurred to many of us that the negro is also moved by this desire, and so we deny he can be influenced by any worthy ambition. Now, it is not unreasonable that the negro, especially in the beginning of his progress and before he has come in contact with any member of his race possessing education and character, should take us at our word; and so it would be only natural that those feeling a longing for a higher life should conclude that ambition can only be gratified by associating themselves as intimately as possible with white people, and of this, social equality would be the highest expression.

"But, as a matter of fact, few negroes wish to associate with white people. They are not comfortable with us. A few born and reared in Canada, where their associates, perforce, have been white people, may have become so used to us that they prefer to associate with us, but the mass of negroes greatly prefer to associate with their own people. Even where we find them seeking to live in white neighborhoods, this can be attributed to the fact that such neighborhoods are better policed, have better sidewalks and streets than negro neighborhoods, rather than to a desire to intrude.

A CINCINNATI NEGRO SCHOOL.

"Many people will be surprised at an observation made in one of the public schools of Cincinnati. There is no separate school law in that State. Negro children have the right to attend the public schools attended by white children. There is, however, a school in a densely colored portion of Cincinnati which, I am informed, is attended by negro children only. It is stated that the average marks of these colored children for scholarship are higher than those earned by the colored children attending the schools also attended by white children. Besides, it is found that a larger proportion remain in school through the higher classes than is the case with the other colored children. I am also informed that many negro families send their children to this school, although there are mixed schools nearer at hand. All this would seem to indicate that the children work to better purpose and enjoy their school life more when educated by themselves. Is not this perfectly natural? Can there be any doubt they are subject to many slights and discomforts when they attend a school attended by a large number of white children? The school to which I refer in Cincinnati has just as much money spent on it as the other schools of the city. If this were not the case—if it were not as good a school as the other schools of the city—these colored children would undoubtedly leave this school to attend the other schools, but this would not be because they wished to associate with white children.

WE MUST THINK ABOUT QUESTION.

"It is a commentary upon the little thought we give to the race question that no careful study has been made of other schools in the North situated in negro districts. In the absence of such a study, I fear many mistakes are being made. A recent effort of the school authorities to establish a separate negro school in a New England town was defeated by an association pledged to negro progress. Perhaps this action did not make for the progress of the negro; probably it would not have been taken had a progressive philosophy of race relations been taught. We must seek for such a philosophy, not only for ourselves, but because we must sooner or later recognize our responsibility for the preservation of American race relations, North as well as South. We must protect the northern white children as well as our own. If, as we believe, the instinct of racial separation is a conserving force helpful for our development, we should do our best to keep it from being blunted in the North as well as in the South.

It will doubtless be a long time before negro schools in the South are as good as white schools or before white schools are what they ought to be. But we are not discussing educational appropriations, but seeking to ascertain where negro progress will lead, and the Cincinnati incident seems to suggest that under free conditions and with equal opportunities negroes will desire to keep to themselves as much as we wish to keep to ourselves, and that so-called social equality would harm them as much as we feel it would harm us. The subject is new even to my own thinking, but one advantage accruing to the negro from race separateness has already occurred to me. Consider how harmful to the negro girl and how destructive of the purity of the negro home it would be if white men, with their superior manners, education, and wealth, could freely mingle in negro society without loss of standing in their own; yet this is exactly what social equality would bring about.

"Some may be surprised at the suggestion that there may be purity in the negro home, but all things are relative, and I am unable to see why the same forces which have developed morality in our race should not influence the negro also. Morality is not so much a rule of self-denial as of self-control, and it is plain that the introduction of the white man into colored society would make progress in self-control much more difficult—would handicap the negro woman in her effort to become a better woman—a woman more loyal to her husband and to her children. The French women are not lacking in loyalty and virtue, and yet the grand monarque did not find it difficult to have as his mistresses many noble women who, but for his intrusion into their affairs, would have lived spotless lives. The white man moving in negro society would be as Louis XIV moving among his vassals. Nor is it necessary to assume that the white man is especially bad, but it does seem that when brought in contact with a woman possessing any element of physical attraction, but for whom he feels no respect, the sexual passion in man does assert itself powerfully. It is for this reason that the woman in a liaison is usually of a social grade lower than that of the man. I believe we are here on the threshold of another great question badly in need of a philosophy, viz, the protective power for man himself of his respect for woman as the mother of the race. This is as yet little understood. Many a home is wrecked because of the destruction of ideals years before the marriage. But, as Kipling says: 'That is another story.' All I wish here to point out is that 'social equality' would perhaps prove more harmful to the progress of the negro than even to our own.

"Perhaps our difficulty in thinking about this question is because we unconsciously attribute to the negro the feelings we believe we would have if we were in his place. The white man knows that if he were to discover he had negro blood he would wish to keep it a secret and continue to associate with white people; and while this is true, it does not prove that a negro, who has never thought of himself as anything else, would be otherwise than uncomfortable if he were called on to associate with white people.

"Because of this feeling the white man concludes the negro must long for the association of white people and that nothing but force keeps him out. Now, since the more progress the negro makes the more difficult it would be to use force against him, it is not unreasonable that the white man should doubt the wisdom of aiding negro progress. This is a very unfortunate attitude for any man to have toward another. It is equivalent to saying that an ambition in a negro, which the white man feels would be legitimate if he were a negro, must be suppressed by force—that to keep ourselves up we must keep him down. As long as we believe this our attitude toward the negro can never be really helpful, for in spite of everything we will believe in our hearts we are doing the negro an injustice, and if our children advance toward the light they will feel this more keenly yet. Now, such a position implies that we are living in a world in which our ethical sense can not be wholly trusted—that God has brought into existence human beings and endowed them with certain aspirations which we recognize as legitimate—which we feel to be an important element in our own development, but which we find it necessary to suppress by force when they show themselves in the negro, in obedience to an instinct of race preservation which we feel is also a high and worthy impulse. Thus is divine harmony destroyed. As I undertook to point out in the paper I read before this club entitled 'Religion and Efficiency,' our ethical impulse and our religious vision are undermined whenever we find some part of our life, some cranny of the universe, over which these forces do not hold sway. If we found a planet where two plus two did not equal four, the validity of all science would be gone—the universe, instead of being a place of law, would be a place of unreason. So, also, it must be of the moral law; if it does not make for material progress, for health, for dignity, and for the happiness of life in every relation of race or class; it simply does not exist.

"But if the incident of the Cincinnati school can be taken as an indication, there is no conflict between our desire as ethical and religious beings to help the negro to progress and self-respect and our desire to maintain our race purity. On the contrary, these two powerful tendencies seem to work together and to sustain one another. Thus we have a new proof of the harmony between the spiritual and the material.

"When told of the valor of the British and the French, Americans do not feel the poorer. Rather do we fell the richer that we live in a world in which there is so much courage. These stories of the valor of our allies do not dim in the least the luster of the deeds of our own boys.

"In the same way I feel the fame of my race to be safe, and that I am the richer whenever I learn of some worthy accomplishment of a negro. It is as if the power that brought me here had said: 'If this wonderful thing of life which you share can strike a spark from even this humble breast, how much more may you not attain to!'

"Booker Washington sums up the whole matter in these words: 'If the white man wants to hold the negro down, he can not help but stay down with him.'

"If we can think of a negro as capable of progress and self-control—if we can believe he may think worthy thoughts, have worthy ambitions—make sacrifices for those he loves, and give his life for a worthy cause, then I, for one, will find it less difficult to believe in the high destiny of all human life. If we think meanly of the negro in all these respects, how can we be so sure of our own destiny? To paraphrase Garfield: We may know that the Government at Washington still lives, but how can we be sure that God reigns?

PARTNERSHIP WITH GOD.

"It is only when we regard life as a great partnership with God that it takes on that supreme value necessary to enable us to meet great sorrow or utter ruin with a smile. It is only in such belief that one can declare: 'They also serve who only stand and wait.' Yet, how can anyone have that feeling in regard to himself or his dear ones who believes the lives of these brothers in black are not only degraded now but incapable of improvement and forever without eternal meaning and value? And again, how can we be genuine democrats, seeing in democracy the great means of solving world problems, if we regard these millions about us as absolutely beyond the reach of progress, forever incapable of response to the appeal of freedom and of human dignity?

I hold no brief for the negro; I wish he were not among us; we have problems enough without him. But he is here, and what I seek is how best to prevent his presence from harming us any more than necessary. I am concerned first for the white man, for his ideals, his progress, and his faith, that these forces remain untarnished in our hearts and be handed undimmed to our children. But for the presence of the negro I believe the South would have been developed far more rapidly than the North, and would have been densely populated before the Northwest would have been thought of as an abode of civilization. But while the presence of the negro is a misfortune, it need not always remain so, for every misfortune, especially those for which we are not responsible, can be transformed into an opportunity through consecration and the power of the Spirit. If we can hold to our race integrity and yet instill the negro with self-respect and the longing for a better life, we will have accomplished something which no other superior race has yet even attempted; and will not this struggle, successfully made, be sure to compel the development in our own youth of a degree of patience, of justice, of purity, and of self-control unparalleled in the development of races? It is the difficult, not the easy, task which develops the best in us.

HOW TO LESSEN CRIME.

"Belief in the possibility and value of negro progress suggests new ways of meeting negro crime. A few years ago two young negroes held up a gentleman who early in the evening was on his way to a picture show with his little child. He made some motion which they—being inexperienced highwaymen—construed at indicating that he was armed and about to draw his weapon, and they killed him. Their criminal record had been a short one, and, as I recall it, they were not hanged, but sent to the penitentiary for life. A few weeks afterwards Bishop Gailor delivered a sermon at Calvary, in which he pointed out that we were producing just such young negro toughs all the time by letting the negro children roam the alleys; that even before school age many had contracted criminal habits they would never unlearn. He suggested that since there are so many negro families where both father and mother go out to work their young children should be cared for during the day in places where they would be taught simple work and play and trained as useful members of society. It would be even cheaper in the long run than spending so much on criminal courts and the penitentiary.

"Whatever may be the future of the negro in other parts of the world, one thing is certain—the white people of the South can make of the southern negro anything they please, the most docile and capable of servants, intelligent workmen and farm laborers. This will certainly reduce negro crime and confirm our prosperity and progress.

"There should also be established colonies for the feeble-minded. It is believed that many negro criminals, especially the murderers and those who commit the acts for which some deem lynching the only proper punishment, belong to this category. What we want is to prevent crime rather than to have to punish it, and if we could remove these negro defectives to self-supporting colonies negro crime would be much reduced.

LYNCHING DOES NOT STOP CRIME.

"One great trouble with lynching is that it does not stop crime, and that a community which becomes accustomed to this method of attempting to prevent crime is not likely to try any other method—least of all education or a colony for the feeble-minded. Yet I believe these to be the only genuine remedies, the only means which will afford permanent relief.

"We have all read interesting stories of great detectives, but in real life the great detective is not Sherlock Holmes, but the mass of the people. One contributes a scrap of information here and another there, and the detective need only put these together to reach a solution. Besides, there are few places where the criminal can take refuge with safety unless they have been carefully prepared beforehand. But the greatest difficulty our officers experience in catching the negro criminal arises from the fact that most negroes shield every member of their race whether innocent or guilty. They feel toward him as the peasants did toward Robin Hood, and they know he may not be given a fair trial if caught. Therefore, they feel it their duty to shield him by every means in their power. On the other hand, the course which I suggest would gradually convince the negro of the fairness of the white man, and most negroes would then become our allies in an effort to apprehend and punish the negro criminal. He is, of course, a greater menace to them than to us. He steals from them and works his evil purpose on them and their women far more often than on us and ours. Besides, he continually threatens to bring about a conflict between the races, which is the nightmare of the good negro.

"On the 26th of last July President Wilson issued a statement urging the American people to abandon the use of lynch law. Notwithstanding this, public lynchings have been on the increase, and I have reliable information that many lynchings have not been reported in the papers—apparently in deference to the President's wish that we do not disgrace ourselves in the eyes of Germany. One negro apprehended by men of his own race, and by them handed over to the officials, was afterwards lynched by white men. This is certainly not the way to encourage negroes to aid our officers. A negro woman, though enceinte, was lynched for declaring she intended to see her husband's lynchers punished.

LYNCHING A NEGRO MORE HARMFUL THAN LYNCHING A WHITE MAN.

"It should be recognized that when white men lynch a white man, or negroes lynch a negro, while the violation of the law is the same, yet no trail of evil consequences follows as when white men lynch a negro. Such an act is felt by every negro, and especially by the worthy negro who is trying to live a better life, to be an insult and a rebuke. It rankles as if it were a personal wrong. He says: 'If this negro were guilty, why did not the white people try him? He would certainly have been convicted, for they have the courts; therefore if they lynched him it is because they feel a supreme contempt for my race, not because they wish to punish crime.'

"Every lynching makes even the good negro feel less safe in his person and property. He says to himself: 'No matter how well I behave, they will treat me that way if they take the notion, and I can not help myself, and if my children and friends try to help me, even in the mildest way, they, too, will be lynched.' Again he may say: 'If this negro had been guilty he would have been tried, for the white people know they could convict him easily if he were guilty, and if they lynched him it was because they felt that he was innocent. They wanted to kill him anyway. He is dead just because he was a negro. Had he been white, he would be alive now.'

"According to the negro papers few, if any, negroes who are lynched are guilty of the crimes charged against them. Negro papers often suggest that a certain negro was lynched to cover up a crime committed by a white man, and this has doubtless been true in some cases. The white criminal has worked up a mob against some negro in order to turn attention from himself or to silence a witness. The negro is not the only sufferer from the lynching habit!

NEGRO EDUCATION INADEQUATE.

"There are few localities in the South where the education of the negro is anything like what it should be. This is often due to the feeling that education spoils the negro. In many localities the white people do not believe in negro education, and there would be no school but for the fear the labor would move if the schools were closed. The negro is too ignorant to realize how poor the education given his child really is, or he would be far more discontented. I know of counties which spend less than $1 a year to educate a negro child, and where negro teachers receive field-hand wages. There is, of course, a dearth of competent negro teachers because comparatively few colored normal schools exist, and these have been established only recently; but on account of poor salaries, good negro teachers, after having been educated at public expense, often abandon that occupation for other work for which they receive better pay.

"The attitude of the white people with reference to negro education is due in part to the mistaken philosophy to which I have called attention, as well as to their unfamiliarity with the newer ideals and methods of education. Many still think of education in terms of books instead of in terms of life and joyful 'service'—as a means by which one may live softly without toil, instead of as a means of learning to work more effectively and, therefore, more cheerfully.

BEST NEGROES EMIGRATE.

"If we continue to lynch negroes or permit them to be lynched, which is the same thing, and if we continue to refuse them adequate education, it is certain that they will continue to emigrate, and the best negroes will be the ones to go. They will doubtless encounter difficulties in the North, but I can not believe that those difficulties will be insuperable. Few, if any, of the Northern States are likely to have so large a negro population that the race question will obtrude itself in any general and aggravated form, and the law, which the white man looks to for protection, will also protect the negro. His political influence will grow and, finally, he will secure a foothold; and without genuine race pride and taught by a faulty philosophy, he will, I fear, gradually mix with the rest of the population until the American race will become a hybrid. On the other hand, if we of the South treat him with justice, he will remain here working out his salvation as a separate race. Even the Chicago Defender says his place is in the South, provided only he is treated properly there.

"No American, wherever he lives, wants to see the races mingle, even in the North, for if we do not care what happens there we must bear in mind that the North, being the most populous part of the country, will ultimately make the standards which will control and dominate the entire country.

BEST WHITE MEN MUST FORM PUBLIC OPINION.

"As I see it, we have this matter now in our own hands. Men such as you do not have to change your convictions or your practice. You wish to deal justly with the negro and you do deal justly with him—out of self-respect if for no other reason. But this is not enough. You must take one step further. You must recognize your responsibility as leaders. You must see to it that other white men who have not your culture or your wisdom do nevertheless act as if they had both. This is the only means of achieving a tolerable government in any democracy. The best thought can rule a democracy if it will take the trouble. It must rule it if we are to get anywhere. It is especially true that only in this way can we make the negro safe and happy in the South and retain the better class among us. I will close with an illustration.

"I know a negro born and reared in the North—a graduate of the University of Iowa. He came to the South, and with little or no backing, giving his time in the most unselfish way, teaching in log huts and going through all manner of discomforts, he has developed a remarkable school on a farm in the piney woods. His conduct has commended itself to the white people of his neighborhood, and they are among his most enthusiastic supporters, though he has also held his northern friends. After getting the school started and having lived in the South several years, he returned to Iowa, married a negro woman, also born and reared in the North and who was a teacher, and they now carry on this work together.

"These people seem genuinely religious, and they are certainly practical. When school reassembles after vacation each returning pupil is expected to tell in assembly what he did in a practical way to carry the ideas of the school to their neighborhood, and the simplicity of many of the recitals and the humbleness of the things done brings tears to one's eyes. The spectacle of these young lives, thus responding to the call of duty, of brotherhood, and of the higher life, is most affecting.

"Since the race has produced a few such persons, we have the right to hope that others like them will be developed. If we can produce enough teachers and leaders of this stamp, negro crime will greatly diminish and some day we may even develop enough negro leaders to be able to send them to Christianize and civilize the 150,000,000 negroes of Africa. This would be a great contribution to the solution of that world-wide race problem which may, indeed, threaten the peace of mankind in spite of the great league our President has gone to Europe to complete and from which we all expect so much.

"The white race of the South belongs to the most advanced race in the world—the negro, perhaps, to the most backward. If he can be inspired by our action and our ideals to develop such leadership as I have suggested, we will have demonstrated that the presence of the yellow races and the white races on the same planet need not necessarily prove an unsolvable problem—that there are, in fact, no problems which Christianity, robustly applied, can not solve.

"[NOTE.—That the views expressed in the above paper have, in part, been held for some years will be apparent from the following remarks taken from the baccalaureate address which I delivered at Peabody College for Teachers, Nashville, Tenn., on June 2, 1915:]

"This is a southern institution, controlled and managed by southern men. It has loyally served the South for more than a generation, sending out thousands of consecrated men and women inspired by the world's highest ideals, who in their turn have given of their best to the South. It is to-day sending you to continue that work. It is established to 'pay the debt due from present to future generations.' Where in all the world should southern problems be discussed with frankness and sincerity if not here? When, if not now?

"But for the race problems of Europe and the refusal of the dominant races there to deal with them in the spirit of justice and sympathy, I believe the war would not have occurred. It is unlikely that those responsible have ever dreamed to what a pass these acts of injustice would bring their world and imperil their own most cherished interests; yet this has happened. Some one has said that misery is the greatest social solvent, that under its influence society tends to become dissolved into its primitive elements. I believe that this can be said with even greater truth of injustice, of which misery is but an effect.

"Injustice works like subterranean waters, opening fissures, excavating caverns, rendering everything insecure; but when the crash comes we look for an outward explanation though the reason should be sought within. Is it not ever the same old story? If we wait long enough do we not always find that God's laws are self-executing, that injustice brings punishment?

"'He who watches over Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps.' 'Are we not all His children and the sheep of His pasture?' 'Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.' 'Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life.'

"Look into the heart of man, for the cause of everything that happens to him is there.

"All the poised balances of God would swerve
Did men not get the blessings they deserve;
And all the vigorous scales of Fate would turn,
Did men not get the punishment they earn.

"There is also forgiveness, but only to those who have realized deeply that, first, there is law.

SLAVERY NOT A SOUTHERN INSTITUTION.

"In this spirit let us turn to the consideration of our own race question; and we may well begin with slavery, which was a colonial and not a southern institution. To call slavery a southern institution is to sin against history in a still more important aspect. The South was pure Anglo-Saxon and slavery was as alien to the Anglo-Saxon as were despotism and sloth. You may call slavery anything you will—Portuguese, Spanish, Roman, oriental—but you can not call it southern in the sense in which we use the word. There never was any reason why our people should have felt called upon to defend slavery, and our idealists, beginning with Thomas Jefferson, never did defend it. I firmly believe that as practiced in the South it was a more kindly and less harmful institution than it ever had been anywhere else. But even with us it arrested intellectual and spiritual, and therefore literary, development. Aristocracy always has this tendency, as does any institution which degrades toil and holds back the common people.

"In time of war the laws are silent. Slavery set up the consecrated war as the permanent God-established relation between labor and capital. No discussion could be permitted which did not directly or indirectly tend to strengthen its hold upon the public mind. You might as well expect a child in swaddling clothes to learn to walk as to expect intellectual, spiritual, or literary progress from a people whose thinkers and writers were thus muzzled; whether consciously or unconsciously does not matter, the effect would be the same, perhaps greater, if unconsciously.

"Therefore, we can say that slavery was legalized injustice, the effect of which was not limited to the black man, and that in bringing it to an end the Anglo-Saxon people who chanced to settle in the Northern States rendered their brethren of the South, and especially the poor white people of the South, perhaps the greatest service one people ever rendered another. The mountaineers and other poor whites of the South represent part of the price we have had to pay for slavery. The emancipation proclamation freed them as really as it did the negroes; more so, in fact, as their future is more unlimited. They are naturally a fine race, but slavery had no permanent place for the white man who worked with his hands. He was forced to the poorer soils and the remote regions where the wealthy planter with his slaves did not care to follow. Slavery acted as a wedge driven through society, elevating those above, but forcing down those below.

PROGRESS OF THE SOUTH SINCE EMANCIPATION.

"The way in which the South has leaped forward since the war shows it must have been straining at the leash before the war. These verses addressed by the great English poet, Alfred Noyes, to the purified England which he believes will emerge from this war, could have been addressed to the South after her emancipation:

"And captains that we thought were dead,
And dreamers that we thought were dumb,
And voices that we thought were fled
Arise and call us, and we come;
And 'Search in thine own soul,' they cry,
'For there, too, lurks thine enemy.

"'Search for the foe in thine own soul,
The sloth, the intellectual pride,
The trivial jest that veils the goal
For which our fathers lived and died,
The lawless dreams, the cynic art,
That rend thy nobler self apart.'

"Therefore a Power above the State,
The unconquerable Power, returns.
The fire, the fire that made her great,
Once more upon her altar burns,
Once more redeemed and healed and whole,
She moves to the Eternal Goal.

"If the war in Europe seems to have a message for us, it is not because I believe that our race problem will involve physical conflict. I do not know what will come of it; probably something quite different from what we anticipate. But I do not believe there are two compartments in the brain which concern themselves with justice—one with justice to the white, the other with justice to the black. I am not thinking of the man who is lynched so much as of the law which is lynched; of our ideals which are degraded; of our youth who are perverted.

SOUTHERN WOMANHOOD.

"I know the spiritual leaders of the southern people do not approve of these things, but I fear many think they are the price we must pay for white domination and should not be condemned openly. It is the old dualistic idea that God holds only a limited sway in this world. With that in our hearts our faith can never become robust enough to lead us through the dangers of this complicated civilization. But a change is taking place. Recently the ladies of the Nineteenth Century Club in Memphis held a meeting presided over by Mrs. Isaac Reese, formerly of this city. They protested against a lynching which had taken place in Somerville and unanimously adopted resolutions. They declared that they did not desire the protection of lynch law, as it undermined the moral spirit of their husbands, their brothers, and their sons, and of the community in which they were to bring up their daughters.

"These resolutions remind me of an incident which took place in the old statehouse at Jackson, Miss., in the middle of the last century. It was told me by Gen. West, of Holly Springs, who was present. A Whig State convention was in session. The great orator, Sergeant S. Prentiss, rose as chairman of a committee to make a formal report, but in the course of his remarks drifted to the subject, ever near his heart, of the threatened repudiation of the Planters' Bank bonds. The news that Prentiss was speaking spread like wildfire. Everyone dropped his work and ran to the capitol, the ladies thronging the gallery. Prentiss was not aware of their presence until, in one of his flights, he looked up and saw them. He stopped and, changing the character of his argument, addressed his remarks to them. He told them that the esteem and veneration in which they were held was the flowering of the highest and best in man. He pointed out that any act by which man compromised with his highest convictions and consented to a life upon a lower level lessened his self-respect and would be sure to lessen his respect for woman. Therefore he appealed to the women of Mississippi to join him in a crusade against repudiation.

THE BASIS OF ASCENDANCY IS SERVICE.

"One night two years ago, while on a street car going to one of the commencement exercises at Fisk University, I witnessed the following incident: The car was almost filled, there being, I believe, no vacant spaces except the end seats of two benches across the aisle from one another; on one of the benches sat a white man, on the other a black man. A negro entered and, no doubt, blinded by the sudden light sat down beside the white man. It was plainly an excusable mistake which the negro would have rectified of his own motion in an instant. The white man, however, did not wait or call his attention to his mistake, but threw him across the aisle into the opposite seat. The man appeared to feel justified in what he had done; no doubt he thought the white supremacy required such a course of action. I do not believe he had ever been told otherwise by any of the organs of opinion which commanded his confidence. The late Edgar Gardner Murphy, himself a southern man, showed that the basis of ascendancy is service; but our schools, churches, and papers must teach this doctrine if such incidents are to cease.

A SOUTHERN TRIBUTE TO A NEGRO.

"In 'Commerce and Finance,' published in New York City by the great cotton authority, Theodore H. Price, a southerner, I read the following:

"Hannibal Beatty died the other day at Yorkville, S. C. He was born a slave and never rose above the station of an humble worker, yet the whole city joined in paying tribute to his memory. He was sexton of one of the churches of the white folks for 46 years—the church of the 'quality'—and for 41 years he was also the janitor of the courthouse. By the compelling power of a long life of faithful, honest service he won the respect of everybody. If ever he gave offense to white or black the circumstance is not of record, says the Yorkville Enquirer, one of the best newspapers of the South. Courteous, faithful, kindly, and obliging he exemplified in his character the best qualities of his race.

"When he came to die he had one request to make; that was that he should be buried from the church of which he had been the sexton so long. The services were conducted by the white pastor, with the negro clergyman of the Methodist Church of which Hannibal was a member, assisting. The church was crowded with whites and blacks in about equal numbers. There were many floral offerings from both races.

"Most remarkable of all the tributes was that bench and bar, city and county officials, and officers of the church acted as pallbearers.

"Yorkville honored itself in honoring Hannibal Beatty. He played well his modest part and man can do no more. He was a credit to his race in his living, and in the tribute paid to him in his death there is abiding proof of the affection in which the southerner holds the worthy and faithful black.

"The street car incident I have described might have happened in Memphis or any other southern town, and the victim might have been Hannibal Beatty, this much-respected negro; and there can be no effective redress in our present state of public opinion.

'NOBLESSE OBLIGE.'

"If the Northern States had all been sunk in the sea before our Civil War, the Southern States would have freed the negro sooner or later. A prerequisite to the settlement of the race problem is that we shall treat it precisely as if the negro had been freed by southern legislation. I believe that we are at bottom more interested in these weaker people than we are willing to admit, and that the time is coming when our best people will speak out. I hope to see the day when our teachers will prepare our children for the right attitude toward the negro by telling them all about his African home, the conditions which have delayed his development there, the opportunity which his presence in our midst gives us to raise him, the obligation of every person of the higher race to bear with him and to help him. I believe that such talks will have real effect on the lives of these children and help them to deal with their own problems of right and wrong, of God and the soul. Let their maxim be 'noblesse oblige.' Is not this the way to fit our children for the maintenance of white ascendency?

NEGRO SELF-RESPECT NECESSARY.

"We sincerely wish to improve the negro—for his good and for our own—but we do not stop to consider that self-respect is as essential to his improvement as it is to ours. It is God's way of pointing the upward path. The matter must be explained to our people in order that the white man with whom the negro may be brought in contact shall understand that it is not manly to humiliate him. Harris Dixon makes Old Reliable say of Col. Spottiswoode: 'Cunnel never makes a nigger feel like a nigger.' Can't we imitate the colonel a little more?

"The question of the mingling of the races is in no wise involved. The more respect we show for those negroes who deserve respect, the more self-respect will they develop and the less mingling of blood will there be. Instead of longing to be white they will look forward to being decent, God-fearing negroes, filling such places as their capacities fit them for, and thankful for the protection, education, and development which their residence in a land of high-minded Christian white men has obtained for them. If, in the period of transition through which we are passing, it seems to us that many of them have looked forward to losing themselves in the white race rather than to developing a deserving colored race, is it not because they, following what they took to be our opinion, have found so few examples of what was good among their own people? I would lose my confidence in God if I did not believe that the religion which I profess is as open to the soul of a black man as it is to mine; and I do believe that in a universe where I see harmony on every side there is a way by which our instinct for race preservation and our instinct for justice can each be given full play.

"It is true, wherever people of different races have dwelt together for long periods of time, there has been a mingling of blood, but this has been along the lowest levels—outside the marriage bond—and in lands where no attempts were made to raise the lower race. No people have treated the subject race with the justice with which the southern people have treated the negro; he has never been given the same opportunity for Christianity and education elsewhere. The present case, therefore, is without precedent; and I believe that if we will continue to follow our God-given instincts we will find here, as elsewhere, that they furnish the best protection. Since our present methods have not prevented the mingling of races, why not try a treatment more nearly in accord with Christian ideals? Perhaps that will work better. If so, we would have one more evidence of the efficiency of our religion.

THE HAND OF GOD.

"Might it not be that the negro has been placed in our midst that he may receive the education in Christian character and service which perhaps this people alone of all the peoples of the world can give him? Negroes thus formed and under the guidance of white missionaries are now going to Africa; and as their number increases and character improves, may not we, through their help, be the principal influence in the redemption of the 150,000,000 of natives now in Africa—all brought about through the institution of slavery played upon by the religion of Jesus Christ? Under God nothing seems impossible. If we do but meet this question in the spirit in which Christ would have us meet it, will not His blessing go with us even unto the end?

THE NEGRO AND THE BALLOT—1919.

"The paper of March, 1919, was intended merely to suggest the line of thought along which I hoped a solution might be found by those more familiar with the question than I, and it made no pretense of being a complete statement of even my own opinions. But many have asked what my position is with reference to the negro and the ballot, and I take the opportunity presented by the publishing of a second edition to answer that question, which under present conditions seems to be largely a question of negro leadership. I am especially anxious that no colored man into whose hands my paper may fall should remain in doubt as to my position, which is substantially the position of all southern friends of the negro with whom I am acquainted, and of most northern friends.

AMERICA A WHITE MAN'S COUNTRY.

"America is now a white man's country, and a white man's country I hope it will remain, with all that this implies. This is no new opinion on my part.

"Some 20 years ago I delivered an address at Greenwood, Miss., at the annual meeting of the editors of that State. I urged an agitation for the repeal of the fifteenth amendment in order that those States in the South in which the negro population was numerous might be free to bar him from the suffrage if they chose to do so. I still believe such an agitation should have been undertaken and that it would have been successful. That nothing was done was, no doubt, due to the fact that the Anglo-Saxon is in the habit of meeting difficulties only as they present themselves. He doesn't borrow trouble. The negro was under white control and it seemed of small importance whether that control was exercised in accord with the spirit of the Constitution or not. Force was then the only method relied on. But if the South is to attempt the control of the negro even partly by other methods, the question of the suffrage must be faced. Yet the situation is full of hope, for there is a good deal of evidence that the North is moving in our direction and will view with sympathy any serious effort we make to reach a reasonable solution of the race question.

"As the negro becomes more numerous in the North a feeling seems to be developing there similar to that which is found in the South. If the negro threatened to become the dominant factor in the political life of any northern community which he would be in the political life of the Southern States, in the event his votes were all cast and counted as cast, I am sure such northern community would soon be found using methods of control which will maintain white domination. My reasons for believing this are many. I can mention only a few.

"I sent a copy of my pamphlet of March, 1919, to an old Indianapolis friend. His father was in the northern Army and he himself has been a Republican all his life. Although a most kindly man, he writes me as follows:

AN INDIANAPOLIS REPUBLICAN.

"I read your pamphlet through when it came. It seems to me you have a sane view of the negro question, but I would think that your argument against coeducation would be much less pertinent in the South than in the North. There you do not attempt to put black and white children together, do you? Here we do, and, as I believe, with bad effects. As I observe the negro in Kentucky and in Indianapolis, I note this difference: There the class distinction between the two races is so sharply drawn that neither obtrudes upon the other. If the negro has his own railway coach, his own waiting room, and his own school and church set apart, the whites are not supposed to obtrude upon him any more than he upon them. So far as I can tell, he accepts this as the established order of things and feels no especial resentment about it. Contrariwise, in Indianapolis, which is known as 'the nigger heaven,' where the races intermingle much more freely, we find the black man fairly obsessed with a sense of his 'rights,' and, being a child psychologically, and a spoiled child at that, his idea of what his 'rights' are carries with it no sense of propriety or of the other fellow's rights.

"Nobody knows just what he wants, presumably he does not know himself, but his characteristic attitude is resentful, sullen, and insolent. Coeducation and a general mixing up of the children fosters this. If the white children in their play segregate, leaving the negro children the privilege of also segregating, then the latter consider themselves flouted. Among the adults I have observed that a negro who goes into business has small chance to succeed among his own people, who prefer to deal with the whites, because they want to butt in among the whites whenever and wherever possible. The greatest satisfaction they derive from this, as nearly as I can size the thing up, is when by becoming patrons they can also become insolent, which seems to be their idea of 'being as good as white folks.' During the last three or four years I have had some business relations with negroes of this kind as a landlord. I went into a negro neighborhood with a sincere desire to not only do the best I could for my tenants but to help the neighborhood. During that period I have accumulated a disgust and prejudice toward the race that I never had before. I doubt whether the same thing would have happened in the South, or, in other words, I think the things that repel me have arisen out of the false notion that there is no difference between the races. In my opinion, the sense of class distinction is based not on injustice and an arrogant idea of superiority so much as an elemental instinct, and he who will not recognize that instinct is simply a sentimentalist.

"In the summer of 1918 people in Philadelphia, Quakers, with whom I am on intimate terms, told me how their feeling toward the negro had been changed as the result of the behavior of the large number of negroes then coming into Philadelphia from the South.

THE NORTH "TIRED OF THE NEGRO."

"Not long ago a nation-wide appeal for an antilynching conference was issued to meet in New York City. At Carnegie Hall, where Mr. Hughes spoke, the audience was evenly divided between whites and negroes, but at the working meetings there were few whites. The northern white people showed little interest. A friend of mine from Mississippi, who was present, asked a Boston man for an explanation. The reply was, 'We are getting tired of the negro and are about ready to drop him.'

FIFTEENTH AMENDMENT HARMFUL TO NEGROES.

"In suggesting the repeal of the fifteenth amendment I had in mind not only the good of the white man. Only those who realize the harm the fifteenth amendment has done the negro in the South are in a position to understand the benefit which would follow its repeal. It has given him no right which he now enjoys, but it has served as a justification for violence and has driven his friends to cover and kept most of them there. As I write, the program of the northern negro leaders that the southern negroes organize for political action constitutes a menace to negro progress in the South which it is impossible to exaggerate. A prominent southern man who is giving his life to work with the negroes states that in his opinion the attempt to carry out that program 'will set back the work for 50 years.' It can not help the negro in the South, but it will precipitate clashes between the races here and thus arouse the northern negro masses so that they will become more completely subject to the will of their leaders, some of whom are pure fanatics, but most of whom are Republican politicians or subject to their control.

"I do not deny that the negro has a natural right to a voice in his own future. The difficulty arises from the fact that when he and white people live in the same locality it is hard to give him such a voice without at the same time giving him control over the white people and over their future in all communities in which he is numerous. White people simply have not enough confidence in the negro to run the risks involved.

CAN THESE RIGHTS BE RECONCILED?

"When I made the Mississippi address to which I referred I remember feeling that if the fifteenth amendment were repealed I, as a citizen of Tennessee, would have been willing to have the franchise given to all negroes possessing a certain amount of property, to all doctors, lawyers, and teachers possessing the right to practice or teach in our own State, and to all ministers possessing a solid education. Thus would we have constituted a separate and privileged class of negroes to which other negroes would look up and of which they would, by thrift and industry, strive to become members. It seemed to me that such a body, even though small, would exercise an influence in politics greater than that of the present negro population with their supposed right of universal suffrage, for this small group would be acting under a law freely adopted by white men, and, therefore, having the open support of dominant public opinion.

"The southern people, following the Anglo-Saxon habit of not borrowing trouble, show no intention of demanding the repeal of the fifteenth amendment. Yet we do need some form of negro representation, if only that we may be authoritatively informed of their wishes, and if some arrangement can be made by which negroes such as I have referred to can be allowed to vote and to have their vote counted, good results would be sure to follow. Such action would do much to satisfy the negro and yet in nowise threaten white control. I believe this can be brought about if our leading citizens will enter into sympathetic relations with the sane southern colored leaders in their own neighborhood and show by their acts that they are sincerely interested in the improvement of the vocational and agricultural education of the negro and in the protection of his person and property.

THE NEGRO LEADER.

"By listening to the suggestion of our best negro leaders we increase their importance in the eyes of other members of their race and aid them in maintaining their leadership. The negro is not lacking in sense, and when the northern negro press stigmatizes sane southern negro leaders as 'white man's niggers' the average southern negro will turn a deaf ear if he sees before him benefits obtained through the cooperation of such southern leaders. But we must not blink the fact that the reputation of the southern negro leader who wishes to cooperate with the white man is already under a cloud and we must soon come to his aid or it will be too late. Many instances within my personal knowledge prove this. Here is one of them:

"In the issue of the Crisis of May, 1919, its editor, Dr. Du Bois, made a violent attack on Dr. R. R. Moton, who succeeded Booker Washington as president of Tuskegee. Dr. Du Bois charged, in effect, that Dr. Moton had warned negro soldiers in France against making extreme demands when they returned home, and had otherwise played into the hands of the white man. Shortly after this issue reached its readers Dr. Moton spoke at Fiske University in explanation of his course abroad. Normally the appearance in their midst of so eloquent, prominent, and heretofore trusted a negro—one who had only recently been honored by the President of the United States with a mission to our colored troops abroad—would have brought to the meeting a large number of the negroes of Nashville. The effect of the Du Bois attack, unsupported though it was by any proof, was to keep most of the negroes away from the meeting. The practical question is, How can this broken tie be mended?

COURAGE NEEDED.

"To conclude, America is and must remain a white man's country. The only question is, Shall this end be achieved by the Prussian method of pure coercion or shall we give sympathy and justice a fair trial? But if we are to attempt the latter course all men of good will must come into the open and become known to one another and to the public.

"This is necessary when any effective action is proposed, but it is especially necessary when men are entering on an untried course—one where their actions are subject to so many misunderstandings. It is a new thing for Southern white men, openly, to take an aggressive position in favor of justice for the negro. To do so is still apt to be looked upon as mawkish sentimentality, if not something worse. If any progress is to be made we must realize it is not enough for us to treat the negro fairly ourselves. We must cooperate in the formation of a public opinion with reference to the duty of a white man to act 'white'—especially toward this weaker race. All must be made to feel that it is unmanly to mistreat or to humiliate a negro.

THE WARD OF THE SOUTH.

"The negro has been called the ward of the Nation. He must become in a peculiar and very definite sense 'The ward of the South.' We are glad he was emancipated. We have forgotten all that was harsh or partisan in the methods by which this was brought about. We must henceforth take up the problems raised by his presence in our midst, precisely as if they were of our own making. We must approach them in the spirit we would have brought to their solution had slavery been abolished by our own votes. It is the American way, the democratic way, the Christian way, and the only way offering any hope."

THE IRISH IN HISTORY.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from the New York American of October 26 last.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Interview by Senator THOMAS P. GORE published in New York American Oct. 26, 1919.]

"As a native of Mississippi I love to quote what Mississippi's greatest orator and what one of America's greatest orators had to say concerning the sons of Erin:

"It has given the world more than its share of genius and of greatness. It has been prolific in statesmen, warriors, and poets. Its brave and generous sons have fought successfully all battles but their own. In wit and humor it has no equal; while its harp, like its history, moves to tears by its sweet but melancholy pathos.

"These words, as true as eloquent, fell from the lips of Sergt. Smith Prentiss on a historic occasion in New Orleans.

"In every forum where the champions of liberty have been permitted to plead her cause has been heard the voice of Irish eloquence. On every battle field where men have died for liberty will be found the graves of Irish heroes. Every cabinet to which worth can win its way has been adorned by Irish genius and statesmanship. Irish valor helped to win American independence and Irish chivalry helped to maintain the American Union.

"If it be true that one swallow does not make a summer, it is equally true that one snowbird does not make a winter. No one vandal, however willing, can destroy the monuments of Irish genius. No one iconoclast, however powerful, can demolish the statues which commemorate the virtue and valor of Ireland's sons. No one Mussulman, however anxious, can burn the libraries or blot out the brilliant and consecrated pages on which are inscribed the sufferings and the sacrifices of Emmet and his countrymen.

"The Democratic Party owes the Irish vote a debt which it can hardly pay. It is in debt to the Irish Democrats for every Democratic victory since the Civil War. The following language will be found in the National Democratic platform of 1892:

"We tender out profound and earnest sympathy to those lovers of freedom who are struggling for home rule and the great cause of local self-government in Ireland.

"Similar assurances are contained in other platforms. Shall Democracy keep the word of promise to the ear and break it to the hope?

"Immortal little island,
No other land or clime
Has placed more deathless heroes
In the Pantheon of time."

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an extract from the Paris Temps, one of the leading newspapers of Paris, reprinted in the New York Times, referring to the favorable disposition on the part of the French of the reservations as voted for by a majority of the Senate; likewise a clipping from the Washington Post quoting an interview with Lord Burnham, of England, discussing the same question as to the favorable reception of the proposed reservations in England. In view of uncertainty as to the feeling abroad, I think it might be useful that these discussions by authorities with reference to the reception of the reservations on the other side should appear in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that they may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave is granted.

The articles referred to are as follows:

[From the New York Times, Dec. 7, 1919.]

TEMPS DEFENDS THE SENATE—SAYS ITS RESERVATIONS ARE NOT A DISAVOWAL OF THE CONFERENCE'S WORD.

PARIS, December 6.

"The legend of the American reservations" is the title of a Temps editorial discussing the United States Senate's reservations, which, it says, are not understood in France. The paper takes the view that even if these reservations make necessary certain retouching of the league of nations covenant, "they do not contain anything which authorizes the Allies to reject American ratification effected under such conditions."

Respecting the Shantung reservation, the Temps says:

"It would certainly be in direct opposition to the treaty if China had signed, but the articles refer to Chinese territory, and China has not signed the treaty. So everything is in suspense. The American declaration charges nothing in the existing situation. The rights of each party remain intact; Japan remains in possession of the object of litigation."

The writer continues:

"Who would quibble with the United States on the reservation dealing with the Monroe doctrine? Not France, certainly, who is fully resolved to decide what questions shall fall solely under her internal jurisdiction."

The Senate's interpretation of the first article of the treaty of Versailles, which is also the first article of the league of nations covenant, Le Temps says, "is not contrary to the treaty," and adds: "What force, may we ask, could retain the United States in the league of nations if, after two years' notice, it considered it had the right to withdraw?"

The Temps points out that the supreme council yesterday authorized the Jugoslavs to formulate reservations in acceding to the annexes of the St. Germain treaty, and declares that the pretense that the United States Senate's reservations are a disavowal of the conference's word at Paris is a mischievous legend, to which it is time to oppose the truth.

The paper prints a careful translation of all the Senate's reservations.

[From the Washington Post Dec. 9, 1919.]

UNITED STATES VOTE UNDERSTOOD—BRITISH NOT ALIENATED BY SENATE'S ACTION ON TREATY—LEAGUE NOT POPULAR THERE—AMERICA'S RELUCTANCE TO MIX IN EUROPEAN AFFAIRS APPRECIATED, WRITES LORD BURNHAM—SEES GROWTH OF ENGLISH DOMINIONS INTO PREDOMINANCE.

[By Lord Burnham, proprietor of London Daily Telegraph. (Special cable to the Washington Post and Public Ledger.)]

LONDON, December 8.

I do not think the great mass of the British people are in the least alienated by the political campaign which is at present being waged in America. We all know enough of democratic methods to take a broad view and I hope a long view.

The league of nations has never held a strong place in the affections of the British people—by that I mean it was never popular—and Britons felt that it was entirely America's own affair whether they accepted the principles of the league or not, and nobody here conceives that the Republican Party, in taking the action it has in the Senate in regard to the peace treaty, is actuated by hostility or even indifference to Great Britain.

INFLUENCED BY TRADITION.

The British grasp the fact that Americans are influenced in their hesitations by the traditional principles of American policy which have come down from the fathers of the Constitution, and I for one, with some knowledge of American politics during my public life, can appreciate very well the reluctance of the body politic in America to take upon itself the great and indefinite burdens of European affairs, which, before the war, all parties in America were agreed in recommending their constituents to keep clear of.

Whether that is possible amid the wreckage of the old European system is another matter. In the designation of Bismark, who is often quoted as a "good European," perhaps everybody does not see that the collateral phrase "good American" is to some extent the opposite conception.

PRINCE'S WELCOME APPRECIATED.

Of one thing, I am sure, the American people could not have done anything better calculated to remove any impression of coldness, or shall I say a cooling down of the spirit of war comradeship, than to have offered so whole-hearted a welcome to the young Prince of Wales, who is regarded as the very type of what a young Briton ought to be.

Looking forward, it is clear that as the British dominions are certain of their constitutional independence, so there will grow up a loose confederation of opinion and interests which will transcend all legal forms and be expressed in no organic statute and which, in the nature of things, is bound to be a predominant and preponderating influence in shaping the future destinies of the world. We may call it in Briton the communion of the British spirit, as Anglo-Saxon is not a term which we are fond of using, but it really means the spirit of the war and peace.

INTERESTS MUST DIFFER.

In regard to Anglo-American relations, what I always fear is that we expect a little too much of each other. The viewpoint of America and Great Britain can never be the same and never ought to be the same. In some ways, though common speech makes undoubtedly for common habits of mind, it is in a sense something of a danger because every casual criticism and even smart patter by those who feel themselves obliged to be smart at any cost, is heard and understood to an extent very different from what is the case with nations speaking a different language, when both command and comprehension are very limited.

It is often said that all masterpieces suffer by translation. Commonplace talk loses much of its point and at times much of its poison in the process, and its rough angles may be smoothed, its glitter may be dulled, and so also its sharpness.

AMENDMENT OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8778) to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act, and requesting a conference of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. WILLIAMS conferees on the part of the Senate.

PONTOON BRIDGE ACROSS CHATTAHOOCHEE RIVER.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 137) authorizing the Secretary of War to construct a pontoon bridge across the Chattahoochee River at West Point, Ga., and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to construct and maintain a pontoon bridge across the Chattahoochee River at West Point, Ga., and to loan to the city of West Point, Ga., without expense of transportation to the Government, the necessary material for such construction now in possession of the War Department, and not needed for immediate use: Provided, That the use of such bridge as a highway under the supervision, regulation, and control of the duly constituted authorities of said city of West Point, Ga., is hereby permitted for such time as the Secretary of War shall determine to be necessary: And provided further, That all cost of construction shall be borne by the city of West Point, Ga., and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations for the return of the material to the Government herein authorized to be loaned as he may deem necessary.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 155, being House bill 3184, commonly known as the water-power bill. I will say that I simply desire to make the bill the unfinished business, and will not proceed further with its consideration at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I desire the attention of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], as I understood that Senator, under some arrangement which he was to make, was to have the right of way—if I may be permitted to use that expression—for the consideration of what has been improperly denominated the sedition bill. I had hoped that that bill might be made the unfinished business.

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I had also hoped that the sedition bill would be made the unfinished business. I fully expected that it would be, and I am disappointed that it is not to be made the unfinished business, as a decision otherwise has been reached. I yielded reluctantly to that decision, with the understanding that at some time during the first week after the reconvening of the Senate, following the holiday recess, there would be opportunity to bring on the sedition bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KING. I beg pardon of the Chair and also of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington how much time he thinks the bill to which he has just referred will occupy?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, no one can tell. I hope that we can dispose of it in two or three days after we meet in January. I hope that we can dispose of both the water-power bill and the so-called sedition bill during the first week of the session in January. I am heartily in favor of both measures.

Mr. KING. Is it similar to the bill dealing with the same subject which has heretofore been considered, called the Shields bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It deals with the water-power subject. It is a House bill. The House passed a bill and the Senate Committee on Commerce took that bill up and have reported it to the Senate with some amendments without reporting a substitute. There are only three or four really substantial differences, and I think that we can get the bill through—we ought to do so, at any rate—in three or four days.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Massachusetts will continue to yield, I am afraid that the optimism of the Senator from Washington will not be realized.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I said that the bill "ought to be passed" within that time.

Mr. KING. I think it will take a great deal of time. Of course, I appreciate the fact that the other side, through its distinguished steering committee or those in authority, have outlined as the policy of the majority side that the bill to which the Senator from Washington alludes shall have the right of way, so I can not protest.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if this bill has not been here, under discussion, for some 8 or 10 years?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The subject of legislation relating to water power has been up for several years. It has passed through the Senate one way and passed through the House another way at one time, and so on. As the Senator knows, at the close of the last Congress the bill had gone to conference, and the conference report had been made, and it was adopted by the House, but failed of action in the Senate.

Now, the bill is here. Everybody recognizes the importance of the bill referred to. I am heartily in favor of it. Everybody, I think, recognizes the importance of the bill. It is constructive legislation, and it is no secret to say that a committee on this side of the Chamber was selected to consider the various measures and determine what procedure should be followed. I think that is a very wise course to follow. Everybody recognizes that this side of the Chamber is responsible for legislation. If we can have orderly procedure with reference to bringing up the various measures, I think it will result in the passage of constructive legislation much more expeditiously than otherwise.

I do not desire to enter into any contest on the floor with the Senator from South Dakota as to recognition by the Chair, or as to making a motion to get up the bill. The committee that considered the matter decided that it was proper to bring up the water-power bill first, so I have made that motion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, some of the Senators upon this side are laboring under the view that the Senator has asked for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; I am just moving to take it up in order to make it the unfinished business, and then I expect to lay it aside temporarily until the Senate meets after the recess.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota stated that a decision had been made by some one about these bills. I wanted to find out just who determines, and how it is determined, as to what bill shall come before the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as far as I have seen heretofore there has hardly been anybody to determine that. It seems to be the first one who can get recognition from the Chair and get an opportunity to make a motion.

Mr. KENYON. What is this decision that gives the Senator from Washington the right of way?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will give me time, I will explain it. When it was found that the advocates of these two bills were anxious to have them considered, it was suggested, I think, by some that our steering committee get together and consider what was the wise course to follow in order to avoid a contest with reference to which bill should come up first; and, as I understand, a subcommittee of the regular steering committee were selected. They considered the matter, considered both bills, and recommended this arrangement; that is all.

Mr. KENYON. Is not the situation, then, that no bill can come up unless the subcommittee of the steering committee has so determined?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Why, no, Mr. President. A Senator can make a motion at any time if he has a bill that he wants to bring up, as far as I know.

Mr. KENYON. There are other bills of great importance on which we can not get any action.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know it. I know a bill in which the Senator is interested, which I am just as strongly in favor of as he is, and I hope it will be taken up just as soon as possible; but if we are to have contests on the floor as to these various bills of importance, we will not get anywhere. That is the situation; and it is in the interest of legislation, I think, that some plan should be followed. I should like to see the Senator's bill made the next in order after this bill and the bill of the Senator from South Dakota, and I believe that the steering committee probably will recommend that that be done if the matter is brought to its consideration.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I simply wish to say that Senate bill 3317, the sedition bill, is now in the Senate in the process of its consideration. It has been amended, and reported by the Committee of the Whole to the Senate. I hope that when we reach the bill I may have the cooperation of all Senators who favor legislation of this kind. I think, as has been intimated already—I think the Senator from Washington agrees to it—that we will reach that bill during the course of the first week after the holidays.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I certainly hope so; and of course it rests entirely with the Senate now as to whether they will take up the water-power bill, or whether they prefer to take up another bill. I am simply discharging what I think is my responsibility in making the motion. It rests with the Senate whether they want to do it or not.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not know whether we are entering upon a new procedure of legislating or not. I realize that it is important to have a steering committee. I trust, however, that we shall not proceed to take up simply the bills that the steering committee may recommend. We may find ourselves in a position where even appropriation bills can not be properly disposed of unless they meet with the indorsement of the steering committee.

I had hoped, Mr. President, that we could proceed in the orderly manner of taking up the calendar to consider unobjected bills. Why this bill of the Senator from Washington should now be made the unfinished business rather than any other bill, I can not understand; and why the steering committee should have any more authority than any other committee to say which bill should have precedence, I can not understand.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me a moment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wanted to say that the Republican conference, as usual with all conferences that I have ever known about here in all majority parties, appointed a committee, known as the steering committee, but properly known and properly entitled a committee on the order of business. There were several bills pressing for consideration to be made the unfinished business. They took those bills that were pressing, and under the arrangement we made we have disposed of the sugar bill to-day, we have disposed of the compensation bill, and we have carried the railroad bill into conference. That was part of that program, and it has been carried out.

The next thing was to decide what bill should be taken up and made the unfinished business to-day before we take the recess. The committee which the conference of Republicans appointed took up the matter through a subcommittee, and consulted with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and with the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. There were no other bills pressing. They concluded, as I understood—I was not on the committee—to have the water-power bill made the unfinished business, to give the Senator from South Dakota an opportunity to bring up his sedition bill in the morning hour, and if at a certain time the water-power bill had not been disposed of, to give him an opportunity to go on with the sedition bill and dispose of it. That was the arrangement.

Of course, it seems to me it is better to proceed in that way than for all of us to get up here on the floor, one after another, and struggle on the floor to have a bill taken up. That system means simply endless confusion. It seems to me this is the fairer and better way. It is the way that always has been pursued. Of course, if there is a better method of doing it, I have not a word to say.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I only desire to say a word.

Water-power legislation has been pending in Congress for eight years. The Senate has passed a water-power bill on three different occasions. The House has passed a water-power bill on two occasions. The last bill to which I refer went to conference and was agreed to in conference. We brought it before the Senate, and it failed of passage owing to a filibuster that was inaugurated during the last days of the session.

Now, I want to say to Senators that, in my opinion, this is one of the most constructive pieces of legislation that will come before Congress during this session. I know that there are millions and millions of dollars ready to be invested in water-power development, and I do not think anybody will say that the development of water power now is not as essential as the development of a coal mine or the running of a railroad. I am satisfied that we can pass this bill as it has been worked out by the two Houses certainly in one day when we get it before the Senate.

I do hope, under the circumstances, owing to the great importance attaching to this particular measure and this question, which affects every section of the country, that the Senate will consent to take up the bill, make it the unfinished business, and pass it promptly.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I simply want to state to the Senate that I feel that I have some responsibility in this matter. I was asked by my colleagues at the beginning of last session to serve on the committee on committees. That committee worked for three long days. That committee tried to deal fairly with all the Members of this body in the way of placing them on the various committees. A rule was adopted which provided that no Senator should be on more than two major committees and that he should have no right to serve as a conferee upon more than two major committees.

This rule, if we follow it, will give a new Senator the same privilege to help formulate and enact legislation as those who may have served for a longer period of time. The responsibility will be divided and placed on the entire membership and not only on a very few.

Now, Mr. President, I certainly do not wish to be held responsible for creating a committee or a condition here which shall have control of legislation or throttle at will such legislation as it may oppose, because that is what it would actually mean; and, in so far as I am able to do it, I am going to nip that plan in the bud. I want every Member of the Senate to have an opportunity to have his say. I want the Senator who happens to be young in service, who comes from a remote district or from a new State, I care not to which party he belongs, to have the same opportunity and to have as much to say with reference to legislation as I may have who happens to be older in service. I was a member of the committee on committees, which apportioned or made up these committees.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. The committee on committees had nothing whatever to do with the appointment of this steering committee. That was done under a resolution passed by the Republican conference, and the committee was appointed by me under that resolution.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; but I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts in all seriousness that if this matter had not been dealt with fairly during that time, perhaps the Republicans would not have been in control of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I dare say. I was only speaking of how this committee came to be created, and I tried to make it as fair a committee as I could.

I presume what we have done is the exact course that has been pursued by every majority party which has been in control in the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. I certainly find no fault with the leadership of the Senator from Massachusetts. I am not referring to the Senator from Massachusetts. But I want to let the Senate know now that I disapprove of any action which will ultimately mean that the so-called steering committee shall control legislation.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator understand that the resolution authorizing a steering committee stated that that committee was to determine what legislation should be brought before the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. The word "steering" was not used in the resolution. It was to be the committee on the order of business.

Mr. GRONNA. I certainly did not understand that the committee on the order of business would have the sole power to say what legislation was to come before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Does not the Senator think that we should have a conference on the matter?

Mr. KENYON. I suggest that the Republicans have a conference to determine a legislative program and then go ahead with it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, let me suggest that this committee does not determine what legislation shall come up. It simply makes recommendations to the Senate, and if the Senate does not want to consider the water-power bill it will not do it.

Mr. KING. I suggest that this side of the Chamber is very much interested in legislation, and we shall be very happy to cooperate with the Senator from Iowa in selecting the best legislation for the good of the people to be enacted into law.

Mr. GRONNA. I agree with the Senator from Utah. I have been in the minority so long that I can sympathize with the minority. I do not believe it is fair for the majority to adopt a rule of this kind. I do not believe it is fair to the members of the majority, without a conference of all the members, to say what the legislative program shall be, and I know it is not fair to the members of the minority.

Mr. President, a very few Senators might in this way control legislation absolutely. If it is followed out, you can say absolutely what bills shall pass, what bills shall be considered, and what bills shall not be considered, and as one Member on this side I resent it. But I will say now to those who are the leaders on this side that we do not have a majority so large but that you are endangering your leadership if you are going to force this rule upon us.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GRONNA. In just a moment. If you are going to force upon us what I will call gag rules of this sort I shall never, so long as I am a Member of this body, support a movement of that kind. What right have two or three Senators, because they are put upon a steering committee, to say which bills shall be taken up and which bills shall not be considered? What moral right have you, I ask you, to do that?

I had something to do with the organization on this side, I will say; I have some responsibility for the organization; and, sir, it was not with the understanding that a small coterie should get together and decide upon which bills should be taken up for consideration. I leave it to my good friend from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] if those matters were not considered.

I agree that the majority is responsible for legislation, but a steering committee will not be held responsible. If this be true, why not take all members of the majority into conference and decide upon a program?

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, in my humble way I am here to consider the interests of the people of the country. I may be mistaken in my judgment, but I want to assure you that I want the minority as well as the majority to be heard.

Let us take up these bills as we reach them on the calendar. If there is an urgent measure which ought to pass immediately, I take it that the membership of this body will give unanimous consent for its consideration.

If you are going to proceed upon the unjust theory of saying that two or three Senators who may be members of this so-called steering committee shall decide what bills are to be considered, I want to give notice right now that I shall not be a party to it. I now yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has answered my question already.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] referred to me, I assume, because I was chairman of the committee on committees on this side of the Chamber; but, as the Senator from Massachusetts has stated, the so-called steering committee, or the committee on the order of business, as I remember it, was appointed by the conference at large and was not appointed by the committee on committees. Though I have not been a party to the proceeding, I understand from some remarks dropped by the Senator from Massachusetts it was the judgment of some subcommittee of the steering committee that it would be wise——

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I was informed that it was the full committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say it was a subcommittee. If it was the entire committee—I prefer the word "entire" [laughter]——

Mr. LODGE. The full committee took it up and decided the question I have referred to and left it to a subcommittee to arrange which of the bills should be the unfinished business and see the Senators in charge. It was the usual and the simple way.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no criticism to offer upon the committee, either full or entire or empty [laughter], but a suggestion did trickle down from the neighborhood of that committee that it was wise to proceed to the consideration of this bill. In pursuance of that suggestion, however made, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has had the audacity to make a motion here on the floor of the Senate that the Senate do proceed to the consideration of the bill. I do not care whether they proceed to the consideration of that bill or any other bill, if we can only get, as the Senator from Utah remarks, to the point of legislating on something.

I do not know how I shall vote on this motion. Any Senator can vote to take it up or not to take it up, and if it is not taken up, any Senator can make a motion to proceed to the consideration of some other bill. It seems to me that in that way we all count one apiece, we have our votes registered and counted, and it has its legitimate effect.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. If I understand it correctly, the two propositions presented to the steering committee were, first, the water-power bill, as proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]; secondly, the sedition bill, in charge of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. Am I right about that?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. WATSON. I understand those were the two questions presented. I wondered whether the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] wanted the sedition bill taken up in preference to the water-power bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not want to intervene on that question.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator from Indiana is really in earnest about it, I can say to him that the Senator from North Dakota is ready to take up any bill in the order of business; but he is not willing to be a rubber stamp for a committee on committees or for any other committee.

Mr. WATSON. I understand the only proposition is this, if the Senator will pardon me: The majority in the Senate has always had a steering committee, for the purpose of determining which of two or three bills should have precedence when there was a conflict. This committee was called together, and the proposition was put up to them as to whether the water-power bill or the sedition bill should have precedence, and the committee suggested that if it would meet with the approval of the majority of the Senate, the water-power bill should have precedence. If the majority of the Senate feel otherwise, it is still in the power of the majority of the Senate to decide. This was only a tentative proposition.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Was there any sinister influence employed in this matter?

Mr. WATSON. So far as I know, there was not. I know of no one having been submarined, nor do I know of any subterranean or back-door methods having been employed to influence the steering committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Connecticut observed that it was entirely a matter to be decided by the Senate as to what bill should be taken up. I was going to suggest that if the steering committee on the other side is in sufficient power to bind everybody on that side, our having a vote over here does not amount to very much, and that if the machine is in splendid working condition, and everybody is bound to support the machine, the mere fact that we have a vote over here does not signify when it comes to determining the order of business.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no doubt that the Senator rejoices to hear the machine creaking over here a little bit.

Mr. McCORMICK. I was going to suggest, as one of those who put his shoulder to the wheel, that I thought there was serious tire trouble.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, let me say that I think the course which the Senators who are responsible for legislation on the other side are taking is quite commendable. We must have some system. We had a system over here and did the best we could when we were obliged to arrange legislation. Somebody has to do it, and if you gentlemen find you can not do it by agreement let us know and we will help you out. Personally I can conceive of no more important legislation than that in charge of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I appreciate the kindly criticism of the Senator from Colorado. But there is no other way to decide on what measures the Senate will take up except for the Senate to vote, and while our friends across the aisle are in the minority, still they all count, each one of them, as much as we in the majority do, and they are all equally effective in determining which measure the Senate shall take up first. I do not even know who compose our honored steering committee, I regret to say.

As to the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] that the regular order would be to proceed to consider unobjected bills on the calendar, I can not quite agree with that, because that under the rule is the procedure for unobjected measures after the routine morning business is closed each morning. But, of course, everybody knows that this measure is strongly objected to, and under that rule it could not receive any consideration whatever. The Senator from Washington states, and he is an optimist about it, that this bill will take several days. There is no way of determining the question except for the Senate to vote on the motion, and if it is lost to make a motion to proceed with some other bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 3184, known as the water-power bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is it in order to move to substitute another bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. KING. I was anxious to substitute the bill which the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has in charge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that under the rules of the Senate it is not in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRONNA. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The Secretary will read the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ESCH, Mr. HAMILTON, Mr. WINSLOW, Mr. SIMS, and Mr. BARKLEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8778) to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11223) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Employees' Compensation Commission, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and the Public Health Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing that when the two Houses complete the business of this day they shall stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian Monday, January 5, 1920.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 3284) to provide for the national welfare by continuing the United States Sugar Equalization Board until December 31, 1920, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 25 minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate takes a recess it be until 10 o'clock this evening, and that when the Senate reconvenes no business shall be transacted and no action taken except the signing by the Presiding Officer of such enrolled bills as may be ready for his signature, to be followed by the adjournment under the concurrent resolution of the two Houses for the Christmas holidays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 10 o'clock p. m., at which hour it reassembled.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 20, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, our hearts go out to Thee in gratitude and unfeigned love for Thine own best gift to the world, crystallized in the life, character, and message of the Christ; and we would join with the millions of Christians in the heavenly anthem sung by the angels on the plains of Bethlehem two thousand years ago: Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.

As the yuletide approaches, in imitation of Thee, Santa Claus, which is love, is on the wing and will visit millions of homes throughout Christendom to make the heart glad and the home ring with immortal love.

In the cross of Christ I glory,
Towering o'er the wrecks of time;
All the light of sacred story
Gathers round its head sublime.
When the woes of life o'ertake me,
Hopes deceive, and fears annoy,
Never shall the cross forsake me;
Lo! it glows with peace and joy.

Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 8778. An act to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 267. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1919;

H. R. 8992. An act for the construction of a bridge across the Susquehanna River at Laceyville, Wyoming County, Pa.; and

H. R. 10402. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permission to the municipal authorities at Little Chute, Wis., to construct, maintain, and operate sewers on certain Government property and under the United States canal at Little Chute, Wis.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 3284. An act to provide for the national welfare by continuing the United States Sugar Equalization Board until December 31, 1920, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 131. Joint resolution making immediately available the appropriation for the expenses of regulating further the entry of aliens into the United States.

WAR RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 8778, recently passed by the Senate, be taken from the Speaker's table, and that the Senate amendments be disagreed to and a conference asked of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that there may be taken from the Speaker's table the bill which the Clerk will report, with Senate amendments; that the Senate amendments be disagreed to; and that a conference be requested. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8778) to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to disagree to all the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa concerning a report which I saw in the morning paper in reference to an amendment that the Senate is alleged to have added to the bill, making the amount of insurance going to beneficiaries payable in a lump sum. I notice from the reading by the Clerk, and also by an examination of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that no such amendment was added in the Senate.

Mr. SWEET. That is true. No such amendment was added in the Senate. The bill as passed by the House simply provided that converted insurance should be paid in a lump sum or in 36 equal installments. That did not apply to yearly renewable term insurance, and no such amendment was put on in the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. And neither in the provision of the bill originally nor by amendment by the Senate is it made possible for the widows of soldiers who have already died and who are now drawing monthly insurance to collect it in a lump sum?

Mr. SWEET. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the conferees have no jurisdiction over that subject?

Mr. SWEET. The conferees have no jurisdiction over that subject, because no such amendment was placed in the bill in the Senate, and there was no such provision in the bill when it passed the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. SWEET, Mr. ESCH, and Mr. RAYBURN.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 11223) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Employees' Compensation Commission and the Public Health Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later.

SUGAR EQUALIZATION BOARD.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 3284.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill, which the Clerk will report, and to agree to the Senate amendments?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3284) to provide for the national welfare by continuing the United States Sugar Equalization Board until December 31, 1920, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill which has come to the House, and which has been amended by the House and has gone back and is now amended by the Senate.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, what is the status of it now? Does it take unanimous consent to take it from the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I do not see the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MARTIN] on the floor of the House. I know that he is interested in this matter. I would like, if the gentleman from Iowa would——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Louisiana is in favor of this amendment.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that the gentleman from Louisiana is in favor of this amendment, but I would like, if possible, that he should be here.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He is always here.

Mr. GARNER. I agree with the gentleman that the gentleman from Louisiana is a regular attendant, but I would like to see him here now.

Mr. HAUGEN. The House amendment provided that the provisions of this act as to the domestic product should expire September 30, 1920. The Senate amended that by striking out the word "September" and inserting the word "June," which makes the bill inoperative as to the domestic product on the 30th of June instead of the 30th of September.

Mr. WINGO. Does that mean that the board will go out of existence then, or does it refer to the licensing feature?

Mr. HAUGEN. It has reference to the domestic crop. The control of the board over the domestic crop ceases on the 30th of June next. The board does not go out of existence until December 30, 1920.

Mr. WINGO. The board will continue until December 30, 1920, but their control over the domestic crop will cease on June 30?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. Is that the only change in the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is the only change.

Mr. CANDLER. Simply changing from September 30 to June 30 the provision in reference to the end of the control over the domestic crop of next year?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes. If there are no further questions, I will ask for a vote.

The question being taken, the Senate amendment was agreed to.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of agriculture. Is there objection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I should like to know if they are the gentleman's own remarks.

Mr. LARSEN. Partly my own remarks and partly an editorial. The whole thing is very short, though, and does not amount to more than one page.

Mr. LONGWORTH. An editorial in a newspaper?

Mr. LARSEN. Yes; a portion of it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How long will all the remarks be?

Mr. LARSEN. The editorial is about 5 inches long, single column.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REQUEST TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed five minutes to address the House on the difficulty the Federal Vocational Board is having in securing equipment for its work for the rehabilitation of soldiers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on the Vocational Education Board. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. I would not object if the time was to be taken after the passage of the alien deportation bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have asked for only five minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. I know, but I think we had better start on the other. I hope the gentleman will not press his request.

Mr. TREADWAY. I can not press it if the gentleman is going to object.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will have to object if the gentleman presses his request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN ANARCHISTS.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution, it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 11224, being a bill "To amend the act entitled 'An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes,' approved October 16, 1918." That there shall be not to exceed two hours' general debate, one-half to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and one-half by the ranking member of the minority of said committee. At the conclusion of the general debate the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule; whereupon the bill shall be reported to the House with the amendments, if any, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this rule provides that it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the alien exclusion and deportation bill. The bill, as a matter of fact, is a House Calendar bill. This was not called to the attention of the Committee on Rules until after the rule had been agreed to; but the members of the committee in considering the question think it wise to let the rule remain as it is, and to provide for the consideration of this very important measure in the Committee of the Whole rather than in the House.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. This is the first time I have ever known the Committee on Rules to bring in a rule to consider in Committee of the Whole a bill on the House Calendar.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. As I have just stated, it was not called to the attention of the committee that it was on the House Calendar until after the rule had been agreed to by the committee.

Mr. GARNER. Then I understand this is not to be considered as a precedent for the committee in the future, in bringing in rules for the consideration of bills on the House Calendar.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is not the intention to use it as a precedent at all.

Mr. GARNER. I am very glad to hear that, because it is quite an important innovation on the customs of the House with reference to special rules for the consideration of bills on the House Calendar.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is true; but as I have just stated, the bill is one of very great importance, and it was thought by the members of the committee that it was not wise or expedient to call the Committee on Rules together to change the rule. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] if he desires any time?

Mr. GARRETT. We should like 20 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I shall yield to the gentleman from Tennessee before moving the previous question.

There is another thing which I wish to state to the House. A conference report is expected to reach the House before the consideration of this bill can be concluded. We have not provided that conference reports might be considered during the consideration of this bill, and therefore I shall ask unanimous consent at this time that the rule may be modified so that conference reports may be considered during the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not think that is necessary. The rule does not make this bill a continuing order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It does not.

Mr. GARRETT. The committee can rise.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. When a rule makes it in order only to move to go into Committee of the Whole on a certain bill, would it be in order then for the committee to rise and let the House transact other business, and thereafter to make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole again on the same bill under the same rule? It seems to me that it would.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think so. I do not think there is any question about it.

Mr. GARRETT. I should think there would be no question about that, and I was just about to suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that there was no necessity for modifying the rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I simply make this statement in order to notify the House that a conference report is expected, and that probably the committee will have to rise to consider it before the conclusion of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think it has escaped the attention of any thoughtful man now living that there is at this time throughout the world a disposition and purpose upon the part of a lawless minority to override written constitutions and laws and to accomplish their purposes by direct action.

There has been an enormous growth of this sentiment in the Old World. Russia to-day is suffering from the application of the rule of direct action. Anarchy and Bolshevism have taken the place of law and order there. It is for the world to decide whether or not it prefers the rule to-day in Russia to that which prevails under their constitution and laws. As far as the United States is concerned we will maintain the Constitution upon which our Republic was founded.

Class consciousness has been taught in Europe for years and in this country recently. Those who earn a living by manual labor have been placed in a class by themselves by certain alleged labor leaders, who live not upon their own labor but on the labor of others. Those who preach anarchy, Bolshevism, socialism, or communism do not labor; they live off the labor of others. They parade throughout the country as the representatives of labor or as laborers themselves and make appeals to those who earn their living by labor to seize the property of those who have accumulated something by their industry and energy.

There are fundamental principles that must not be lost sight of in the consideration of this question at this time, so important in the history of civilization. First of all, it is not out of place to say that in the Old World and in many places in Europe there are paupers and beggars. It is not true that there are paupers and beggars in this country. The condition of society that is made the excuse for anarchy and Bolshevism in the Old World and in Europe does not furnish ground for making an appeal in this country for the overthrow of our Constitution and the defiance of our laws.

It was a mistake for Dives simply to only provide Lazarus with the crumbs that fell from his table. It would have been far better for Dives and for Lazarus and for the community if, instead of feeding Lazarus with the crumbs that fell from his table, he had provided Lazarus with work, paid him sufficient wages to enable him to build a house on the corner of the farm, provide himself with a table of his own where he could sit with his family. He would have been a member of society then, with something to protect.

We have done that in this country. The laborer is rewarded in this country if he will work so that he may provide his own house, his own table, and not live off the crumbs from any man's table.

Paupers exist in Europe, to be sure, but what they have done in Russia has not bettered their condition. It has made their condition a thousand times worse than it was. It was far better for Lazarus to get the crumbs that fell from Dives's table than to have murdered Dives, plundered and robbed his house of all it contained, used everything that was in the barn and in the field, and now find the place devastated of everything that would sustain life. Even Lazarus is starving for the want of the crumbs that fell from his victim's table. The rich old fellow has been murdered, his property destroyed, and anarchy and starvation exist.

Now, what we propose to do in this country is to keep Barabbas, the robber, who induced Lazarus to murder Dives, from coming into our country and making people imagine that they are a lot of poor Lazaruses and that he will lead them to Mr. Dives's farm, assail the old man, seize his possessions, and distribute them among the plunderers.

The American people have established a high plane upon which the laborer is living in this country. The laborer is self-sustaining, self-respecting, and independent. This is no place for the appeals of the Bolshevists or anarchists that grow out of the social or economic conditions of the Old World, and the purpose of this law is to prevent such people from coming here to propagate their doctrine. And if perchance they enter this country, it is the purpose of this law to make it imperative on those who execute the law to expedite their deportation and rid this country of them and the menace they are to it. [Applause.]

I was asked as I entered the Hall a few moments ago what I thought of the result of the election in Milwaukee on yesterday. My answer is, More is the pity for Milwaukee. It is a matter for which the American laboring man, also for the people who have less of this world's wealth than others—for which they should be devoutly thankful that there are few spots in the United States that think and act like the people in the city of Milwaukee.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman think that the time is here now when we can pass a law that would cancel a naturalization paper of anyone who violated or anyone who was found guilty of violating the espionage law and, after the cancellation, deport that person?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is a law question and also a question that goes deeper than the written law.

I believe that this Government can do anything that is essential to its protection and maintenance, even to the cancellation of a certificate of citizenship heretofore granted to any alien, for the protection and maintenance of orderly government under our Constitution. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I hope that this bill will be early enacted into law and that it will materially aid in the deportation of undesirable aliens and will prevent other undesirable aliens from entering these shores.

I reserve the remainder of my time and yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], to be disposed of as he may desire.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I have only a word or two to say in regard to the bill, and really nothing to say with regard to the rule. If I correctly understand the limits of the bill which the rule will bring before the House for consideration, my objection to it is that it is not more comprehensive. This bill deals only with exclusion. It does not touch the deportation sections of the general immigration law. I think that the conditions in the country necessitate legislation not only along the lines of exclusion, of stopping these people before they reach here, but if it be not sufficient already, then legislation touching the matter of deportation should be sanctioned.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman not make it clear that this amendment is simply to section 1 of the present exclusion and deportation laws, and of course the amended section 1 would then pick up section 2, which provides that all those mentioned in section 1 shall be deported out of the country. That clears that point.

Mr. VAILE. And in addition to that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the language of section 2 of the present act, which is not amended. That section provides:

SEC. 2. That any alien who, at any time after entering the United States, is found to have been at the time of entry, or to have become thereafter, a member of any one of the classes of aliens enumerated in section 1 of this act, shall upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor, be taken into custody and deported in the manner provided in the immigration act of February 5, 1917. The provisions of this section shall be applicable to the classes of aliens mentioned in this act irrespective of the time of their entry into the United States.

Mr. GARRETT. Although perhaps it is not wise to go into a discussion of that on the consideration of the rule, I apprehend that this difficulty might exist, that if you are putting new definitions into the exclusion section, the operations of section 2 would only be applicable as to the new definitions in section 1 after the passage of this new law. In other words, you can not make retroactive law, and unless the parties who are now here fall within the definitions given in your exclusion section, of course there is danger that your section 2 in the present law, unless it also be amended, will not reach the situation.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. SIEGEL. I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the United States Supreme Court has held the contrary in a number of cases.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman from New York is probably more familiar with the line of decisions along the immigration question than I am. The details of it I have not given great study to, but I have some very pronounced and very determined ideas on the general subject.

Mr. LITTLE. Is it not possible that the fact that this arrangement is being made for section 1 and not made for the other might warrant an argument indicating it was not intended to apply to the others.

Mr. GARRETT. I fear so; and I hope that there will be a liberal disposition here to admit proper amendments that may go beyond section 1.

I now yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, after carefully considering the bill for which the rule is asked, I believe that in so far as the Immigration Committee has jurisdiction they have offered an effective and adequate remedy for an intolerable condition of affairs. The difficulty, of course, is that they have not the power that the Committee on the Judiciary has, to bring in a bill making it unlawful for one to advocate the use of force and violence to overthrow this Government, or to resist the authority of this Government.

I have pending before the Committee on the Judiciary a bill which seeks to do that, and, in addition, to make nonmailable any publication which advocates the use of force or violence either to overthrow the Government or to effect a change in the Constitution, or to resist the authority of the Government. I specifically limit it to one who advocates the use of force and violence to accomplish changes which can now be accomplished under the Constitution of the United States in an orderly method. Some gentlemen seem to entertain the opinion that this is an hysteria on our part, and that really there does not exist a necessity for legislation of this character; but if any man could know what the officials of the Post Office Department know, what the officials of the Department of Justice know, he would conclude that instead of overestimating we are underestimating a present danger to this Republic. During the war we were able to control this situation, but the signing of the armistice was a signal for the resurrection of revolutionary thought in this country. To-day there are 200 publications, according to the records of the Post Office Department, which are denominated by them as extremely radical. There are 66 publications that openly advocate armed revolution in America, and of the 66, 28 are published either by the executive committee of the I. W. W. or are directly controlled by them. The Socialist Party does not exist to-day. The left-wingers, represented by Debs and his associates, have taken control. The syndicalists, the communists, and the anarchists have all sworn allegiance to the communist internationale. The communist internationale was held in Moscow in February, and it adopted a manifesto which appears to-day in nearly every I. W. W. publication in this country, and which has become the declaration of principles of all the radical organizations. I can assure you gentlemen that they are not confined to one city or one State. They are to be found in Minnesota, Chicago, in New York, in California, and in nearly every western and northern State there is published one of the I. W. W. publications. I have a list of those that have been recently established. They are printed in every known language. The members of the I. W. W. claim that the Russians have only now awakened to the true doctrines of the I. W. W. organization, that Bolshevism is but another name for I. W. W.ism; that they are the true Bolshevists of this country. And the syndicalists and the communists and the left-wingers have formed a group so radical that they are making anarchists resort to new methods in order to avoid being called reactionaries, and they have not failed to resort to them, I can assure you. Here is a page from one of the anarchists' publications, the Anarchist Soviet, a facsimile copy, and upon the first page we have statements of this kind:

The first thing that you soldiers and sailors must do to clear your names is to seize the wire cables and ask your brother soldiers in Russia to stop being murderers and momentarily arrest all their officers and withdraw from Russia. Organize anarchists' commune soviets and organize them secretly as soon as our numbers grow large enough, making us so strong as to assert ourselves in the open; we will do it by beginning to take over the factories, mines, and farms of America.

Then they report the activities of the anarchists in various cities, San Francisco, New York, South Dakota, Pittsburgh, and Washington. In the city of Washington we are told that—

The branch of the American anarchists' federated commune soviet informs us that they are expecting to gain within their ranks a man who not only will defend the soviets of Russia but will also help to start soviets in America. As soon as the United States Senate will have courage enough to throw that person out he may begin to think, and then we hope ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE will have realized that an honest man has no right to hold a Government position.

In Washington this is advocated! Here is another one from the anarchists' federated soviets' commune soviets:

We must also be prepared so that when our conspirative gatherings are attacked, no such horrible scene as on the bloody Friday of November 17, 1919, should be repeated without bloody, yes, bloody revenge. We must spend our last money on acquiring guns and ammunition and learn how to shoot—and to shoot into the beasts who would dare to attack us. We must unite secretly, call strikes in all industries, begin to seize all food stores and factories, attack with any weapon you can—capitalism and its upholders.

The following is from Il Diritto, published in New York:

The workers of Russia, Germany, Austria, and other countries have risen and have overthrown their rulers. Not by ballot, but by arming themselves, as it is your only means. You alone do not budge. Are you afraid to follow their example? Are you afraid to take by force what rightfully belongs to you? Will you be meek and slavish? Will you wallow under the iron heel of your masters? Or will you tear your way by the revolution to a better and happier life? Which will you choose?

Now, this is from a Jewish I. W. W. publication, Der Klassen Kampf, of September, 1919:

Only by direct action, strike, general strike, and mass revolt, will we gain better living conditions.

Here is one from the Hungarian I. W. W., Chicago:

The time of idle talk has passed. The time for action is at hand. Let us act. If every one of us will do his share, capitalism will lie at our feet in short order. Poke the flame of dissatisfaction until it envelops this rotten capitalistic world.

Here, again, is an extract from the Hungarian I. W. W.:

If the I. W. W. were to announce its ideals, it could live in peace with the ruling class and its institutions. But we do not make a secret of our aim. We want to abolish wage slavery. We proclaim it openly that we want to gain control over the industries of the country; we are carrying our strength into battle in order to gain sway over society. We want the earth and all that is in it and above it. And for this we are ready to make all kind of sacrifices.

That is dated November 22, 1919, page 2, of the Hungarian I. W. W., with the unpronounceable name of Felszabadulas, Chicago, Ill.

They now control the Messenger, a negro magazine published in New York, for the purpose of spreading this doctrine among the negroes, appealing to them to join the I. W. W. They denounce the Republican Party more than the Democratic Party, and urge the negro to join the Socialist Party and affiliate with the I. W. W. In the Thanksgiving number of the Messenger they say:

We do not thank God for anything, nor do our thanks include gratitude for the things for which most persons usually give thanks at this period. With us we are thankful for different things, and to a different deity. Our deity is the toiling masses of the world, and the things for which we thank are their achievements. What are some of them?

First. We are especially thankful for the Russian revolution—the greatest achievement of the twentieth century.

Second. We are thankful for the German revolution, the Austrian revolution, the Hungarian revolution, and the Bulgarian revolution.

Third. We are thankful for the world unrest which has manifested itself in the titanic strikes which are sweeping and have been sweeping Great Britain, France, Italy, the United States, Japan, and, in fact, every country in the world.

Fourth. We are thankful for the solidarity of labor, for the growth of industrial unionism, for the relegation of trade-unionism, for the triple alliances of the railway, transport, and mine workers in England and America.

Fifth. We are especially thankful that radicalism has permeated America, giving rise to many of the greatest strikes in history, such as our present steel strike and our impending railroad strikes.

In another publication of this magazine they go on to say that the American Federation of Labor deny negroes the right of membership, but the I. W. W. will accept them. They say that there are 149,000 negroes engaged in transportation work, and go on to say:

The I. W. W. would include those 149,000 negroes, who have the power, by stopping their work, to tie up the roads as completely as the big four brotherhoods could. If the negroes stop leading the cars, repairing the tracks, and producing the materials which are necessary for transportation, the engineers would have nothing to carry, but the big four brotherhoods are so highly American that they are shocked through with race prejudice which blinds them to their enlightened self-interests.

Now, you may ask whether or not these radical publications have any general circulation. The Messenger boasts of a circulation of about 50,000 a month. The revolutionary publications I have heretofore referred to have a circulation of approximately 250,000 copies a week. The revolutionary dailies have a circulation of about 50,000 copies per day. I have a letter from Mr. J. Ryon McKissick, the managing editor of the Piedmont, of Greenville, S. C., in which he incloses a circular letter from Soviet Russia, official organ of the Russian soviet bureau, asking that copies of the Piedmont be sent to them, and in return they wish to send the truth about the Russian revolution and Bolshevism in order that the people may know the truth. This is the latest method they have adopted to have the revolutionary doctrine of Russia reach the people of the United States.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. ROGERS. What is the Post Office Department doing to stop the dissemination of such stuff?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The only law they have is the espionage law. I do not think I am violating any confidence when I say that under that law they have been stopping some publications. But I doubt if we have the right to do it, notwithstanding the Supreme Court decision that we are technically at peace. The espionage law is so worded that it clearly applies to the act of an individual the object of which is to obstruct hostilities or give aid to the enemy. The Department of Justice, though it doubts the applicability of the espionage act at this time, has pending to-day two cases in order to make a test. We have not a chance on earth, in my opinion, to convict under the espionage act. The necessity exists for legislation, and it should be enacted. The only statute we have is a conspiracy statute that is based on an act passed in 1861. That section would not apply to the act of an individual. The Department of Justice, in endeavoring to ascertain whether they could effectively prosecute under it, prosecuted the El Ariete Society, of Buffalo, N. Y., for the circulation of the most outrageous stuff I have ever read, and the court directed a verdict of not guilty because the statute did not apply to it. This Government stands to-day apparently impotent, unable to defend itself against the attacks of those who would destroy it. This Congress can take no action more essential to the safety of the Republic than to pass to-day legislation giving the Government the power to stop this anarchistic literature from going through the mail and to put into jail those who try to send it through the mail.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. POU. Does the gentleman have any earthly doubt that the Post Office Department would stop this if they had the power to do so?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I must say that I went there with the purpose in view of criticizing the department, and I did it; but I was convinced, after they had presented their case to me, of their inability to prosecute; that they can not do it unless we provide the legislation. If there is any doubt about their having the power, for the Lord's sake let us give it to them and immediately. [Applause.]

Here is the Finnish I. W. W., and the Jewish I. W. W. again. Here is the Melting Pot, of St. Louis, published in English.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Are those citations from publications that go through the mail?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Those which are in this bundle that I have in my hand are taken from publications that have been circulated in the mail. The good Lord only knows how many are in circulation that do not go through the mails.

Mr. FESS. They are not mere resolutions, but actual publications?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They were taken from the papers I have in my hand, from publications going through the mails of the United States. And not only is that true but each day they are increasing in number. Each week we find this revolutionary propaganda in a new language, appealing to the discontent, to all the dissatisfaction of America. This Government can not afford to stand by and admit its inability to handle a situation of that character.

Mr. DUNBAR. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. DUNBAR. Does the Johnson bill, which it is proposed to have under consideration, remedy the situation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No. The Johnson bill goes as far as it can, coming from this committee. It proposes to deport the aliens who advocate these doctrines, and that is all. To make these acts unlawful, whether committed by alien or citizen, and to make these publications nonmailable I have a bill before the Judiciary Committee; but I have no pride of authorship, and if that committee will throw my bill into the wastebasket and bring out a bill under any other name that will accomplish the objects sought by my bill and will correct this evil, I will cooperate to secure its passage.

Mr. DUNBAR. If I understand it, even if the Johnson bill becomes a law these publications can still pass through the mail?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They can.

Here is a Finnish I. W. W. publication called the Industrialisti, published in Duluth, Minn., and it says:

ABSTRACT FROM THE CONTRIBUTION OF A CERTAIN J. P. FROM DETROIT, MICH.

You, the Socialists, do not believe in violence. You are expecting a peaceful revolution. You simply vote the reigning class down from the "saddle." Is it not so? Good comrades, do not let yourselves be fooled! Consider that a class striving to get into power has never made a fixed program, but fought its fights according to the requirements of the time, using such materials and arms as it has been able to get hold of and discarded them again for better ones, until the victory was obtained. In this way they built their own society. Have you read in the history of any country of a revolution so peaceful that no blood was shed, that more or less human beings were not sacrificed? Presumably not. * * *

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the rule without any hesitation at all, under the conviction that we have no legislation before the Congress, speaking now of the character of it, not the degree, that is of greater importance. In degree we are not going far enough, but we are going as far as we under our jurisdiction in the committee could go. It has been suggested that we are in a stage or cycle of thinking that is hysterical. I can understand why, when the country becomes greatly excited and many people are giving utterances along all lines of excitement, that others say it is hysterical. But I do not believe that it is hysteria to sound the alarm when facts are cited, such as the gentleman who has just left the floor has been giving us. It is not hysteria when we call attention to official reports that have been made to the country, such as were made by the Lusk committee not long ago. When the report was made I had occasion to repeat a portion of it in a hearing before the Committee on Education, and one of the members of that committee said he wanted to enter his protest against the statement going in the record, because it was such a strikingly alarming one, and he did not believe it was founded on fact. When I reminded him that that was a report of a committee that was official it still did not satisfy him. The Lusk committee made the statement that there were between 300,000 and 500,000 people in the city of New York alone that did not only believe but were advocating forcible seizure of property. It stated that upon that propaganda there were 2,500 employees on the pay roll; that there were 261 publications that were going through the mails advocating the same thing. When we report that as a fact it is not hysteria if people become alarmed. The Department of Justice through its investigations has more than confirmed the findings and the startling announcement of the Lusk committee. To-day it is no longer a question of doubt as to the systematic, intensive campaign of education going on against the fundamental principles of our system of representative government in certain circles widely scattered throughout the land. This propaganda is to-day so insinuating that it is gradually finding force in the convictions of many people among us who would be regarded otherwise very sane. Legislation must be enacted to enable the country to protect itself against the enemies within its borders.

This bill does not go further than the deportation of aliens. It is only a step among the others we must soon take, since all the alien danger is not cured in this bill.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I presume you are referring to the bill H. R. 11224?

Mr. FESS. I refer to the bill brought in by Mr. JOHNSON.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Known as the Johnson bill?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. One clause in the bill reads thus:

That the following aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States.

Now, under that provision can you deport a man who has already been admitted into the United States?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado, who had much to do in this legislation.

Mr. VAILE. If the gentleman will yield there for a moment, I think I can answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. FESS. I will yield.

Mr. VAILE. The provision of the original act, section 2, provides for the deportation of all who come within section 1, and now we amend section 1 and we add certain specific things to section 1. I think, as a legal proposition, that we do now cover that point by the unamended section 2.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, my reference that the provision in the bill was limited to one particular class was simply to suggest that later on we shall necessarily have to strengthen and extend the legislation to protect our Government.

This bill, for which I shall vote with the greatest freedom, takes care at least of a certain dangerous element. I want to see legislation go to the extent to cover other acts. Why should an alien be permitted to harangue any audience in America against our Government or its institutions in any language other than the English, if in that language? [Applause.] I would also like to see legislation go to the extent that would say to the alien who has lived here for five years that he must qualify to be a citizen acceptable to our requirements, so that he can be naturalized under our laws, or else after five years leave the shores of this country. [Applause.] I want to see legislation go to the extent of ridding our country of all alien elements that are dangerous. [Applause.] And I do not want to see any technicality defeat the legislation. It is not a matter of hysteria at all.

Now, gentlemen of the House, while this bill can not reach it, there are people who are not aliens within our boundaries that will have to be reached in some way. That is a bigger problem than this one.

The chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas] has just referred to the blot upon a great State and a great city by the action of yesterday. Why should the House of Representatives worry about it? If that State wants to retain the blot of the election of a criminal to represent it, we can not prevent it, but we will not extend it to the House. And it will not be so extended. I would be willing now to join any group of men in enacting a law canceling the naturalization papers of any alien heretofore naturalized and deport him if he has been convicted under legislation designed to protect the Nation against its enemies. [Applause.]

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion right there?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VAILE. I may say that that matter has been considered somewhat by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, but it will undoubtedly be considered by the Committee on the Judiciary. It presents the proposition of the right to deport to foreign countries citizens who have been naturalized here.

Mr. FESS. Who have renounced their allegiance. Probably there will be legal technicalities which will be difficult to overcome, but our Government must not be impotent in the handling of dangerous elements who are in our midst. If we can not deport them, then we can incarcerate them. [Applause.]

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. The gentleman has just stated what I wanted to ask him about.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. We can certainly strip them of their citizenship. There is no doubt about that. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. No; there is no doubt about that, and the Government will certainly not confess its impotency in the face of an outlaw who defies its authority to protect itself in time of war against those enemies who violate not only their oaths of allegiance required when seeking naturalization but the law itself.

Our problem, tersely stated, is threefold—get rid of the undesirable who can be made subject to deportation. This is a governmental problem. Those among us who can not be sent out of the country must be Americanized. This is a problem of the people rather than the Government.

We must enlist every agency in a campaign of education. It must include the schools, secondary and higher institutions of learning. Every school board should make sure that no teacher remains in the school work who can not subscribe to American institutions. Every board of control of the higher institutions, whether private, church, or state, should purge the faculty of the parlor Bolshevist on its roll.

The church must enlist its various agencies in this work of Americanization. It occupies a peculiar position of advantage if it embraces the opportunity now open to it.

The various clubs, business, social, and civic, whether of men or women, or both, must also enter the campaign as they did during the war, when the entire Nation was placed on a war basis.

Only recently steps were taken to enlist the "movies" in this movement. This is the thought of the Secretary of the Interior and seconded by the Committees on Education of Congress.

An intensive campaign of education such as that back of the Red Cross, Young Men's Christian Association, Liberty loans, and various other war activities, in which every man, woman, and child became interested, can be organized on behalf of Americanism, which will make an atmosphere too hot for any anarchist to survive. But this is the work not of this body but of the people.

We can get rid of those who should be sent out and take all necessary steps to prevent more dangerous elements entering.

To this purpose our people must set themselves at once. This bill is the first step.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], to be used as he sees fit.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield that time to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the discussion so far has taken a wide range. I simply want to call the attention of the membership of the House to the fact that this bill and this legislation does not deal with the criminal law, and does not make it a crime for a citizen of the United States to do any of the acts provided for in this legislation. Contemplated legislation now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary will take care of the criminal end.

There are a number of bills now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary making it a crime to do the acts referred to. Those bills ought to be digested, and the committee is working on them faithfully, I understand, and no doubt it will shortly bring out a bill whereby it will be made a crime to teach sabotage and to teach criminal syndicalism, and we shall have law in the United States as they now have in California, Washington, Oregon, Utah, Colorado, Arizona, Wisconsin, and other States, whereby that will be made punishable by imprisonment for a term as long as 20 years. That is what we ought to have as a Federal statute on the statute books at the present time, and we are hoping that that will be presented to the House shortly, so that it may be enacted at an early date.

This bill relates solely to aliens, to the deportation of aliens, those who are prohibited from landing in this country if they believe in these doctrines, or, having entered the United States, advocate any of the doctrines or practices specified in the bill. It makes no difference how long they may have been here or when or where they may ply their trade. As designated in this bill, they should be arrested and deported.

The bill now before the House is the unanimous judgment of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. The bill adds to the present law provisions whereby aliens may be deported, those who believe in or write or teach or print any of these things that are prohibited.

The question of advising opposition to all government and expressing a belief in or advising the overthrow of the Government by force or violence or the necessity of assassinating officers generally or individually as a class is covered by the bill, in addition to the other aliens provided for in the now existing law, save and except those who teach or advise sabotage.

There ought to be, in addition to this bill, such a law, but the committee did not desire to complicate this bill. There ought to be the same provision for those who teach criminal syndicalism as those laws which have been so well enforced in the Western States, as we learn by telegrams from the attorneys general of those States, and particularly of California, where they have already convicted a number of these people who teach sabotage, as well as those who teach and advocate criminal syndicalism, as defined in those State statutes and as the committee believes will eventually be enacted into law here.

Unquestionably this rule ought to be adopted and the bill passed. I want to print in the RECORD and call to the attention of the House, in addition, what has been said which the public knows of or ought to know of, what the Senate has reported in its report on Bolshevism under Senate resolutions 307 and 426. I will insert the following, bearing on this subject; it is pertinent at this point:

AMERICAN I. W. W. STYLED A UNIT OF RUSSIAN REDS—RESOLUTIONS READ AT M'HUGO TRIAL APPEAL TO ALL RADICALS TO RALLY TO BANNER OF RUSSIA'S SOVIET GOVERNMENT.

OAKLAND, CALIF., December 5.

Resolutions styling the Industrial Workers of the World as the "American Unit of the Workers' Red International" and pledging the I. W. W. to establish fraternal relations with revolutionary groups throughout the world, said to have been adopted by the general exective board of the organization at a meeting held in Chicago last August, were read into the State's testimony at the criminal syndicalism trial of James McHugo, local secretary of the I. W. W.

These resolutions had never before been made public, the prosecution asserted.

AMERICAN REDS URGED TO ACT.

The resolutions read:

"Whereas the soviet government of Russia, in its call for the third international, included Industrial Workers of the World as one of the bodies eligible to such international; and

"Whereas the Industrial Workers of the World is the only organization in the United States whose program is absolutely scientific and uncompromising, and is the logical American unit of the third international; and

"Whereas the proletarian revolution is world-wide and national or local in its scope: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the time has come for the Industrial Workers of the World to assume its proper place as the American Unit of the Workers' Red International, and to establish closer relations with the groups of the same or similar principles in every country, such as the Communists of Russia, Hungary, Bavaria, etc.; the Spartacans of Germany; the Syndicalists of France, Italy, Great Britain, and other countries; and the Unionists of Canada and Australia; be it further

"Resolved, That the Industrial Workers of the World shall create a committee of international relations, which shall at once establish and maintain correspondence and fraternal relations with such aforesaid revolutionary groups throughout the world, and shall provide for the representation of the Industrial Workers of the World as a constituent member of the third international."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the gentleman's purpose to extend in the RECORD the document he referred to?

Mr. RAKER. It is.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman will find that document on pages 448–454 of the RECORD, inserted there in the other body.

Mr. RAKER. I am simply going to insert in the RECORD the resolution of the I. W. W. indorsing in this country the soviet policy in Russia.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think that would adorn the RECORD very much.

Mr. VAILE. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the very issue involved here is whether the I. W. W. is such an organization that membership in it should involve the penalty of exclusion from the country.

Mr. WALSH. Is there any doubt in anybody's mind about that?

Mr. VAILE. There is great doubt in the minds of the Department of Labor. That is the reason why we are bringing this bill here to-day.

Mr. WALSH. Will the printing of this resolution in the RECORD solve that doubt?

Mr. VAILE. I think it will do a good deal to solve it.

Mr. WALSH. If the Department of Labor needs the printing of documents in the RECORD to solve their doubts, I shall not object. It is interesting to know that we have that kind of a Department of Labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PORTO RICAN SUGAR.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a telegram from the president of the Senate and the speaker of the House of Representatives of the Legislature of Porto Rico protesting against the control of sugar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a telegram from the Legislature of Porto Rico. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The telegram is as follows:

SAN JUAN, P. R., December 20, 1919.

PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS

(Through Commissioner CORDOVA DAVILA, Washington, D. C.):

A strong feeling of public protest has arisen in Porto Rico by injustice to our sugar industry, the most important of the island, brought about by control provided for by McNary bill, after the sugar crop of the continent has been disposed of and no control established on other necessaries of life, such as rice, flour, and meats, which considerably increase cost of life here, and will compel us to increase wages. On the other hand, such measure has for basis a state of war, which practically does not exist, except merely on technical grounds. We demand justice.

BARCELÓ,
President of the Senate.
HUYKE,
Speaker of the House.

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN ANARCHISTS.

The SPEAKER. Under the resolution adopted it is in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 11224.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 11224, to amend the act entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," approved October 16, 1918, with Mr. GOOD in the chair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, inasmuch as I expect to read and explain its provisions at the very beginning of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Under the rule I understand that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], chairman of the Committee on Immigration, and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], being the ranking minority member, will have control of the time, each one hour?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule one-half of the time is to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and one-half by the ranking minority member of that committee. Under the arrangement the Chair understands that the gentleman from Washington will control one-half and the gentleman from California one-half.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, this proposed legislation is not supposed to take the place of the criminal laws of any State. Whether murder is committed by an alien or a citizen, it is murder and nothing less. It is proposed by this bill to overcome the difference of opinion which exists between the Department of Justice and the Department of Labor as to what persons can be deported under the present law. My own opinion is and has been that under the present law you can deport from this country every person who is opposed to our form of government, and under its provisions 240 creatures are being prepared to leave America within the next 24 hours—to be gotten away from here for all time, I hope. [Applause.] It is a remarkable thing that since this congressional committee was authorized to proceed over 400 men have been taken into custody, that from May 1, 1917, up to November 1, 1919, 697 have been arrested and only 60 deported. There were 82 cases pending at that time. Those held at Ellis Island and the balance of them brought from all over America, after being released on small bail or otherwise, have been dumped on the city of New York.

Now, there is no reasonable doubt but that the men and women who are supplying the money for this kind of propaganda in America are native born, and many of them are women who appear to be suffering from ennui. They turn to assist these people without perhaps fully realizing that they are mainly responsible for arousing them against our form of government and our Constitution and what we believe and stand for. I hope and I expect that the Judiciary Committee within the course of two or three weeks will bring in such legislation here as will reach the native-born or naturalized citizen. We will thus reach every scoundrel under this proposed law. I can go to work and refer for hours to the way the present law broke down. Broke down, why? Because certain officials at Ellis Island and certain officials in the Labor Department here did not enforce the law as it was intended to be enforced. You can pass any number of laws, as I have repeatedly said, but if you do not enforce them, and do not have the men present to enforce them, they are of no effect.

I have received any number of letters in regard to conditions at the island, showing the kind of treatment that is accorded the immigrant who comes here to become a loyal American citizen, and the other type. Perchance, if he is under age or if he has not sufficient money he is shipped back within two or three weeks, while some of these scoundrels and anarchists have been allowed at large. It has taken four years of time, until this congressional committee got on the job, to get them started back to where they belonged.

The chairman of the committee has referred to the Bianca case. The Frank R. Lozep case has been pending for three years. Two or three days ago one of the men released from Ellis Island under an order of the United States district court went up to Utica, N. Y., got into trouble, and was held in $3,000 bail by the county court. Why, men in this country who are not even citizens, such as Nuorteva and his crew, have been advising Howe, at Ellis Island, whom to release and whom to keep in America. I would like to know why the Labor Department does not take Martens and the rest of his crew, who are not citizens and do not represent any government, and ship them out of America in the same shipload that is leaving our shores within the next 48 hours.

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman will yield, I wish to say that I am not acquainted with these men. Who are they?

Mr. SIEGEL. Martens is the self-constituted ambassador of some alleged soviet government in existence in Russia, and when the New York Supreme Court is trying to punish him for contempt the newspapers announce to-day that he is in Washington on some international matters. Nuorteva came here, and he says he is the secretary of this so-called embassy. In April of this year he wrote to Howe and asked him to try to intercede in the case of Vernon Daw, one of the most notorious characters in Europe, who had arrived here. But his letters arrived too late, and the man was deported.

Mr. BUTLER. Are these men advising the authorities at New York, did I understand the gentleman to say?

Mr. SIEGEL. These men were advising the immigration authorities at New York.

Mr. BUTLER. As to whom to admit here?

Mr. SIEGEL. As to whom to admit here and whom not to admit—some of the creatures I have referred to.

Mr. WALSH. Is there not a law in the gentleman's State that permits the rounding up of this class of people, and have they not been prosecuted under that law?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes; and that is the same kind of a law which I have introduced here, and which is now before the Judiciary Committee, and is one of the 10 bills which the Judiciary Committee is going to consolidate, as I understand it.

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman familiar with the number of States that have similar laws?

Mr. SIEGEL. There are not more than 10 in this country. The State of Washington is one and the State of California is another. The others are Pennsylvania, Virginia, Massachusetts, Illinois, New York, Oregon, North Dakota, and Indiana.

Mr. WALSH. About 40 States that have not given attention to this subject?

Mr. SIEGEL. There is no doubt about that.

Now, that there is necessity for reaching the native-born and American citizen can be shown from some of the speeches that some of these people have been delivering. Let us take James O'Neal, for example.

I read:

Sometimes I think one reason why we are supporting Kolchak in Siberia is because some of the politicians in the United States want Siberia for the same purpose as the Czar had it for. They want it for their political prisoners, the several thousand human beings who are wearing chains in the penitentiaries of the United States to-day. We have a big struggle before us! They would like to goad us into some conduct that would enable them to crush us, but we shall not play their game; but we shall continue our efforts along peaceful, intelligent, educational lines, knowing that in the last analysis that once we reach the heart, the brain, the conscience of the great master of the American people, come what will, gags, chains, jails, can not prevent us from transforming the United States into a genuine foregoing democracy of socialism.

That may be years, but it may be only a few years. My judgment is that if Europe goes socialist, and the bankers of the United States who return from Europe are afraid that it is going to go socialist within the next year, if it does go socialist, capitalism can not permanently last in the Western Hemisphere; it has got to go socialist, too.

When it goes socialist, when this world is free, and the proper principles dominate the instructions of the twentieth century all over the world, we can look back over the stages of history and compare this rotten, brutal, drunken capitalism with all the other periods that have gone before, and we can see this, that practically all the ancient history at least contributed something that is worth while to mankind.

That was delivered by Mr. James O'Neal, of New York City, on November 7, 1919, at a meeting of the Socialist Party at Park View Palace, One hundred and tenth Street and Five Avenue. Now here is another:

The soviet form of government is a new form of government. Heretofore the function of government was recognized as being a jailer, a policeman, a tax collector, a military conscript, a war declarant; but in industry and commerce, when it came to wages and hours, the Government assumed a policy of indifference, to let things alone; but a new state has been founded, and it says to the world that the function of the state is not to be the mere policeman, to be the jailer, and the judge, and the tax collector, and the conscript, but that the function of the state is to organize the industries, the wealth, the resources, material, for the purpose of establishing things as they should be. [Applause.]

This new state is being fought and fought hard by imperialism and capitalism the world over, and I do not blame them, because if socialism can be shown to succeed in the world, what chance has Wall Street to survive—what chance? None.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman give me three minutes more?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, there is other matter here that I could read to you for hours and days.

Here is an article published in Solidarity, the official organ of the I. W. W., September 16, 1913, and is as follows:

I do not wish this to be read as a defense of the I. W. W's or syndicalism. I am simply endeavoring to present to you, my clients, certain facts which, owing to your wealth, associations, and reading matter, you do not get to-day.

I also wish to warn you that the movement will, in some form, continue to grow, because it is, in my opinion, founded on an economic fact, namely, that the labor problem will never permanently be solved until the workers actually own the mills and other enterprises and the State or Nation actually owns the railroads and public-service properties, however much we dread both events. We hear much about the interests of capital and labor being mutual, but this is not economically true. Capital and labor are by all economic laws antagonistic and attempts at combining these two forces are sure to be only temporary makeshifts.

Certain cooperative or profit-sharing plans may be improvements over former systems, but they will not solve the problem. Certain strikes may be "settled" by compromises or arbitration, but it is only a short time before another strike is instituted. The great fundamental question between capital and labor will never be settled by arbitration boards nor through the joint control of industries by representatives of labor and capital. One of these two opposing interests must and ultimately will rule. Wise are the bankers, manufacturers, and investors who recognize that it will be labor which is to rule. If so, this means that labor must ultimately acquire the industries, as capital will not much longer rest content with present conditions.

Therefore, although we may despise the leaders and condemn the methods of the I. W. W's, we must not lose sight of their ultimate aim, as upon this aim depends their future growth. In short, the American Federation of Labor professes to believe that there can be two hands to a mill or a business and that these can be operated jointly by capital and labor.

The Industrial Workers of the World state frankly and ultimately that there can be but one head—either capital or labor must rule—and that we are to see a fight to the finish. I regret to admit it, but I nevertheless believe that the I. W. W. theory is the more correct, and many great manufacturers reluctantly agree.

Respectfully submitted.

ROGER W. BABSON.

It shows the responsibility that rests upon our citizens all the way through. These are speeches delivered by our citizens. I have any number of them. They were delivered in November and delivered in December of this year. Those men are leading these people on, and away behind them are the cooperators and contributors who produce the money in order to have these speeches delivered and these meetings take place. As I said before the Committee on the Judiciary the other day, the way in which they get the people to attend these meetings is to announce that some great opera singer is going to sing, and then what happens? Thousands of people who can not afford to attend the Metropolitan Opera House, or what was formerly the Manhattan Opera House, go to these meetings, and there they will hear a song or two sung, and in the intermissions these speeches are made and delivered to them. And to what effect?

You read in the newspapers, no doubt, about that young boy, 16 or 17 years old, who was sent to Ellis Island and examined by me, and who told how he became interested in socialism and then in anarchy. He said he had organized over 450 real Russians, to teach them and set them against our Government. When that boy was asked, "Have you no respect for constituted authority?" he answered, "No; I do not believe in it." When he was asked, "Do you believe in government?" His answer was, "No; I do not believe in it." When he was asked, "Do you believe in property?" his answer was, "No; I would wipe out all property." When he was asked, "Do you believe in respect for parents?" his answer was, "No; I do not."

You may have seen in the newspapers accounts of that boy, who possessed a command of language that was exceptional. He stated that in Brooklyn and New York he was able to gather 400 to 500 men at his meetings and instruct them in the principles of anarchy. There you have a 16 or 17 year old boy, leading men and teaching them views in opposition to constituted government. He was asked, "Where do you get the money in order to do this?" His answer was, "Oh, some rich folks in New York are giving us the money." He would not give their names. We asked him if he wanted to go home. His answer was, "Yes." He wanted to go back. He mentioned

Kronstadt and other places as places to which he would be glad to be sent.

The Committee on the Judiciary has the greatest problem ever presented to it. It has resting upon it the duty of framing a law to reach the contributors to funds of this kind. This is not a partisan question. This is an American question. I am glad to see that the whole House, as well as the whole committee, approaches this question in that spirit, determined to eradicate by all methods within the means of law every scoundrel who is engaged in this movement, even if he is an American, and to see that he gets the full penalty of the law, so that every man, whether native born or otherwise, in this country can live here in peace, and that our form of government will be sustained in the present and future as it has been sustained in the past. [Applause.]

At last the American people have awakened to the conditions which have too long existed at the immigration station located at Ellis Island, in the harbor of New York. Much was anticipated from the passage of the immigration law of 1917, and although many thinkers and publicists of note differed as to the wisdom of its so-called literacy test, yet once it had been enacted over the President's veto they all looked forward to the provisions of the law being fully enforced.

In lieu of a fair administration of the law, they have discovered to their dismay that extreme haste is exercised in the return of the ordinary immigrant who may be technically disqualified to enter and a decided tendency to permit those creatures who are opposed to our form of government to be discharged on their own recognizance or released on nominal bail.

No real physical or mental examination of the arriving immigrants takes place. On board the Adriatic less than one-quarter of a minute was taken for the physical examination of each immigrant. It was conducted by one doctor instead of two as required by the statute. The general mental and moral examination was conducted by one inspector instead of two, and in each instance did not exceed two minutes. The entire procedure has indeed been characterized, and properly so, as a farce. It has, to a large extent, endangered the safety and health of our people. It has allowed those who should never have been permitted to enter to come in and become the advocates of violence and hate against our institutions. It has also caused the honest and law-abiding immigrant, who has come here for the purpose of becoming a real American citizen in the fullest sense of the term, to be looked upon with askance. He has been unjustly accused of many crimes and offenses of which he has been innocent. It has engendered bad feeling against him in many of the sparsely settled States. It has created antipathies in the large cities.

During the war over 213,000 men who were aliens waived their right to exemption and fought for America. Last year the whole Nation acclaimed with one voice the extraordinary gallantry of the famous "Lost Battalion." A goodly portion of this battalion consisted of immigrants here less than five years.

Agitators have claimed for a long time that hundreds of thousands of aliens surrendered their declarations of intention to become American citizens in order to avoid military duty. That there has been gross exaggeration and deliberate efforts to mislead this country can be shown from the official report from the Department of Labor, which gives the total number as 1,745.

There is also a tendency to claim that in the cities where there is a large foreign-born population that crime is greater than in the cities where the native-born population predominates. The truth is that there is no difference. The city of Washington is an American city in every particular. It has an estimated population not exceeding 455,000, and yet the total arrests made by the police department during the past year were 53,356, against 43,245 the preceding year. If the similar ratio was to follow in New York City, the total number of arrests would be 618,000 for one year, when, as a matter of fact, we have never reached 200,000. Further investigation upon those who are more deeply interested will substantiate this statement.

This country's net gain in population by immigration since 1908 has been as follows:

1908	387,797
1909	525,984
1910	839,134
1911	582,921
1912	504,910
1913	889,702
1914	915,142
1915	122,626
1916	169,061
1917	229,126
1918	16,033
1919	17,610

During the past two months the average number of arrivals has been a little over 25,000, and during the same period of time over 25,000 have left to return to Europe.

The immigrants who are coming here now are related to residents. Before any person can come here he must obtain a passport from the country to which he owes allegiance. Such passport must then be presented to the nearest United States consul for visé. The consul is authorized to visé such passports if he is satisfied that the person intending to come to America is mentally, morally, and physically fit. Most consuls cable the State Department for instructions before acting. Upon receipt of such a dispatch the State Department causes an investigation to be made through the Department of Justice. If it shows that the applicant's relatives have been loyal during the period of the war and their records as to good character and reputation in the community are satisfactorily established, the State Department directs the consul to take affirmative favorable action.

The present immigration law if it had been properly enforced would have been of great service. It appears, however, that there has been a woeful failure to carry out its provisions. I am not one of those who believe that we should constantly be passing new laws simply for the purpose of placing them upon the statute books. Laws are enacted for the purpose of deterring people from committing certain crimes which the law, as it then existed, was unable to reach previous to such enactment. The object of the law is to punish the guilty as quickly as possible and thus deter others from committing similar offenses. If originally the Department of Labor had dealt promptly with such aliens who are opposed to our form of government, the radicalism which has been permitted to grow would have ceased to exist.

It is true that under the decision of the Supreme Court in the Nine Japanese cases Justice Harlan held that those who are opposed to our Government, commonly known as anarchists, and so forth, must receive a hearing before some authority designated by Congress before being deported. This does not mean that a regular court must be constituted for that purpose or that they are entitled to a jury trial. The present law provides for such a hearing before the Secretary of Labor. These hearings are held before inspectors of immigration, reviewed by an immigration commissioner, and then the documents are sent on to Washington. In that city Secretary Wilson has designated an Assistant Secretary to act on all immigration matters who has permitted the attorneys for the proposed deportees to appear and argue in their behalf or present other testimony. Many of these cases have been allowed to drag for years. The remedy is plain. Congress will have to put a provision into the immigration act providing that all hearings must be finally heard and determined within 30 days after the arrest of the undesirable alien. Another change which would be very effective would be the stationing of an Assistant Secretary of Labor at Ellis Island, as here comes more than 80 per cent of all of America's immigration.

The general and medical examination which is now performed by one doctor and one inspector when the law requires two, in order to make a proper inspection, will have to be made mandatory, so as to eliminate all discretionary power now vested in the Secretary of Labor.

The examination of the arriving members of the ship's crew is very cursory. Many of the leading radicals and agitators have come in as sailors. Provisions will have to be made for a most thorough examination of the crew in the future. Many of these sailors who have landed have never returned to their ships, but remained here to give us trouble.

The number of aliens in America who are engaged in preaching or are engaged in furthering anti-American doctrines are limited in number. The most dangerous persons here to-day can be classified in two sets: First, the native born, be they either professional men or labor leaders of a certain kind; second, what is commonly known as the male or female species of "parlor Bolsheviks," native and foreign born. Both of these classes are a very small minority of the population, but what they lack in numbers is made up by them through speeches and publicity in the press, which is obtained by them at every opportunity.

If the various States would enact legislation along the lines now on the statute books of the State of New York and would locally make a real and earnest effort to enforce such laws instead of constantly appealing to Washington for Federal help, radicalism would be very quickly exterminated in this country. There is entirely too much running to Washington for relief for every local ill. A little bit more backbone upon the part of county prosecuting officers and State attorneys general, with a little less thought about politics and future office holding, would do very much to relieve present conditions.

Once the immigrant enters America the question of his becoming a citizen becomes not only his main thought but also that of every man who desires to see aliens assume the obligations of citizenship when, as we all know, he is receiving all the benefits which the country can bestow upon him.

It is useless to be urging the alien to become naturalized when we do not provide sufficient judicial machinery for that purpose. The applicants for citizenship have turned into the Treasury $4,745,436.79 in naturalization fees since 1906, and the total cost to the Government for this activity has been $3,923,447.77, leaving a surplus of $821,989.02 profit.

The work of the Naturalization Bureau and the Americanization work under its auspices have merited the highest approbation and approval, considering the niggardly amount which Congress has been allowing for this purpose.

Mr. Raymond F. Crist, the director of citizenship of the United States Bureau of Naturalization, has worked day and night for a number of years endeavoring in every way to encourage aliens to become citizens and become Americanized. We can not, however, expect aliens to respond until we provide proper facilities. If anyone is interested, let him call at the office of the naturalization examiners at 5 Beekman Street, New York City, and there see a large number of applicants, accompanied by their witnesses, who are citizens, crowded and jammed in the small quarters, compelled to stand about for several hours before their cases can be reached and disposed of, with an insufficient number of seats for them to be seated, and no accommodations of any kind.

There must be brought about a complete change of this condition. Provision must be made for a sufficient force of examiners and clerks. Sufficient rooms must be provided so that men and women may be seated while waiting for their cases to be reached; and a sufficient number of courts, with judges to preside over them who recognize the grave responsibility borne by them in admitting to the high privilege of American citizenship those who are only prepared to undertake the obligations and duties which go with it.

Investigation shows that few judges have the time or patience to give this work the attention which it deserves. I know of no greater function which has been bestowed upon the courts than the power of conferring American citizenship upon the foreign born. In the city of New York, with its 6,000,000 of inhabitants, relief can only be obtained by the creation of a naturalization court, over which presides a judge who should devote himself exclusively to that line of work, the same as judges have become specialists in children's, matrimonial, and traffic court work. At the time when the oath of allegiance is administered it should be an occasion of serious reflection and understanding by the new citizen, who is about to receive the great privilege of being protected by our country whether at home or abroad. The manner in which it is administered now brings shame and humiliation to the faces of those who are interested in upholding the high traditions of American citizenship. It is true that the applicant for citizenship and his witnesses are thoroughly examined by the naturalization examiners, but the scene in court when these cases are passed upon must convince every thinking patriot that a change must be made.

Recently 149 citizens were made in less than one hour's time in one courtroom in the city of New York before one judge. No one would pretend for one moment that these 149 had a clear understanding of what was being done at the time they were taking the oath. At least 300 other persons who were their witnesses were present in the courtroom, which could not conveniently hold 150. The oath was administered to all who had come from one particular country, and then those who would come from another country took it. The justice who presided exerted himself in every possible way to make it as dignified as he could under the circumstances, but on account of the numerous other matters requiring his prompt consideration he had to do it in haste.

There is no reason why the Government of the United States should be making a profit of over $800,000 on the naturalization of aliens and a profit of over $10,000,000 on the immigrants who have arrived here above all appropriations made for both the Naturalization and Immigration Services. Americanism means the understanding and comprehension of the principles upon which our Government is founded and allegiance to our country at all times. It might be of great aid to have every young man and woman who reaches the age of 21, even though native born, to take the oath of allegiance and thus impress him or her with the responsibilities and privileges of American citizenship.

The late Col. Roosevelt on November 26, 1917, wrote:

> It seems to me that such an oath might very well be demanded of every man before he is allowed to vote whether we are at war or not.

Let us realize that the immigrant has helped to make this country grander and greater until it has grown to be a mighty Republic of 110,000,000 people. He has worked the mines and built the subways. He has laid the tracks and done America's rough work. He has contributed much to her achievements and accomplishments. Let us be fair to him and in return let us all, whether native or foreign born, pledge ourselves to rid this country of the deluded and foolish agitators. Let us each take stock of ourselves and resolve to preach real Americanism daily until all over this country the chorus of love of our flag and institutions will forever drown and eradicate the scoundrels who lift their voices against our Government, whether in or out of public office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELTY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am a trifle disappointed with the bill now under consideration because it is not comprehensive enough. This Congress appropriated $2,600,000 to detect and prosecute persons who commit crimes against the Government of the United States, and at least $600,000 of this amount was made available and placed at the disposal of the Department of Justice for the purpose of making a full investigation in the matter of undesirable aliens with a view of deporting them. This appropriation was all made available for the Department of Justice, while no appropriation was made for the Department of Labor in the matter of detecting and deporting undesirable aliens.

Our deportation laws are exceedingly crude and out of date. They are the relics of feudal days, when all power was placed in one man. The immigration officer becomes a detective for the purpose of finding out the wrongs committed by these aliens and then he acts as magistrate to issue his warrant, and after that he acts as a policeman to arrest the man, and then detective and policeman will at once sit as court and jury, and last, but not least, he will be the executioner. Is it any wonder that most of these people, who are anarchists and who come from Russia, compare a law so much out of date here with Russia?

I proposed in the committee an amendment to this bill. I felt that when the Attorney General prepares a mass of evidence he should be required to submit it to the Department of Labor. There is no law at the present time providing for that. We have appropriated millions to detect and prosecute crimes against the United States and placed the money in the hands of the Attorney General, but he does not have the machinery to bring this matter before the Department of Labor. I felt that since he had this mass of evidence, collected at the expense of the Government, he should be required to file information with the Secretary of Labor, supporting the same with affidavits, and prosecute the cases before the Department of Labor. And that upon filing of the information it should be the duty of the Secretary of Labor to issue a warrant and hear the evidence submitted, and if he concludes that the accused alien is guilty, then he should be punished according to law.

The committee agreed, but felt that the matter should be taken up at another time. Judging from the history of legislation, I am afraid that the "other time" will never come. Gentlemen, do you realize that the deportation laws are as out of date as the oxcart is out of date on a modern farm? Our deportation laws are so near like the laws of Russia that the Russian immigrant can not tell the difference. The first man these aliens meet is the immigration officer at the port of entrance. The next time is perchance when they make some misstep. This is a dangerous power to give one man. I know of a little girl who came to this country from Bohemia with her own parents, and because she had inproper relations with a young man in this country the father and mother of the boy, in order to protect the good family name and keep him from marrying the young girl, solicited the immigration officer to swear out an affidavit against her and take action to have her deported.

A writ of habeas corpus was the only thing that saved that little girl from being sent away from her people in America back to strangers in Bohemia. When I interested myself in an attempt to see that justice was done, the immigration officer frankly admitted, "My job depends upon the number of cases that I can make out." When one of our citizens can violate the chastity of an alien girl and have her sent away from her own parents on that account in order to protect himself it is high time that we change the administration of the law. Then the machinery to detect criminals should be lodged with one branch of our service in order to avoid duplication and expense.

I am going to offer this amendment which I now ask the Clerk to read for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amendment for information in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WELTY: That a new section, known as section 4, be added to "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," approved October 16, 1918, as follows:

"SEC. 4. That upon information filed by the Attorney General of the United States with the Secretary of Labor, supported by affidavit, alleging that any alien has violated the provisions of this act, and the immigration act of February 5, 1917, the Secretary of Labor shall issue his warrant for the arrest of such alien and proceed to hear the evidence, and if the Secretary of Labor is of the opinion that said alien has violated the provisions of said acts shall order him deported in the manner provided in the immigration act of February 5, 1917."

Mr. WELTY. This bill comes to you with the unanimous report of the Committee on Immigration. I could not help but think, when the chairman [Mr. JOHNSON of Washington] was speaking about Ellis Island, that, while we examined a number of men who boasted that they were anarchists, he asked a young man certain questions and learned that he had been at Yale for two years. He was their press agent. He said, "You can deport us. There is no doubt of that, but we are coming back again, and then God pity you when we do come back." The chairman said, "What are you going to do—burn buildings?" His answer was, "No; we are not going to burn the buildings. We are going to keep them for ourselves. What we will do is to crack your skulls."

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. WELTY. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. Let me suggest to the gentleman that there was no corroborative evidence to show that this young man had been at Yale.

Mr. WELTY. Whether there was any corroborative proof or not I do not know. But one thing is sure, and that is this young man knew that he could come back again. He knew that we had no law by which we could keep him out. He could come in through Mexico or through Canada or one of our ports.

There are those who think that the country is unduly alarmed; that there is no danger from the anarchists sailing under the red flag, plotting to overthrow our Government by force and violence and the use of terrorism. Many of them do not think that the Government should deport this class. I sometimes question the wisdom myself. I believe it would be a better policy to dump all enemies of our Government on some island and let them live their own life there. Deportation only adds to the burden of the already overburdened countries fighting this menace against all governments.

About a month ago the Attorney General, in compliance with a Senate resolution, included the following in his report:

Since the organization of the radical division a more or less complete history of over 60,000 radically inclined individuals has been gathered together and classified and a foundation for action laid either under the deportation statutes or legislation to be enacted by Congress.

There are 222 radical newspapers published in foreign languages in this country at the present time and 105 radical newspapers published in the English language. In addition, 144 radical newspapers published in foreign countries are received and distributed to subscribers here. This number does not include the hundreds of books, pamphlets, and other publications which also receive wide circulation, many of them published in foreign languages. * * * From the date of the signing of the armistice a wave of radicalism appears to have swept over the country, which is best evidenced by the fact that since that date approximately 50 radical newspapers have commenced publication.

A large number of these papers openly advocate the destruction of the United States Government and encourage and advise their readers to prepare for the coming revolution. It is also a noticeable fact that a great many of these publications are practically devoid of advertising matter, which indicates that they are receiving money from outside sources to further their propaganda.

Practically all of the radical organizations in this country have looked upon the negroes as particularly fertile ground for the spreading of their doctrines. These radical organizations have endeavored to enlist negroes on their side and in many respects have been successful.

If there is any doubt about these reports, you can easily clear that doubt by reading the originals on file in the office of the Attorney General. And let me add in passing that the alien is not the only one who is an anarchist. They are receiving hundreds of recruits from our own citizens, and it is about time that we take a mental note, even though no action is taken by Congress to remedy the fault.

We have been hearing a great deal of criticism of the Department of Justice because of its failure to prosecute the anarchists sailing under the red flag and the profiteer sailing under the black flag. It has only been a few days since this denunciation was heard on the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] asking that the House take up for debate his report from the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. This committee has been engaged in making investigation of unlawful expenditure in the War Department since the beginning of the special session of Congress, and I understand expended over $160,000 of the people's money, but without coming to any conclusion.

The report does not contain any specifications or charges. Out of 9,553 cases settled by the War Department, he cited only 8 cases, and concluded that in some of the cases cited that they seem "to have been obviously tainted with frand," and concludes with the following words: "In some of the cases cited the committee is of the opinion that constructive, if not actual, fraud occurred."

In my resolution to investigate expenditure in the War Department four cases were cited that came under my personal observation during the prosecution of the war, and I asked for a nonpartisan committee to make investigation, but it seems that the House wanted a partisan committee composed of 10 Republicans and 5 Democrats. This committee made a report without throwing any light upon any of these contracts. They content themselves with finding fault, because at the time the armistice was signed the War Department had a large number of trucks, automobiles and tires, and other war material on hand which had to be resold at a sacrifice because of the close of the war.

There is no doubt but what the profiteer has been able to make millions out of this war; and it is indeed unfortunate that this committee has now struck a snag, or some influence seemingly has been brought to bear, which will prevent a full and free investigation. During this debate I asked why charges and specifications were not filed, so that the Department of Justice might have the facts to prosecute these criminals. My genial friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said we will prosecute during the next administration, when a reminder of the Beef Trust during the Spanish-American War no doubt convinced the gentleman that if we delay until the next administration, there will be no prosecutions. If I remember correctly, investigations were made at the close of the Spanish-American War because the Beef Trust killed hundreds of our soldiers by feeding them embalmed beef, but while the investigation was going on it was learned that a certain Senator from Ohio had sold one of his boats on the Great Lakes to the Government at a fabulous price, and for some reason nothing came of the investigation. No prosecutions followed, and I understand that the boat that the Senator from Ohio sold to the Government was sunk by Hobson, thus hoping to drown even the memory of the scandal.

"Prosecute during the next administration!" Why not furnish the facts now? I challenge you gentlemen to do so. If you are afraid that it might hurt some Republican brethren, bring forth the Democratic profiteers, back them up against the wall, and make them face a firing squad of sharpshooters from France.

If I can read history correctly and make proper comparison, I must conclude that this investigation is shaping up for the same ending as the Beef Trust scandal during the Spanish-American War.

The gentlemen are trying to reflect on the head of the War Department because he is a Democrat and leave the impression that his military appointments were Democrats.

I do not know what prevailed in other sections, but I do know that out of the first 11 judge advocates appointed from Ohio 9 were Republicans, and the Secretary did not know a single one. When informed of this condition, he remarked, "I have given instructions to avoid politics." History, gentlemen, will reveal that if the Secretary of War favored anyone, it was the Republicans. And, gentlemen, the result of your investigating committee would indicate that much. If there are any criminals of the Democratic faith, this partisan Republican committee is sure to get them.

We have had the profiteers with us since the foundation of this Republic. After the Civil War the country was startled by a statement from President Lincoln when he said: "As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned and an era of corruption in high places will follow." But no prosecutions were commenced then against the profiteer, nor do we know of any prosecutions after the Spanish-American War. Then why delay these investigations with a hope of being able to depend upon the next administration for prosecution?

I remember at the beginning of the war, when the steel interests came to Washington and camped here for almost a week, demanding that the prices of steel be increased from $35 to $95 per ton, just because the Government needed ships for the purpose of transporting our boys and provisions to France. These profiteers did not leave Washington until after they slandered the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War, with a hope of disrupting the administration, and only left the Capitol when they learned from the Commander in Chief of the Army that "profiteering and patriotism do not mix," and it seems that very little headway was made until Congress passed a law drafting the rich man's son as well as the poor man's son to support this Government.

I remember while prosecuting attorney of my county that this same class was then hovering around the county treasury selling steel bridges. I remember one bridge that was sold in my county for $10,000 and only $5,000 went to the bidder, while $5,000 was being divided among those who had knowledge of the letting. At that time the combinations were exceedingly crude. Payment was made by draft, and these drafts showed that one of the recipients of this combination was a nephew of a former President of the United States. Another one was a father-in-law of another President of the United States. When the companies and agents were indicted they appealed to the attorney general of the State of Ohio requesting that they be ousted from doing business, and with one stroke, at the request of the attorney general, the court dissolved these corporations, after which they appeared by their attorneys and asked that their cases be dismissed, because they were dead; one of the attorneys closed his brief for this combination by paraphrasing Holy Writ: "The State giveth life. The State taketh away; blessed be the name of the State," but the grand jury answered this plea by indicting its officers and directors, thus establishing the fact that guilt is personal. But it seems that lese majeste was committed, not only by the prosecutor but the clerk and sheriff as well, for the Federal court threatened to imprison all of these officers because of contempt.

The records in the Supreme Court will show that this same steel company has been resting under a charge by the Federal Government of being a monopoly since 1911, but that the Department of Justice has been made helpless under the Sherman antitrust law because of the famous decisions of the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases, which, in substance, held that a reasonable restraint under that act was permissible. The Reading Co. has been charged with monopoly in coal, but the Department of Justice has been unable to prosecute either the steel or coal cases.

I know a young man who left the farm to work in the coal mines at a dollar a day. One might know how long ago that was from the price paid. This young man was fed on decayed meat and made to sleep in a foul bed. He left his first employment and went to another coal mine, and when he found the same conditions there he left for a third mine, and when he found the conditions the same in all these camps he turned to be an anarchist. This young man was not an alien anarchist when he left the farm but an American citizen, as loyal as any man can be to the Stars and Stripes.

I know a poor widow who during the war made only 500 per cent on her investment in coal mines and boasted that she had cleared $450,000, and when the coal strike was on and the Government suggested an increase of 14 per cent to the miners this poor widow insisted that this increase must be passed on to the consumer, so that the owners of the mines might not lose their profits. These owners of the mines never thought of compromising until the public learned that they made from 5 to 2,000 per cent on their investments.

Considerable criticism has been directed toward the Department of Justice because of their failure to prosecute the food profiteers under the Sherman antitrust law. It was repeatedly stated on the floor that the profits of the United Fruit Co. during the last year were 40 per cent, and that the poor who desire bananas and fruits must pay these increased prices to the already multimillionaires.

But how can you hope to have even the company declared a monopoly so long as the decision of the Supreme Court permitting a reasonable restraint under the antitrust act is the law? In my State the governor called the attention of this condition to the prosecuting officers of the State. It is a known fact that in the sale of bananas and fruits there is no competition, and that those selling this food have a complete monopoly, but when the prosecutors made an investigation they seemed to direct their inquiry against the poor corner grocerymah and then declared to the public that there was no profiteering. Had they called in the grocer they could have learned that all these bananas and fruits could only be purchased from one source, and if anyone was bold enough to ship a car load of potatoes he could not have purchased any more from those who had a monopoly on bananas and fruits.

Gentlemen, you go to your markets here and buy a turkey for Thanksgiving; you will have to pay almost as much as the farmer received for a steer when I was on the farm. The other day I wanted to buy some pop corn to bring back childhood memories while enjoying the evening with my family, and when I protested because of the price—50 cents per pound—I was given to understand that I did not have to make the purchase. I know the time when a farmer was glad to sell a bushel for that price.

It has not been so many years ago when it was the custom of the banks in my State to loan out public funds and keep the interest and only return the principal into the county treasury.

I am mentioning these matters because I do not see any relief in sight from these anarchists, sailing under the red flag, unless we remove the irritant cause which produces the anarchists.

Selfishness is gripping the throats of capital and labor in their mad efforts, one to get the better of the other, and unless this strangle hold is released this country will, in the language of a noted divine, be going "to hell so fast that you can not see it for the dust." And, gentlemen, I am making this strong statement as an optimist and with a hope that this Congress may have the vision to see the danger and work out some solution of our problems so that there might be a greater cooperation and spirit of brotherhood between capital and labor.

However, one thing I do know, that we have a breeding ground here in America where thousands of human beings are born into this kingdom of anarchy. If the conditions detailed are the cause, the Government should speedily remove the same. A boat for soviet Russia is about to leave Ellis Island carrying hundreds of these Russian aliens, found guilty, to the land from whence they came. It is stated that the Bolsheviki movement was born in America; that it took America to produce a Trotski. It took the Spanish-American War to stamp out yellow fever, and I hope that the World War will finally stamp out the spirit of hate against a Government of laws for the benefit "of the people, by the people, and for the people," which all men are bound to respect and observe. But the yellow fever was not stamped out until the breeding pools were removed from our midst. So it is with Bolshevism; remove the cause and you will not need to deport any more anarchists.

It is said that court decisions are the landmarks of our country. It was the false spirit of the famous Dred Scott decision which brought on the Civil War. It took a decision of the Supreme Court to permit a tax on incomes under the sixteenth amendment of the Constitution.

And, gentlemen, there are enough strong and courageous Americans to reverse the decisions of the Standard Oil and American Tobacco cases, holding combinations and monopolies guiltless under the antitrust laws.

Most of these aliens were attracted to our shores because they thought us a land where "all people are born free and equal," and it seems, gentlemen, that all we need to do is to lead these aliens by the hand and show them the light of a better day, when the rich man who steals a ton of coal is just as amenable to the laws of our land as the poor man who only steals a bucket of coal.

If you take the pains to examine each case, you will find a large majority were simple-minded Russian folks who read of the freedom accorded in this country and left autocratic Russia for the land of the "free and the home of the brave," and only became anarchists when they found conditions as I attempted to describe them. I say I don't know their beliefs, for we examined only a few.

Our Constitution was established—in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity.

But, gentlemen, we can not maintain this Constitution unless both the red flag and the profiteers' black flag are destroyed. Do not look for a state of "equal rights to all and special privileges to none" so long as you permit the steel companies and the coal companies and others dealing in the necessaries of life to receive special privileges and profiteer upon these great commodities. You criticize the Department of Justice. What can the Attorney General do if the courts fail to enforce the law we have and Congress fails to grant him authority to act? He has plenty of money, but what he needs is authority. I believe the time is at hand when the good people of this land will be reconciled to change the Constitution by having these judges appointed for a term of years instead of for life. A life appointment is entirely too long a time. It seems to me that if a young man would give from 10 to 15 years of his life in the administration of the law and then retire again to the people, it would be better not only for himself but the people as well.

But, gentlemen, your investigating committee will get nowhere unless they go to the source and fountainhead of each contract and ascertain the persons interested in each contract and all the facts surrounding the inception of each. These men who believe that they had a right to profiteer in time of peace will likely continue their nefarious acts of profiteering after the declaration of war, and there is no doubt but what hundreds of them have been made millionaires. Punish these rascals sailing under the profiteers' black flag if we hope to get rid of the anarchists sailing under the red flag. And unless relief is granted as against those who profiteer in our natural resources and our necessaries of life, we can continue our deportation without any relief from within.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, a little over two months ago—on October 17, 1919—the Senate passed a resolution, the last paragraph of which reads as follows:

The Attorney General is requested to advise and inform the Senate whether or not the Department of Justice has taken legal proceedings for the arrest and deportation of aliens who, it is alleged, have, within the United States, committed the acts aforesaid. And if not, why not; and if so, to what extent.

On November 14 the Attorney General, in the matter of our deportation laws, made reply as follows:

The administration of this law is entirely within the jurisdiction of the Department of Labor. However, under the existing conditions of our laws, it seemed to be the only means at my disposal of attacking the radical movement, and, as Congress had seen fit to refuse appropriation to the Department of Labor for its enforcement, I have cooperated with the immigration officials to the fullest extent. My appropriation became available July 19, 1919.

Think of the Department of Justice being between two great fires—one the legislative branch failing to enact laws giving the Attorney General power to deal with this class of citizens and criticizing him because he failed to do certain things, and on the other hand the judiciary holding that a reasonable restraint under the Sherman antitrust law by the profiteer in our natural resources is permissible. Can history beat this inconsistency?

What I proposed to do in committee was to grant the Attorney General power not only to make these investigations of our undesirable population but to make it his duty to file this information with the Secretary of Labor and prosecute the same before the Secretary of Labor to a conclusion.

I remember while I was special counsel of the Department of Justice in the prosecution of trusts that we had no law which would permit the issuance of a warrant upon the filing of an affidavit for the purpose of procuring criminal evidence. Gentlemen, it is a wonder that our Government continues to function with the legislative and the judicial branch failing to properly support the executive branch during this crisis of our Government—the legislative by refusing to grant proper legislation, and the judiciary by making the laws noneffective.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I yield one more minute to the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELTY. I am sorry I can not yield to my good friends, because my time is so short. Another matter that I want to call to the attention of Congress is the matter of registering all aliens during their alienage. I know that many consider this burdensome to the alien. But how are we going to keep track of these aliens who are plotting against our Government? Objections to registration have been made, because this is one reason most of these aliens escape from Europe.

But as it is many of these aliens coming to our shores—especially those from Russia, who are under the impression that freedom means no government—when they find that we are more governed than any other country, they rebel, and instead of becoming interested in our Government they turn against it. The trouble with our alien population is not so much with them as a failure on our part to interest ourselves in them sufficiently to point the way. No alien who wants to become an American citizen will object to registration if that will help preserve these institutions which attracted him to our shores, while the alien who has no interest in our form of Government, or who wants to overthrow it, should be compelled to register, so that we know where he is, and so that he knows that our Government knows his hiding place.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the committee, these are serious times, requiring strong and courageous hearts, and I have no doubt that we will do the business at hand in the characteristic American fashion. The red flag and the black flag may start something, but, God knows, if we can establish a spirit of cooperation and brotherhood between capital and labor the red, white, and blue will finish the job. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent Mr. SIEGEL was given leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RAKER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BOX].

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I shall support this bill heartily. I regret that in the wisdom of the committee it was not seen proper to go further and present a more comprehensive and effective measure. I had the pleasure of introducing a bill covering some of the ground covered by this bill in the amendment of section 1 of the act of December 16, 1918, but I have concluded that one of the chief difficulties growing out of the present situation is administrative. I do not mean by that remark to criticize. I have noticed with pleasure that generally the Immigration Committee is disposed to deal with questions from a nonpartisan standpoint, and I hope there will be Americanism enough in the committee and the House to avoid partisanship in dealing with questions so vital to the life of the Nation.

Our deportation proceedings are now almost exclusively in the hands of the Department of Labor. That department is not required to issue a warrant for the arrest of an alleged anarchist alien, even when it is called for by the Department of Justice. The law should be amended so as to require that. The Department of Justice is not now charged with the duty to represent the Government upon deportation proceedings, nor is any provision made for it. I think the law should be amended so that whatever deportation proceedings in dealing with anarchists are had in that department should be looked after in the interest of the Government of the United States by some prosecuting representative of the Department of Justice. My information is that under the present system ex parte proceedings are had, that anyone can appear in behalf of the proposed deportee, file additional evidence in the shape of ex parte affidavits, and get a rehearing or reopening of the case and even a change of the order in an informal, irregular proceeding in private. I think the law in itself is lame and should be strengthened in the light of the experience we have had in enforcing it.

The provision that permits an alien who came into the United States surreptitiously or in any manner entered the country unlawfully to plead that he has been here three or five years, and thus defeat deportation proceedings in certain cases, should be eliminated. The present law that permits anarchistic aliens to be released on bail or recognizance should be amended so that can not be done. If it is regarded an abuse now, it ought to be made perfectly clear that it is not to be permitted. None of these desperate and dangerous characters should be released for months on bond.

There is no distinction now as between the deportation proceedings in cases of anarchist aliens and those who are liable to deportation on other grounds—no distinction between the proceedings deporting one who is liable to become a public charge or in some other way has gotten into the United States unlawfully, but who is not an anarchist, and one who is an anarchist. Nothing in the law requires the department to deal specially with the cases of anarchists, with a view to expediting them. There should be a declaration of legislative purpose that proceedings to deport anarchists shall be expedited.

While I shall support this bill for the good it contains, I believe the committee should and will take up these questions of administration and regulation, and make the law more effective than it has been. I have assurance that the committee will deal with the matter in a nonpartisan spirit.

I would offer some of the provisions of the bill which I introduced as amendments to this bill but for the doubt whether they would be germane. They are now before the committee for consideration, with assurance that they will be considered. I think it is our duty now to expedite the passage of this measure, which will be helpful as far as it goes. I am sure that we will all have the hearty cooperation of the members of this House in expelling from our shores those who are dangerous to everything Americans cherish. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time, and I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 137) authorizing the Secretary of War to construct a pontoon bridge across the Chattahoochee River, at West Point, Ga., and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8778) to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. WILLIAMS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN ANARCHISTS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, most of the things I wanted to say have been said by those more familiar with the facts than I. Fortunately the State from which I come has a comparatively small population of aliens. We have, however, an element in our community which is being agitated and incited to crime by this organization of I. W. W. I am as sure as I am living that many citizens lost their lives recently in my State, and many negroes are now under sentence to be executed, the victims of the agitators from outside of the borders of the State.

I have wanted to see a bill come out of the Committee on the Judiciary and enacted into law that will stop these agitators. It strikes me that it is little less than a crime to enact laws to punish crime when we permit people to incite these weaker people to commit crime. The greater guilt rests on the agitator and instigator of the crime.

I know that it is foreign to this bill, but I want to drop this thought as we go along. A question was asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] if we had the power to enact legislation that would deport the alien that had been naturalized. It strikes me—and I want the House and the committee to think of it; I suggested it to the Committee on the Judiciary—that we might enact into law a provision that in case of an alien who shall obtain naturalization and afterwards is guilty of certain offenses, such as are defined in this proposed act; for instance, the law might say that his act of procuring naturalization was a fraud, that he never in good faith accepted citizenship, and therefore from the beginning the act of naturalization was an act of fraud, and we might then cancel his certificate of naturalization and deport the alien.

I have in mind the case of the man recently denied a seat in this House on the ground that he had committed an act amounting almost to treason, and who has been chosen by his district to come here again—that the Secretary of Labor might find under a proper law that the obligation imposed by his naturalization was never accepted by him in good faith, that when he accepted citizenship in this country he did so with a mental reservation that amounted to a fraud on the court, and therefore his naturalization was never valid, that it was a fraud from the beginning, and void, and he would be subject to deportation.

There is no doubt in my mind this could be done. There is no inalienable right possessed by a foreigner to enter this country, reside here, and be naturalized. It is a mere privilege this country extends to him. It can do so on whatever terms and conditions it deems necessary, or it can deny that privilege altogether.

It can then, without doubt, impose all conditions it deems wise. It can then revoke this privilege in the manner suggested and obviate at the same time all question of a dual citizenship or divided allegiance.

I shall introduce a bill to accomplish that end.

I have never had a great deal of sympathy for the doctrine that this country shall be the haven of refuge for the oppressed of all of the peoples of the earth, provided those oppressed happen to be criminals. I am perfectly willing to support an act that will exclude further immigration for a long time. I am willing that this country and its resources and opportunities shall be preserved for us and our children who come after us. I am unwilling to open the doors of the country to that great horde of aliens who have imbibed sentiments that make it impossible for them to accept in good faith and live up to the teachings of our country. [Applause.]

The thing that strikes me as the most absurd thing of all is that the very people who are seeking to overthrow our Government, appealing to the prejudices and ignorance of all classes of our foreign people, whenever they find themselves in the toils of the law, at once invoke the provisions in that Constitution that they seek by force and violence to overthrow. I notice in this little publication of the I. W. W., called "Drops of Blood," that among the very first appeals it makes is to invoke the principles of the Declaration of Independence and the provisions of the Constitution. It teaches that the Constitution is denying to the people their rights, and, therefore, that the Constitution should be destroyed. Then it appeals to the guaranties contained in the Constitution. In one breath they appeal to the Constitution and its guaranties, and in the next they seek to destroy the Constitution.

I do not think we should be too tender in dealing with these people. If there is any doubt about whether they are likely to be good American citizens, then I think we should resolve the doubt in favor of America and against them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

By unanimous consent Mr. CARAWAY was granted leave to extend his remarks.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, this measure does not go far enough. The weakness of our laws is to accept aliens, relying upon precept and example to assimilate them into loyal citizenship, failing to protect them from seditious influence. Before accepting aliens subject them to a rigid physical and mental test of examination, when, if satisfactory, admit them and instantly begin compulsory education, teaching them their duties to this Government and the advantages this Government affords to them in protecting their lives and earnings. Thus you gain a valued citizen who learns to love and support the Constitution.

You will find it cheaper and safer for our Nation to educate those aliens, supplying their minds with right thought, than to permit them to absorb misinformation. If you accept them, educate and protect them.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I heartily indorse the purposes and provisions of this bill. My only objection is that such legislation has been too long delayed. Our laws for the exclusion and deportation of aliens have been wholly inefficient. Since the establishment of this Government we have been exceedingly liberal in the admission of foreigners, and it is now seen by all Americans that advantage has been taken of this privilege and that it is working great injury to America and its institutions. We never fully realized the dangers incident to such a policy until during the recent war, when we awoke to the fact that there were millions within our own borders who were giving aid and comfort to the enemy, or were sympathetic with the enemy, and ready and anxious to aid it at every opportunity. Had it not been for the speedy and effective manner in which the Government dealt with that situation this menace would have proven troublesome indeed.

However, even in peace times, there have been innumerable evidences of the evil results of an entirely too liberal policy. I shall mention but a few instances. Emma Goldman emigrated from Russia to this country nearly 34 years ago, since which time she has worked but 18 months, having spent practically all of her time in denouncing the United States Government, teaching anarchy and disrespect of authority, and openly advocating violence and obstruction of the laws; in fact, she defiantly boasts that she is not only an anarchist and a revolutionist but also a destructionist. During the recent investigation of the deportation case against her it clearly developed that she was the mentor of Czolgosz, who assassinated President McKinley. And yet, under the existing laws, the Government was barely able to make out a case of deportation against her.

Even on yesterday Victor Berger was reelected to the American Congress from one of the Milwaukee districts, although he stands convicted and sentenced to 20 years in the penitentiary for a violation of the sedition and espionage laws, and was only recently expelled from this House with but one dissenting vote—a German colleague—because of his disloyalty and unworthiness. Our lax immigration laws have permitted such a situation. It is an outrage that there exists in this country a constituency that desires to be represented by such a man. I sincerely trust that this House will not again dignify Berger with the privilege of a long-drawn-out contest, or any contest, for that matter. We already know that he is unfit to sit with us, and should immediately expel him by resolution. Those who voted for him are not worthy to be represented, and those who voted against him do not want to be misrepresented by him. When his term in the penitentiary expires, he should be denaturalized and deported.

I am proud of the fact that I have the honor to represent a district in which there are but few aliens, and, so far as I am aware, no anarchists, Bolshevists, I. W. W.'s, or other similar radicals. We are not afflicted with that sort of cattle. My constituents are almost altogether of pioneer American stock—pure Anglo-Saxon—but for that very reason they are vitally interested in this problem, interested because they have at heart the preservation of our Government and the perpetuity of its institutions. They have no patience whatever with the Victor Bergers, the Emma Goldmans, the Alexander Berkmans, or the W. Z. Fosters. They do not see any reason whatever why we should temporize with anarchy, bolshevism, I. W. W'ism, communism, syndicalism, or any other radicalism. As generous in spirit and as kind-hearted as they are, they do not think there is any room anywhere within the broad confines of our country for any set of men imbued with such pernicious and un-American doctrines. I am in thorough accord with their views.

The Manufacturers' Record, published at Baltimore, recently had an editorial in part as follows:

The time may come when the Anglo-Saxonism of the South will be the saving factor in curbing the bolshevistic agitators of aliens and those dominated by aliens throughout much of the North and West. Those who have for years bemoaned the fact that the South did not share fairly in the great inrush of foreign population may yet rejoice that in the providence of God this section does not have that problem to the same extent as the West and the North must endure.

Jesse R. Grant, son of Gen. U. S. Grant, wrote to the Manufacturers' Record, stating that he had several times heard his father express the same sentiments 40 years ago and more. Mr. Grant further stated:

The sentiments which he (Gen. Grant) expressed in words almost identical with yours in your editorial were brought out in this way: I asked him if he did not believe some plan should be devised to direct a portion of the large immigration to the Southern States. He said that immigration was not an unmixed blessing to our country and he was well pleased to see at least one section remain wholly American, and then came the remarks conveying the thoughts you so well expressed.

However, I can conceive of no objection which any genuine American could have to the provisions of this bill. The radicals against whom it is directed would certainly be worth nothing to the United States. They could not possibly benefit our country in any manner, and would not if they could. They have forfeited every consideration from a humanitarian standpoint. They are not entitled to admission and there is no reason in the world why we should want them in our midst.

We are not unmindful of the fact that we are descended from immigrants; nor do we forget the fact that we have been in many respects greatly enriched by immigrants of the better class and that we now have in our midst many foreign-born citizens of excellent character and high ideals, fully appreciative of our institutions, and making useful, patriotic citizens; but this legislation and my remarks are not directed at and will not affect them or their kind. However, conditions have very materially changed. The immigration problem has become acute, requiring immediate and effective action because of three facts, to wit:

First. The large increase in immigration to this country;

Second. The rapid and radical change in the source and character of immigrants; and Third. The fact that a very large percentage of the immigrants congregate and remain in the large cities.

During the first half century of our national existence practically all of our immigration came from Great Britain. During the second half century a very large bulk of the immigration to this country came from Great Britain and Germany, those from Great Britain considerably predominating. In other words, for the first half century our immigrants were almost altogether Anglo-Saxon and during the next half century the overwhelming majority of them were Anglo-Saxon and Teutonic. However, since then there has been a rapid shifting of the principal sources of our immigration from northern and western Europe, chiefly Protestant, which furnished 71 per cent of the immigrants in 1882 and only 21 per cent in 1902, to southern and eastern Europe, chiefly Catholic and illiterate, which furnished 11 per cent of the total in 1882 and 75 per cent in 1902. The number of immigrants entering this country in 1914 were 1,218,480, 85 per cent of whom were from southern and eastern Europe.

Our Government began keeping a record of the aliens entering this country in 1820, since which year 33,200,103 aliens are recorded as having entered this country. Of this number, 8,205,675 came from Great Britain, 5,494,539 from Germany, 4,100,740 from Italy, 3,311,400 from Russia, 2,134,414 from the Scandinavian countries, leaving a balance of 5,884,887 who came from other countries. The overwhelming majority of those who came from Italy, Russia, Austria-Hungary, and other countries in the southern and eastern part of Europe came since the year 1900.

The annual influx of immigrants to this country has risen from an average of 14,000 per annum from 1820–1830 to a yearly average of 281,000 during the period of 1870–1880 and to an annual average of nearly 880,000 for 1901–1910; but the average accession was even greater during the first four years of the present decade, for in 1911–1914 it reached 1,033,283 annually. The Federal census of 1910 disclosed the fact that there were 13,515,086 aliens residing in this country, of which only 3,500,000 had become naturalized citizens. Although a large number of aliens returned to Europe during the World War and immigration to this country during that period was also greatly reduced, yet it is estimated that there are now about 17,000,000 aliens residing in this country, of which at least 5,000,000 can not speak the English language. Two hundred thousand of those aliens who were drafted for United States military service could not speak or understand the English language. I saw one company in the United States Army containing members born in 28 foreign countries, none of whom could speak or understand the English language when inducted into service. The officers were confronted with the problem of either learning 28 languages and repeating each command in as many tongues or of teaching all of them the commands in English. It is needless to state that they pursued the latter course, but by the time they succeeded the war was over. Seventy-two per cent of this large alien population reside in our big cities, and a large percentage of the remainder reside in the great industrial centers. A majority of the population of many cities, congressional districts, and other political subdivisions are foreign born. Eighty per cent of those residing in Gary, Ind., are foreign born, and 69 distinct languages are spoken in that city. One-half of all of Manhattan are foreign born. There are more Italians in New York City than in any other city in the world with the exception of Naples. There are more Germans in New York City than in any other city in the world except Berlin. There are fifteen times as many Jews (largely Russian) residing in the city of New York as there are in Jerusalem. Newspapers are published in this country in 150 different languages and having an aggregate circulation of 10,000,000 copies, not to mention hundreds of foreign-published papers circulated in this country. There are innumerable schools in this country where the English language is never spoken.

It is clearly seen that the immigration to our country is of such volume and character that this alien population is not becoming assimilated as was formerly the case. Our country is becoming alienized instead of this polyglot foreign population becoming Americanized. The vast majority of these aliens are of the type that do not understand or appreciate our institutions. Instead of scattering over the country, engaging in agricultural and other domestic pursuits, they congregate in their own communities and seem to have no ambition to become Americanized or assimilated. These alien centers of population are hotbeds of radicalism and constitute a real menace. It is among this class that the radical propagandist finds his most fertile field. It is important that we prevent this element from being augmented by the hordes which will be fleeing from impoverished Europe, even more than ever before, unless we take prompt and effective steps to prevent it. If we are to be a "national melting pot," we should be a real melting pot, and not merely a receptacle for dross. We neither need nor want any material which will not melt into the national form of Americanism. Furthermore, we do not wish to assimilate that class of aliens which has been coming during the last decade. To do so would give us a bad—perhaps incurable—case of national indigestion.

Prior to 1882 immigration to this country was practically unregulated. Since that time, until within the past two years, agitation and legislation has been largely directed against the Chinese and Japanese. I do not hold any brief for these races, and can not speak from personal observation of conditions on the Pacific coast, but there are some facts in this connection worthy of note. During the century for which records of our immigration are available, only 2.4 per cent of the total came from all of Asia. According to the census of 1910, there were then only 56,756 Chinese in this country, which was less than half the number in this country according to the census of 1890, since which date there has been a rapid decrease in the Chinese population. In fact, there are fewer Chinese in this country than there were 50 years ago. According to the census of 1910, there were only 67,744 Japanese in the United States. A large percentage of these are farm and truck laborers in the Pacific Coast States. In other words, we are now confronted with a "red peril" rather than a "yellow peril."

The chief argument in favor of the admission of aliens is that it will provide "cheap labor," which is needed at many of the industrial centers of our Nation. In the first place, this so-called "cheap labor" generally means "cheap" citizenship. We need quality rather than quantity. Our industries are not so important that they should be expanded at the expense of citizenship or to the detriment of our American institutions. Furthermore, we have had recent concrete evidences of the fact that foreigners, even though fresh from the pauper wages prevalent in certain sections of Europe, are among the first to demand exorbitant wages, and are the readiest to resort to violence or any other unlawful tactics in an effort to attain their ends. In fact, as inconceivable as it is, and as detrimental as it will ultimately be to the usefulness and prosperity of the organizations themselves, these radical foreigners have gained control of many of the most important labor organizations, with the result that a comparatively few radicals are endeavoring, in the name of labor, to shape the policies of this Government—to dictate to the remaining 110,000,000 American citizens..

In my humble opinion, we are badly in need of other legislation, which I sincerely hope may soon be reported out by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and the Judiciary Committee, for the restriction of immigration and naturalization, for the deportation of undesirables, and for the general punishment and extermination of radicalism, sedition, and disloyalty.

I believe that the Department of Justice has been faithfully endeavoring to meet the situation, but the Attorney General has several times advised Congress of the urgent and immediate need of additional laws. In a recent communication to the Senate Attorney General Palmer vividly disclosed the magnitude of the organized activities of those seeking to destroy our Government and forcibly urged the enactment of special laws to effectively combat them. He called attention to the fact that the espionage act and the trading-with-the-enemy act, under which they have in part been held in check, were essentially war measures, and he further advises:

(1) Those who have attempted to bring about the forcible overthrow of the Government of the United States have committed no crime, unless their acts amount to treason, rebellion, or seditious conspiracy.
(2) The preaching of anarchy and sedition is not a crime under the general criminal statutes of the United States.
(3) Advising the defiance of law is not a crime under the general criminal laws whether the same be done by printing and circulating literature or by the spoken word.
(4) Nor is the advising and openly advocating the unlawful obstruction of industry and the unlawful and violent destruction of property a crime under the United States general statutes.

Under the existing laws it is very difficult, and generally impossible, to obtain the deportation or conviction of these radicals, even when the evidence is procured and their arrest effected.

We should enact such laws and take such steps as may be necessary to effectively rid this country of the curse of anarchy, bolshevism, I. W. W'ism, sovietism, sabotage, sedition, treason, and all similar radicalisms, by whatever name or in whatever form it rears its sinister head.

The red serpents of radicalism have been warmed into life in the breast of this Republic until now, grown stronger and bolder and more vicious, they would strike deep their poisonous fangs into the very heart of our Nation.

The "red" movement is one of criminals, moral perverts, social bigots, and false idealists, not seeking liberty or any other worthy end, but avowedly seeking the destruction of all religion and belief in God, the destruction of government and law, the destruction of the sacred ties of marriage and home, the destruction of ownership in property, and nearly all the other evils their devilish cunning can devise or their hellish practices can produce.

Lenin himself, at the third soviet conference, candidly made the statement:

Among 100 so-called Bolshevikis there is 1 real Bolshevik, 39 criminals, and 60 fools.

The night before he left New York for Russia, addressing a group of his East Side followers gathered together in a German hall in a secret meeting, but which was attended by a Secret Service man of the United States Government, Trotzki said:

I want you men to remain here and organize and keep on organizing until you destroy this dirty and rotten Government of the United States, while I return to Russia, bring on a revolution there, and stop Russia's war against Germany.

His followers have certainly been obeying his injunction. Millions of aliens, who know not our language or our civilization, are being mobilized under radical leaders of the Trotzki-Foster type to carry out Trotzki's command to overthrow this Government, and the worst feature about it is that a large number of American citizens, either unaware of the purpose of such radical leaders or misled by the spirit of unrest, are unwittingly permitting themselves to be used by these radical leaders.

It is stated on reliable authority that just before or about the time Lenin and Trotzki came into power in Russia there went from the headquarters of the I. W. W. in Chicago, at 1000 Madison Street, a completely equipped outfit for printing and spreading bolshevistic ideas. Printing presses and all the machinery for printing in the Russian language were sent directly through Seattle to Russia. It is further stated that these were ordered by the executive committee of the I. W. W., the moving body of the organization which makes all policies and decides all actions.

A pamphlet, recently widely distributed in Washington and elsewhere, issued by the American Anarchist Federated Commune Soviets, said:

The press, church, and Government, and Constitution can go straight to hell. Down with all constitutions, governments, capitalization, churches, and synagogues! Long live anarchism!

In a manifesto published by the "Federation of Unions of Russian Workers of the United States and Canada" for distribution throughout the United States and captured by the Government in a recent raid appeared the following:

The destruction of the state means the principal work in the formation of the new society. * * * Down with the state! Long live anarchy!
What must we do, the vanguard of the proletariat? We must consciously hasten the elementary movement of the struggle of the working class; we must convert small strikes into general ones and convert the latter into an armed revolt of the laboring masses against capital and the state.

There was found on the mutilated body of the anarchist who was killed in an attempt to blow up the residence of and assassinate Attorney General Palmer a pamphlet signed by "The Anarchist Fighters," which, among other things, contained the following:

The powers that be make no secret of their will to stop, here in America, the world-wide spread of revolution. * * * We accept your challenge. * * * We mean to speak for them the voice of dynamite through the mouth of guns.
There will have to be bloodshed; * * * there will have to be murder; we will kill because it is necessary; there will have to be destruction; we will destroy to rid the world of your tyrannical institutions. * * * Never hope that your cops and your hounds will ever succeed in ridding the country of the anarchistic germ that pulses in our veins. * * * Besides, you will never get all of us, and we multiply nowadays.
Long live social revolution! Down with tyranny!

The foregoing are merely typical examples of the character of literature being distributed.

The poison seeds are being sown throughout the land by the same influences that brought chaos to Russia and even to Mexico. Let us not minimize the situation. It is estimated that 90 per cent of the people in Russia are opposed to bolshevism, but the 10 per cent organized has subjugated and absolutely dominated the 90 per cent unorganized. We must meet that organization with an organization of every God-fearing, liberty-loving, patriotic American man and woman. We can save America from this menace, but we can not do so by passively permitting the unhampered and insidious growth of the germ of revolution.

I think that we should enact a law providing, in substance, that no alien shall be admitted into this country unless he satisfies the representatives of this Government that he is coming for a peaceful and proper purpose and with the intention of becoming naturalized and Americanized, unless, of course, he comes on temporary business; and further providing that aliens shall only be admitted on passports, with the understanding that they are admitted on probation, and then registered, and annually during their alienage required to officially report their location, occupation, and perhaps other salient facts; and further providing that such aliens shall become naturalized within five years after their entry into this country or else that they shall be deported for that reason alone. Our naturalization laws should be made more rigid, so that if the alien can not stand a genuine test of citizenship he shall be deported.

I also hope that a bill will shortly be reported out providing for the immediate deportation of all of that class of aliens who are described in the bill under consideration. We should not stop until we get rid of the last one of these radicals. Furthermore, we should enact a law providing for the denaturalization and deportation of that class of aliens who have become naturalized and who are guilty of the offenses defined in the bill under consideration.

Unfortunately, there are even some American-born citizens in our midst who have embraced the doctrines of anarchy, bolshevism, and similar isms, and we should enact laws to the end that all such shall be forthwith prosecuted and executed or imprisoned. They are entitled to even less consideration than the foreign born. Some of them are highly intellectual, and some even hold chairs in some of our universities and colleges, exerting a sinister and pernicious influence over the youth of the land.

There is still another class of labor and political leaders who do not really believe in such doctrines, but, in order to curry favor with or obtain the support of these radicals, encourage and embolden them by indulging or countenancing utterances of a more or less seditious nature. Many of the unwarranted criticisms of the Government and public officials come under this category.

In the aforesaid report Attorney General Palmer stated that there are 222 radical newspapers published in foreign languages and 105 radical newspapers published in the English language in this country; 66 of the number openly advocate armed revolution in America. In addition, 144 radical newspapers published in foreign countries are received and distributed to subscribers here. It is interesting to note that the I. W. W. now circulates 13 papers printed in the English language and 19 papers printed in foreign languages. This enumeration of radical newspapers does not include the numerous radical books, pamphlets, and other publications which have a wide circulation. Attorney General Palmer states that "these newspapers and publications more than any other one thing are responsible for the spread of the bolshevik, revolutionary, and extreme radical doctrines in this country." The character of many of the articles in these publications being distributed broadcast, and even through the mails, is startling in the extreme, and yet neither the publication, the distribution, nor the mailing of same can be effectively prevented under our existing laws. Such revolutionary propaganda must be stopped at all hazards. No publication should be permitted to be published, mailed, or distributed which advocates the use of force or violence, either to overthrow the Government or to effect a change in its Constitution or laws, or to resist the authority of constituted government, or which advises the defiance of law, the violent destruction of property, or the unlawful obstruction of industry; and any person who proclaims, teaches, or advocates any such doctrines should be severely dealt with. We need laws to stop the agitators and propagandists, and not merely laws to punish the illiterates whom the cunning leaders incite and instigate to commit the crimes.

Although many of the radical newspapers and publications heretofore mentioned are printed in English, yet a large majority of them are printed in various foreign languages. One of the greatest difficulties confronting our Government is the question of dealing with this bolshevistic foreign-language propaganda. The people of the United States are an English-speaking people, and there is no good reason why propaganda literature in foreign tongues should be tolerated. It ought to be outlawed. If necessary, Congress will even be justified in prohibiting the publication or distribution of any periodical, newspaper, or pamphlet in a foreign language, or, at least, under only the strictest regulations. Congress could no doubt enact a law which would stop this propaganda and at the same time avoid any infringement upon the constitutional limitation against freedom of speech and freedom of the press. There should be no mawkish hairsplitting over alleged infringement of liberty when the country's enemies are employing liberty's weapons for the assassination of liberty. The Constitution does not guarantee slanderous sedition in the guise of free speech, nor libelous treason in the guise of a free press, nor a revolutionary mob in the guise of a free assembly. In guaranteeing free speech and free press, the founders of this Republic certainly never had in mind immunity or toleration for seditious propaganda. We may likewise rest assured that they did not contemplate the creation and preservation of a medium for the easy dissemination of anarchistic doctrines in Russian or German or any other alien language. It likewise goes without saying that the dissemination of such pernicious propaganda in our own language should be stopped.

Some States have enacted a law providing in substance that foreign languages shall not be employed in giving instruction on any subject to pupils below the ninth grade; that foreign languages may be employed in the ninth and higher grades in so far as the teaching of such languages may be concerned, but may not be used as a medium of instruction in any other subject, and the courts have held such laws to be constitutional. It would be well for similar laws to be enacted in all States where the local conditions make it necessary.

My belief is that, if they are unwilling to become Americanized and learn our language, they should keep out. They are not compelled to come. If they do not like our country, they can leave. If they insist on remaining, they must live as we live. If they are not willing to become one of us, they are not entitled to live under the Stars and Stripes and enjoy the blessings of our institutions. Ours is the greatest and best Government in all the world and in all history, and we want none of those aliens who have neither sense nor principle enough to appreciate it.

In conclusion, I repeat that I think we should promptly pass this bill, and that it should then be rigidly enforced. We should then enact drastic legislation for dealing with this class of aliens who are already in our midst. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to heartily support this bill. The Government has too long delayed to provide adequate legislation to rid itself of the miserable class of vicious, designing, and dangerous characters against whom this deportation measure is directed. It is high time we proceed to enact necessary and effective laws to protect our country against the anarchistic and other similar classes, call them what you will, who seek to undermine American institutions and plot for the overthrow of this Government.

The present laws fall short of reaching many of those aliens who, with evil and misdirected minds, engage in crafty schemes and base conspiracies to sow seeds of discontent, promote national hatred, commit deeds of violence working for destruction of life and property. Their hope and purpose is to stir their bad or ignorant and blind followers to acts of revolution. With such miscreants no self-respecting, law-abiding citizen can have any sympathy. Duty demands we cast them from our midst. [Applause.]

The disclosures made through investigations by both our Committee on Immigration and the Department of Justice show how widespread is this menace to America.

Enough has been related on this floor to-day to prove the necessity for this bill. Mention was made of the vile and inflammatory literature teeming with revolutionary ideas and denunciation of government. I, too, have seen much of it. I know its evil influence on the weak and the unthinking. The bill does not go far enough to stop it altogether, but to some extent, however, it will meet the situation.

I congratulate the distinguished chairman of the Immigration Committee [Mr. JOHNSON] on the clear conception he has of the situation. He has with clearness shown how very fine and subtle are the lines of division between the various isms that make up the menacing factors who commit the acts referred to in this bill. The committee might have gone further to cover cases of naturalized citizens who commit acts which this measure proscribes. Is not a naturalized citizen who commits the things for which the alien under this bill is to be punished or deported the worse offender of the two? He assumed citizenship, swore allegiance to our Government, swore to uphold our Constitution, and so he is the greater offender. If proven guilty, then, after a fair, full, and impartial hearing, his naturalization ought to be revoked. He is unworthy of that precious boon our law-abiding naturalized citizens so highly prize, American citizenship.

It was suggested during the debate that where a naturalized citizen commits the overt acts mentioned in the bill the court, in revoking his citizenship, might find that when the citizenship was first assumed the applicant was guilty of fraud. Perhaps it would not be necessary to go that length if Congress in such cases provided in the bill for an alien's deportation and the revocation of naturalization after a fair, full, and impartial trial. However, that problem is not before us, though my colleague from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] told us he expects the Committee on the Judiciary to report out a bill on that subject.

This, however, may be taken as an axiom, that every nation possesses the inherent right to protect itself against acts which menace its existence and amply provide and exercise power to maintain its stability and preserve its institutions. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that any additional law is necessary to deport these undesirable aliens from this country, but some of the officials of this Government, especially in the Department of Labor, seem to think so, and as long as there is any doubt in the mind of anyone connected with the Government I am in favor of this bill or any other that will take these undesirable characters out of the United States. Not only am I in favor of deporting these aliens who are endeavoring to spread the seeds of discord and break down the Constitution and undermine and overthrow the Government, but I think a law ought to be passed through this Congress applying the same doctrine to the native-born American citizen who is doing that same thing. The man who preaches that sort of doctrine either ought to be shipped or shot. Our Government is here for the protection of all the people, and whenever any man, whether he be a foreigner, ignorant or educated, or native-born scoundrel, preaches a doctrine to overthrow the Government, ruin, damnation, and sabotage, he ought to be handled with a shotgun or deported to some foreign land. [Applause.] Our native-born anarchists and Bolshevists do not owe allegiance to any other country, and you might do an injustice to Russia or Germany or Hungary or Austria by sending them over there. The thing to do is to handle them by a specific law from the Committee on the Judiciary.

No punishment is too severe for any person born in the United States who turns traitor to the Government, and by word, speech, publication, money, or acts endeavors to violently overthrow the Government.

The Constitution must stand. Patriotism and loyalty will forever protect our institutions.

Why, there are some men running for office, trying to get into the American Congress, who are just as much to blame as any Bolshevist in Russia. You had a man reelected to Congress from Milwaukee yesterday who in my judgment ought to be deported out of this country. [Applause.] Not a more dangerous character is within the borders of the United States—a man foreign born who is a naturalized citizen of this country preaching the doctrine of overthrowing the Government—and yet a colony of Germany over here in Milwaukee has the second time reelected that enemy of this Government to the Congress of the United States, and I trust that this body will have the patriotism and the respect for the American people and the Constitution to kick him out of the doors by the time he gets here, like they did before. [Applause.] We have one element that will take care of the Bolshevists, I. W. W., and anarchists, if we let them alone, and that is the great patriotic body of men who wore the American uniform of the Army and Navy in the late war against Germany. Those boys will stand against all of these miserable creatures who are endeavoring to overthrow this Government. The only trouble is those boys sometimes want to act through the method of violence, and we must have orderly and legal procedure. I do not believe in lynching these fellows. I believe in having them handled by the law, and whenever the Department of Labor says they can not get rid of them and calls on the Congress for additional law we must give it to them, and if the department does not enforce the law, either that or any other office, I say let us clean those offices out from top to bottom and put Americans there who will do it. [Applause.] This thing of having talk that some of these departments are lousy with employees in sympathy with Bolshevism and the I. W. W. ought to be looked into by this Congress. There is no mistake about it; there is no use to fool yourselves. We all know that every newspaper in this country is carrying news every day that alien anarchists and Bolshevists are allowed to stay in this country plotting against our Government. Let us rush through this law and clear our country of this grave menace. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. QUIN. I thank you, gentlemen.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have the honor to represent a district that has perhaps fewer aliens, a district that is more genuinely Anglo-Saxon, than any other district in the Union. We have no Bolshevists or anarchists in east Tennessee, thank God, and if we should discover one he would last about as long as the proverbial snowball in the inferno. I am thoroughly in sympathy with this measure, and I think it is one of the most vital and important that has been presented for the consideration of this Congress. We can not afford to temporize or equivocate with radicalism. There is room in the American atmosphere for but one flag—Old Glory. Any man that raises any other emblem or that preaches any other doctrine except the good old American gospel does not deserve to live beneath the Stars and Stripes and enjoy the blessings and opportunities of our great country. We have too long been the dumping ground and melting pot for the nations of the earth. Our hospitality has been imposed on by an ungrateful foreign element. I favor deporting from our shores immediately and with as little ceremony as possible these contemptible scoundrels who advocate violence against organized government, life, or property. Toleration is absurd. There can be no reason or excuse for permitting them longer to go about the country sowing seeds of discord and discontent and preaching revolution and anarchy. And when these advocates of violence shall have been deported I favor giving the rest of our alien population a reasonable time in which to embrace the spirit of our institutions, and if they do not show a disposition to assimilate with us I favor booting them out of the country. [Applause.] The principle that "a dog that will bite the hand that feeds it does not deserve to live" is not inappropriate to those foreigners who have sought our country as a haven of refuge and now would convert it into a land of chaos. The people of this country are expecting us, yea, they are demanding us, to pass legislation drastic enough to forever rid the United States of this dastardly class. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I thank you.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE]. First, I desire to ask how much time remains on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will yield five minutes, if that will be satisfactory. Several gentlemen have said that they would like to speak, but that they could get along with extensions, and I will undertake to close on this side in five minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. At this time I would like to ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a similar request.

Mr. VAILE. While these requests are being made I would like to make the same request.

Mr. LANGLEY. I desire to make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to these requests? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. While this is not to be taken out of the time of the gentleman from Washington, I did not get the proposition which the gentleman made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We will endeavor to close on this side with the remarks of the gentleman of the committee [Mr. VAILE]. And a little later I shall endeavor to secure permission that all Members of the House have three calendar days in which to extend their remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand how much time the gentleman yielded?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as the chairman of the committee has stated, this bill is only an incident, although it is a very important incident, of the work of this committee and the work which will be the work of the House in reference to immigration and naturalization. This bill merely purports to fix more definitely what you might call the deportable status of certain aliens who are now here. Many of us are in favor of some such amendment as that suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELTY], to put this procedure in the Department of Justice instead of in the Department of Labor, but it was thought we could accomplish the purpose better if we got the permission of Congress to consider a whole new procedure for deportation cases, and if we should confine our attention in this bill more clearly to specifying what characteristics, what associations, what qualities, should make an alien liable to deportation. We have endeavored to do that, and I want to say in a sense this bill is offered with an apology, not, if you please, any apology on the part of the committee; not, if you please, any apology on the part of the House of Representatives; but it is offered with an apology for a department of the Government of the United States.

The reason it is offered is because the Department of Labor has ruled that membership in such organizations as the I. W. W., specifying that particular organization, does not render the alien liable to deportation, because the constitution of the I. W. W. does not, according to that department, specifically advocate the various things denounced in the present law. We think it does. The Department of Justice thinks it does, and it has been so held by many courts. We think that the preamble quoted in the opinion of Judge Wolverton in the case of the United States v. Swelgin (254 Fed., 884), found on page 12 of the report—

> Between these two classes (the working class and the employing class) a struggle must go on until the workers of the world, organized as a class, take possession of the earth and the machinery of production and abolish the wage system—constitutes them enemies of this Government. We think that the pledge which a member of the I. W. W. signs, and which is on his pledge card, constitutes such a man an enemy of this Government, when it says:

> The working class and the employing class have nothing in common—
>
> And—
> Labor is entitled to all it produces.

Those are declarations that in a government intended by its framers to be for all of us, based on the proposition that all men are created equal, there are some classes which are not equal to others; that there is one class, a so-called working class, here, which is entitled to run the Government and control the country, and I want to say to its credit that the real working class—and by that I mean the class that really works—is willing that the Government should be run by and for all of us.

Now, these principles of the I. W. W. are not, perhaps, all expressed in its constitution. They are expressed in its literature most abundantly, as the chairman of the committee has shown and as is shown in this report. They are expressed in the declarations of its principal spokesmen and pamphleteers and in its official organs, when they publish pamphlets containing, for instance, such language as this:

The I. W. W. opposes the institution of the State. It holds that State or governmental control of industry would merely introduce a different form of slavery. Government implies governors and governed, a ruling and subject class. No man is great enough or good enough to rule another.

The I. W. W. is creating its own ideas of morality and ethical conduct, as opposed to the current conceptions of what constitutes right and wrong.

Toward the existence of Government the I. W. W. is openly hostile.

It is antipatriotic.

The kernel of evil lies in the very existence of the State, and violence is an economic factor.

Those things, published under the authority and printed by the press of this organization——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. VAILE. May I have three minutes more?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. VAILE. Those things stamp the character of this organization absolutely beyond mistake.

The chairman of this committee has spent 12 years of his life in fighting this and similar organizations. He was preceded by that wise, able, constructive patriot, our much-lamented colleague, the Hon. John Burnett, of Alabama, and both of these gentlemen were confident that the present law was sufficient.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington has devoted the best years of his life to the cause of purging our country of dangerous foreign elements. The gentleman from Washington has closely followed the history of the I. W. W. from its organization, and has studied as well its predecessor organizations. Coming from a district where the I. W. W. has grown to its highest foul and rank growth, he recognized its poisonous character when it first appeared and has fought it, root and branch, night and day, and with every ounce of his strength and every dollar of his means. At heavy financial sacrifice to himself he conducted an anti-anarchist paper in Washington, which was published and circulated at a price which made its circulation almost a gratuity.

My friend thought, as John Burnett thought, that by the act of 1918 if a man was a member of an anarchist society he was an anarchist, and if he was also an alien he was not entitled to come here, or, if here, to remain.

These patriots thought, as the whole of Congress thought, that if an alien was a member of an organization which "entertains a belief in, teaches, or advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law, or that entertains or teaches belief in or opposition to all organized government, or that advocates the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, or that advocates or teaches the unlawful destruction of property," we should not be compelled to extend to such a serpent the protection of those laws or of our Government.

Concededly the character of the organization must be proved, but Congress reckoned without taking into consideration the personal equation of the individual men who were to enforce that law. The order is committed to the "social general strike," which is thus defined in its official literature:

The profoundest conception of the general strike, the one pointing to a thorough change of the present system; a social revolution of the world; an entire new organization; a demolition of the entire old system of all governments.

Oh, no; a society which, instead of believing in the doctrine of equality proclaimed by our Declaration of Independence, declares that there are classes here which have nothing in common; a society which advocates "a demolition of the entire old system of all governments," is not, according to gentlemen in the Department of Labor, a society that entertains or teaches disbelief in or opposition to all organized government or one which advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States.

Because these words are not, forsooth, in its constitution, those who are members of the order which entertains and spreads them are immune from the laws they would destroy.

It is to reach these men that we have added the language, "aliens who write, circulate, distribute, print, publish, edit, issue, or display," or who cause these things to be done, or who are members of an organization that causes any of these things to be done, with respect to literature, and so forth, teaching these abominations. It is to reach that smooth and polished snake, the parlor Bolshevist, that we have added the provision about contribution of money. If any man or woman contributes, out of the means protected by our law, to the destruction of that law, he should be held guilty in at least as great a degree as the ignorant and penniless dupe.

As I say, Congress had reckoned without a knowledge of the personal idiosyncrasies of such a man as the late unlamented inspector of immigration at New York, Mr. Howe, who receives long and friendly letters from Emma Goldman, hoping that he is not being affected by the insidious poison of nationalism, and who congratulates seditious agitators upon their release. We had reckoned without the expectation that the Assistant Secretary of Labor would expressly and studiously avoid a "literal application of the law" solemnly introduced in that body of the national legislature which is nearest to the hearts of the great American people and deliberately passed by a Congress charged with its protection.

I myself have had some little knowledge at first hand of this organization and its predecessors. On the 4th of July, 1902, the anniversary of the Declaration of the Independence of the United States, I sat in a hall of the miners' union at Telluride, Colo. I sat in a meeting open to the public, of the Western Federation of Miners, where the speaker, one Father Haggerty, an excommunicated priest, I believe, used this language:

Do not be satisfied with 99 per cent of the products of your labor. Take it all. It belongs to you. The bank across the street, the holes that pock our beautiful mountains with the hideous marks of capitalistic industry, the railroads that come over the hills, belong to you. Take them, and take them now, before the governor can send in troops to prevent it.

Now, the Western Federation of Miners was the precursor of the I. W. W. Many honest workingmen belonged to it, but it was in the control of the anarchistic element; and that meeting was presided over by Vincent St. John, the president of the local union, who has later appeared as the author of many of these pamphlets spoken of in this report and the chief pamphleteer of the I. W. W. The president of the national organization was "Big Bill" Haywood, now one of the I. W. W. chiefs.

These principles may not all be detailed in the written constitution, to the satisfaction of Mr. Post and Mr. Howe, but they are written in the black hearts of those who fired on the American soldiers in Centralia, Wash., and they are spoken from the lips of every man who gets on a soap box in order to assail our laws, our uniform, and our flag. And, if there is any question now, the law must be plain enough so that it may be read even by him who runs from the performance of his duty. That is the reason we offer this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, the World War has brought to our attention a problem that has hitherto been overlooked or, until very recent years, comparatively neglected. The tides of immigration have brought to our shores millions of aliens who have made this country an abiding place, but they have not always become identified with the spirit of our institutions nor have they made efforts to become citizens of the Nation. Our commercial and industrial expansion was so rapid and our people so engrossed in immediate activities that we scarcely noted this influx of foreign population. During the first decade of this century more than 10,000,000 of aliens came to our shores. During three years of that period more people came than were in this country at the time of the Declaration of Independence. More than 3,000,000 of the present alien population can not speak our language, and more than twice as many can not read and write it. Recent events prove the necessity for some legislation at this time dealing with aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes, and I congratulate the committee upon reporting the measure under discussion. I am in hearty sympathy with its provisions and am glad for the opportunity of voting for same.

The security of the Government rests upon the collective rights of its people as guaranteed in the Constitution and the laws under it. Upon these fundamental rights the welfare and happiness of the American people are based. We do not hold that government is an end in itself, nor that it is perfect, but it is the means by which ordered progress is to be attained. The whole history of the world bears evidence to this fact.

If there are individuals or groups of individuals who deny the right of government, disregard the obligations to property, and hold themselves free to overthrow government by force or violence, there is but one answer to their contention, and that is they should be held accountable to the law, or, if aliens, should be promptly deported to the country from which they came.

The ideals of American Government are well defined in our Declaration of Independence and in the Constitution, which guarantees life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness under law to every citizen under the flag. This is no idle, fanciful dream, but is and has been a potent fact through all the years of our national development. Under such a representative Government as ours there is every opportunity for redress of grievances, for righting of wrongs, and supplanting injustice by justice through the people themselves. But these misguided anarchistic aliens would if they could tear down the structure that has been building for more than 140 years, and into which the very lifeblood of the Nation has been crystallized.

When we contemplate the heroic struggles that have taken place and the sacrifices that have been made in order to create what we believe is the most substantial free government on earth, we would be faithless to the past and recreant to our duty if we did not cast out "root and branch" every anarchist whose subversive and insidious doctrines eat like a canker at the very vitals of representative government.

In the great tragedy which deluged the world with blood and horror 4,000,000 Americans were enrolled. They fought shoulder to shoulder not alone to make the world safe for democracy, but to make democracy safe in the world. Having accomplished their immediately appointed task of dethroning autocracy and having sheathed the sword, shall we as a Nation permit a group of self-seeking alien agitators to sow the seeds of anarchy, discontent, and disloyalty, and thus threaten the very foundations of our security?

The answer comes ringing clear and strong from the platform of the American Legion. It proclaims a standard of 100 per cent American. Not spurious Americans who roll the words "liberty" and "freedom" from the lips while they plot treason and disloyalty in the heart, but Americans who believe in the natural orderly processes of the law and in such remedies as the people through their chosen representatives see fit to apply.

The purposes of the American Legion rest upon a broad foundation, namely, "To uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States; to safeguard and transmit to posterity the principles of justice and freedom and democracy for which the military and naval forces contended in the war; to maintain law and order; and to foster and perpetuate 100 per cent Americanism."

It is particularly appropriate that the 2,000,000 men who fought side by side from Flanders fields to the borders of Switzerland should join with the 2,000,000 more who were mobilized and under arms "ready to take their place in battle's stern array," and form one patriotic brotherhood.

I am convinced that the stabilizing influence of this great body can not be overestimated. With the high ideals for which it stands ever in the foreground it will prove its commanding power—a power that has come to it through the heroic sacrifice of those who were enrolled under the banner of democracy. The 4,000,000 men who constituted this great Army, 2,000,000 of whom saw service 3,000 miles across the sea, have been awakened to a realization of new problems facing our country. I feel sure that they will help us as a people to think our way safely through the besetting problems that lie in the days immediately beyond. I have an abiding faith that the American Legion will stand first and foremost for the equality of opportunity. The men who constitute the membership of the legion and those who will become members have been in a position to observe the effect of war on men and events. They have seen in the same trenches boys from humble homes perform their deeds of valor side by side with those who had lived under more favored conditions. They recognize no distinction of class, but believe in the inherent right of every individual to realize the best that is in himself.

Its program of service, which proclaims a maintenance of law and order and the perpetuation of genuine Americanism, is most comprehensive. It will root out the seeds of treasonable conduct in whatever guise it may appear. It will aim to extend its influence so that every home and fireside in this broad land shall be a nursery in which the seeds of good government and stalwart Americanism shall grow into fine fruitage.

On the question at issue I am inclined to no narrow provincialism. I stand for no racial or national prejudices. I believe in a Government whose motto is "man for mankind," for that is of the very essence of democracy. But in applying that principle I am fully minded that the alien who sought a home in our midst shall conform to our processes of law and order, or, in default of these, shall be promptly deported. The issue is clear; the mandate of the bill is unmistakable. It imposes no hardship. We have been more tolerant than we should have been. Still it is better to have erred on the side of tolerance. But America is for Americans first, and then for those who come in the spirit of cooperation and are willing to serve and sacrifice in the interests of the whole people. For those who do not sympathize with the ideals and aspirations of the fathers who founded and the citizens who perpetuated this great Republic the gates of the country open outward. If conditions here are not congenial to their tastes, they should be speeded to other shores as rapidly as the ships can carry them. Treason, sedition, and disloyalty shall have no abiding place here. The destiny of America will be determined by the impulses and activities of the men and women who stand for 100 per cent Americanism. To their intelligence and ardent patriotism we may safely trust the future.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PELL].

Mr. PELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this bill because deportation appears to be the most proper and the fairest method of dealing with aliens who are here conspiring against the fundamental principles of our Government. If they prefer another system, let them go where that system prevails.

The people who uttered the statements which we have just heard quoted are no more protected by the right of free speech than would a man who brought a gatling gun into a public square and began blazing away be protected by his constitutional right to bear arms.

Common sense would show that no constitutional provision is correctly explained by an interpretation that would jeopardize the country and would oblige us to stand idly by while conspirators labor for the overthrow of the United States. The Constitution protects rights not wrongs.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the preamble to the Constitution says:

> We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Mr. Chairman, it ought to be the purpose, and I believe it is the purpose, of the membership of this House to safeguard and preserve these sacred covenants. The red anarchists in America are the dangerous and deadly enemies of American institutions. They do not deny their hostility to our form of government. They boldly declare their purpose to set up another in its stead. Are we true to ourselves and faithful to the oath that we took when we stood with uplifted hand at the altar place of this House to support the Constitution of our country when we knowingly permit these bitter, defiant enemies to remain in our midst? [Applause.] The devil undertook to set up a government of his own in the Celestial City, and God Almighty cast him overboard. Why should we permit those who do not believe in either God or constitutional government to remain in our country? [Applause.] The Bible tells us that "If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out." What are we to do when we find an alien enemy in the country who offends everything that is dear and sacred to us as Americans? We should pluck him out of the country. [Applause.] Now, the Christ of God, the Son of Man, and the Savior of the world when he was on earth told us about the faithful servant who went out in the wheat field and on his return said to his master, "I have discovered tares in the wheat." And the master said, "An enemy hath done this."

He had gone in the nighttime and planted tares in the wheat, and when the tares grew up so that they could be distinguished from the wheat, what did the master say? He told the faithful servant to go and pluck up the tares and bind and burn them.

Now, we are not proposing to burn these red anarchists who burn the flag of our country and who preach their devilish doctrines in the temple of American liberty. We are simply saying to them, "You shall not remain in our country. There is not room enough over here for you. Go back to the country whence you came. This Government is established for those only who believe in law and order and constitutional government, and we have sworn to protect and defend its institutions and to bequeath them unimpaired to our posterity." [Applause.]

It is the duty of every man in this House and in the Senate to support this bill. I do not believe that there will be a vote cast against it. Let the Democratic Party represented here and the Republican Party in this House show to these alien enemies that, although we may have political differences and array our parties one against the other in political contests, when it comes to an issue where the honor of our flag is assailed, and the very life of the Republic is at stake, we are one against America's alien enemies. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. And, Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed all his time.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BABKA].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. BABKA. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this bill and shall vote for it without any reservations. There is no place within the borders of this country for such as this measure is designed to reach. They can not, and must not, be tolerated here any longer. [Applause.] When no longer able to suffer the tyranny of the Government in their native land they came here seeking relief. They chose to come here because they had heard that here man was permitted to live his life as the Creator intended he should live, free and unfettered; that here all men were equal; that every man here enjoyed an equal opportunity for advancement and prosperity with his neighbor; that in this country no man's rights are ever interfered with so long as he enjoys them without interfering with those of his neighbors.

And, Mr. Chairman, America did not disappoint them. True to her traditions, she received them as one of her children, for to her all men are equal. Here they were privileged to work and prosper as man prospers nowhere else under the sun. Here, after a short period of probation, they are given a voice in the affairs of the Government—a government that truly reflects the will of the people; a government whose laws are the will of the people themselves; a government under whose institutions the most humble are often called to positions of the greatest importance; a government wherein even their own children might hope some day to attain the most exalted position at its hands, not because of any divine right, not because of any accident of birth, but because of the most holy, the most sacred, the only just and equitable right, the will and consent of his fellow men.

These things, Mr. Chairman, our Government bestows on all of its citizens and its wards equally and impartially, and all that it asks in return is obedience and respect for its laws—laws the benevolence of which has won the admiration of mankind throughout the world.

Mr. Chairman, these blessings that we here in the United States enjoy were not easily attained. There was a time when here, too, tyranny and oppression reigned, and it was only at the cost of much suffering and the loss of much blood and many precious human lives that this freedom and liberty that we so cherish and enjoy were attained. Reflect for a moment on the terrible hardships that the immortal Washington and his brave band of patriots had endured from Concord to Yorktown. Consider for a moment the terrible winter at Valley Forge, when, without clothes, without shoes, and with little food our forefathers remained steadfast in order that they and their children might live as freemen. And, Mr. Speaker, all of the fruits of their victory are extended to all who enter our land, and the only thing asked in return is that they who receive remain true to the laws prescribed by our Government.

Sir, if there be those in our midst who are so base and so ungrateful that they would destroy this Government that has so willingly taken them in on a footing of equality with that of all of its citizens, that has so generously given them of its bounty, that has so abundantly fed and sheltered them, then to them I say, the door is open, go, return not, and no one shall mourn your departure. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] has?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I believe we are ready for the reading of the bill for amendment.

Mr. RAKER. I have about 12 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Very well.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the general reason for the bill has been quite fully gone over by the chairman of the committee [Mr. JOHNSON] and others. There can be no doubt in the minds of those who have given the subject any consideration that the law upon the statute books now is amply sufficient to deport every I. W. W. in the United States. There can be no doubt that, upon proper construction of the statute, those who advocate, teach, or belong to an organization that advocates or teaches the unlawful destruction of property can be deported from the United States. There can be no doubt that under the present law, properly enforced, all anarchists can be deported from the United States, and should be.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman for a question.

Mr. CANNON. Why is not that being done now, and why has it not been done for years past?

Mr. GARNER. Because you could not make the proof.

Mr. CANNON. Then what is the use of this legislation?

Mr. RAKER. Well, it has been worked upon. Some are being deported; not enough. The law has not been enforced. I refrain from a fuller discussion of that subject, but I have my views. The committee is investigating the subject. Those whose duty it was to enforce the law have not enforced it. Yet the committee has not gone far enough to place their finger upon the guilty party. But somebody has overridden the law, and I believe even unlawfully, because men who have been arrested and ordered deported have been turned loose on their own recognizances and have gone back into the population again, preaching anarchy, Bolshevism, and sabotage. And, second, there is no law against a citizen who practices these doctrines, except in a few cases. But as to deportation, the Department of Labor claimed that they had not sufficient funds to enforce the law.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. In a moment. And, third, the Department of Justice makes the same contention in this report which the committee has before it.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] suggests that there has been a failure on the part of the authorities to enforce this deportation. Is it not true that to-morrow a ship known as the "Red Ark," a ship containing 180 alien offenders against this Government, will leave our shores for Russia?

Mr. RAKER. I, being on that committee, hope the gentleman will pardon me for not answering.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is not that true?

Mr. RAKER. I do not feel that I should answer that question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I say it is true.

Mr. POU. The newspapers say it is 174 or more.

Mr. TILLMAN. I assert that that is true; a shipload of them.

Mr. CANNON. Is this the first deportation? And who was it that discharged these people on their own recognizance?

Mr. RAKER. The record has not all been made up, but from the record we had at Ellis Island it was claimed that it was ordered by the Assistant Secretary of Labor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is it not true that something like six or eight months ago 68 other anarchists were deported from New York Harbor?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. We have deported them. We have even sent them to Russia. We have sent them to Germany during the last six months.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there just a minute.

Mr. RAKER. I yield to my distinguished colleague on the committee.

Mr. WELTY. Is it not a fact that the reason why some of these people were not deported before was because they were Russians and we could not deport them to Russia at that time?

Mr. RAKER. That was the statement made by a representative of the Department of Labor. But notwithstanding that, there can be no question that the law is sufficient to deport many of these, but it has not been rigidly enforced because of a ruling that was made in relation to the subject. The committee have added to this provision of the statute.

The question of aliens who are anarchists is not affected.

The question of those who entertain, advise, advocate, or teach disbelief in or opposition to organized government is practically the same.

To the next provision we added those who believe in, advise, advocate, or teach the unlawful damage, injury, or destruction of property, adding the word "injury" or "damage."

Then we added the provision as to those who write, circulate, distribute, print, publish, edit, issue, or display, or cause to be written, and so forth, any written or printed matter of that kind. That will catch many of them.

Another provision relates to anyone who advocates or believes in or belongs to an organization that teaches or believes in sabotage. That is an entirely new provision.

There ought to be added to the bill a fifth subdivision referring to criminal syndicalism. Then we would get all of them.

I want to call the attention of the committee to the other provision of the law, and it is one of the important features of this bill.

I had here a moment ago a circular handed to me by the gentleman from Virginia saying that the Supreme Court decision relating to the three men and one woman who had violated the espionage act should be wiped out and the court criticized and the Government changed, and as a winding up they solicited a subscription for the continuance of that doctrine. And many people, some, possibly, with their minds in the right intent, not thinking exactly what was intended, have subscribed to these various organizations and associations, and therefore are helping the cause along.

Now, Mr. Speaker, so that there can be no question of what the intention of the committee is as to the words "sabotage" and "criminal syndicalism," I ask to insert as a part of my remarks the definition of those words given by the lexicographers, and second, the statutory enactments of the several States on this subject which have enacted criminal-syndicalism acts and also sabotage acts. Then, in the construction of these words, the courts and the Department of Justice and the Department of Labor will know what definition has been given by the Congress, because that was the intention of the committee, but it was not inserted in the bill. A majority of the committee believed that the meaning was sufficiently understood; but the words are not sufficiently defined, and the House ought to place in the bill a definition of criminal syndicalism and sabotage so that there can be no question when the act is enforced.

The term "criminal syndicalism" is hereby defined as a doctrine or precept advocating or teaching the commission of crime or sabotage—which word is hereby defined as meaning willful and malicious physical damage or injury to physical property—or unlawful acts, force, or violence, or unlawful methods, or terrorism, as a means of accomplishing a change in the industrial ownership or control, or affecting any political change.

That is the definition of the act as placed in the California statute, which the attorney general advised me yesterday by telegram has been held constitutional and sufficient by the courts of California, and that convictions are being secured under it. We find that practically the same definition and the statutes upon the same subject have been enacted by a number of States, and the law is being enforced in those States—Idaho, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, Oklahoma, Ohio, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, and Washington—and they give practically the same definition that the committee are intending to place upon the language in their bill. I am referring to this so that it may go into the RECORD, so that there can be no misunderstanding as to the purpose, object, and intent of the Congress in passing this bill; that it means what it says, and that it is intended to include all of those who advocate or teach or advise the commission of crime; all of those who advocate, teach, or encourage the crime of sabotage; all of those who by malicious physical damage or injury believe in the destruction of property, or by any unlawful means, force, or violence use terrorism to bring about political change or change of industrial control, as well as those who by means of terrorism or any unlawful method attempt the overthrow of government or to effect any political change. Those definitions and legislative acts on the subject just discussed are as follows:

DEFINITIONS OF "SABOTAGE."

I. Webster's New International Dictionary, 1916 edition:

Sabotage: a. Scamped work. b. Malicious waste or destruction of an employer's property by workmen during labor troubles.

II. Funk & Wagnalls' New Standard Dictionary of the English Language, 1913 edition:

Sabotage: 1. The act of cutting shoes or sockets for rails in railroad ties. 2. By extension, the act of tying up a railroad by malicious damage. 3. Hence, any poor work or other damage done by dissatisfied workmen; also, the act of producing it; plant wrecking.

III. The New International Encyclopedia, 1916 edition:

Sabotage: Willful obstruction of or interference with the processes of industry on the part of employees with the object of reducing the profit or impairing the capital of an employer and thus compelling him to accede to demands of employees.

It was first defined and given a recognized place among the weapons of organized labor in the congress of the General Confederation of Labor of France in 1887.

IV. Edgren and Burnet. French and English Dictionary, New York, 1901:

Sabotage: Business or manufacture; slashing the work through; turning out poor work fast.

DEFINITIONS OF "SYNDICALISM."

[NOTE.—The term "criminal syndicalism" was not found in any dictionary.]

I. Funk & Wagnalls's New Standard Dictionary (1913):

Syndicalism: 1. An economic movement originating in France, but now widespread, which aims at the federation of workers in all trades into an effective unity for the purpose of enforcing the demands of labor by means of sympathetic strikes. 2. The principles underlying this movement—see Industrial Workers of the World.

Industrial Workers of the World: A labor organization formed in Chicago, Ill., in 1905, to stand (1) for the policy of trade-unions entering into class-conscious labor or socialist politics; (2) for the solidarity of all branches of labor in one organization formed in such a way that all the members in any one industry, or in all industries if necessary, cease work whenever a strike or lockout occurs in any department thereof, thus making an injury to one an injury to all. This organization resembles in purpose and formation one established in France in 1895 and known there as the Confédération générale du travail (General Confederation of Labor).

II. The New International Encyclopedia, second edition (1916):

Syndicalism: A form of revolutionary labor-unionism deriving its name from the general term "syndicat" applied to the labor union in France, where the movement especially flourishes. Syndicalism is opposed on the one hand to old-line trade-unionism and on the other hand to political socialism. Its ideal is the direct assumption by organized bodies of workers of full control over all industries. It does not work for collectivism, or the ownership and operation of industries by the State, but, in so far as its program is defined, it proposes to vest control of the mines in the mine workers' organization, of the railways in the railway workers' union, etc. Syndicalism has no faith in reform through parliamentary action, nor does it have faith in revolutionary insurrections. It seeks, first, to wean the capitalist from his interest in property through curtailment of profit by means of strikes, boycotts, and sabotage, and finally to overturn the weakened capitalistic system through the general strike. * * * The nearest analogy to syndicalism in the United States is the Industrial Workers of the World.

III. The American Universities' New Unabridged Dictionary (1916):

Syndicalism: (1) An economic movement, starting in France and now widespread, aiming at the federation of workers in all trades to force labor demands through sympathetic strikes. 2. The principles which underlie this movement.

IV. The word "syndicalism" was not found in the following dictionaries:

1. Webster's New International Dictionary, 1916.
2. The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia, 1911.

SYNDICALISM AS DEFINED IN STATE LAWS.

California (Laws 1919, ch. 188): The term "criminal syndicalism" as used in this act is hereby defined as any doctrine or precept advocating, teaching, or aiding and abetting the commission of crime, sabotage (which word is hereby defined as meaning willful and malicious physical damage or injury to physical property), or unlawful acts of force and violence or unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing a change in industrial ownership or control, or effecting any political change.

Idaho (Laws 1917, ch. 145): Criminal syndicalism is the doctrine which advocates crime, sabotage, violence, or unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing industrial or political reform.

Minnesota (Gen. Stat., 1917 Supp., sec. 8596–1): Criminal syndicalism is hereby defined as the doctrine which advocates crime, sabotage (this word as used in this bill meaning malicious damage or injury to the property of an employer by an employee), violence, or other unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing industrial or political ends.

Montana (Laws 1918, ch. 7): Criminal syndicalism is hereby defined to be the doctrine which advocates crime, violence, force, arson, destruction of property, sabotage, or other unlawful acts or methods, or any such acts as a means of accomplishing or effecting industrial or political ends, or as a means of effecting industrial or political revolution.

Nebraska (Laws 1919, ch. 261): Criminal syndicalism is hereby defined to be the doctrine which advocates crime, physical violence, arson, destruction of property, or sabotage as a means of accomplishing or effecting industrial or political ends, or for profit.

Nevada (Laws 1919, ch. 22): Criminal syndicalism is the doctrine which advocates or teaches crime, sabotage, violence, or unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing industrial or political reform.

Oklahoma (Laws 1919, ch. 70): Criminal syndicalism is hereby defined to be the doctrine which advocates crime, physical violence, arson, destruction of property, sabotage, or other unlawful acts or methods as a means of accomplishing or effecting industrial or political revolution, or for profit.

Ohio, April 15, 1919 (Statutes of Ohio), approved May 7, 1919.

Oregon (Laws 1919, ch. 12): Criminal syndicalism is hereby defined to be the doctrine which advocates crime, physical violence, arson, destruction of property, sabotage, or other unlawful acts and methods as a means of accomplishing or effecting industrial or political ends or as a means of effecting industrial or political revolution, or for profit.

South Dakota (Rev. Code, 1919, sec. 3644): Criminal syndicalism is hereby defined as any doctrine or practice which teaches, advocates, or practices crime, sabotage, violence or other methods of terrorism or the destruction of life or property for the accomplishment of social, economic, industrial, or political ends.

Utah (Laws 1917, ch. 127): Criminal syndicalism is hereby defined to be the doctrine which advocates crime, violence, force, arson, destruction of property, sabotage, or other unlawful acts or methods, or any such acts, as a means of accomplishing or effecting industrial or political ends or as a means of effecting industrial or political revolution.

Washington (Laws 1919, ch. 3): Criminal syndicalism is the doctrine which advocates crime, sabotage, violence, or other unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing industrial or political reform.

1. Sabotage: Destruction of war material; attempt. Under sabotage law, April 20, 1918, section 3, providing that whoever, in times of war, destroys war material, or whoever willfully attempts to make or causes to be made in a defective manner any war materials, a conviction can be had for an "attempt," where the evidence shows a willful advising, soliciting, and attempt to influence another to commit the felony named in the act. (The United States v. De Bolt et al., 253 Fed. Rep., 78–83.)

2. Authority of State decisions; criminal cases: Though there are no common-law offenses against the United States, and criminal cases are controlled by Federal statutes, State statutes and decisions may be persuasive. (Id., supra.)

3. Constitutional law; statutory crimes of criminal syndicalism; privileges and immunities of citizens; due process of law; equal protection of the laws: Chapter 215, General Laws 1917 (Gen. Stat. Sup. 1917, secs. 8596–1 to 8596–4), declaring and defining the crime of criminal syndicalism and prohibiting the advocacy or teaching of sabotage or other methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing industrial or political ends, is not obnoxious to either the State or Federal Constitution, and no rights thereby secured or protected are in any way impaired or abridged. (State v. Mollen et al., 167 N. W., 345–349; Sup. Ct. Minn., Apr. 19, 1918.) The Minnesota statute in question defines the crime charged as follows: "Criminal syndicalism is hereby defined as the doctrine which advocates crime, sabotage (this word as used in this bill meaning malicious damage or injury to the property of an employer by an employee), violence, or other unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing industrial or political ends." (Id., supra.)

SYNDICALISM AND SABOTAGE.

1. An act defining criminal syndicalism and the word sabotage, prohibiting the advocacy, teaching, or suggestion thereof, etc. Laws of Utah, 1919, chapter 127, pages 347–349, approved February 17, 1919.

2. Laws of Arizona defining the crime of sabotage and prescribing the penalty for, prohibiting the teaching or advocacy of the doctrine of sabotage, and prescribing the penalty therefor. Session laws of Arizona, special session, third legislature, 1918, pages 51–52, chapter 13, effective July 2, 1919.

3. Laws of Nebraska. Act defining sabotage. Thirty-sixth (extraordinary) session, Nebraska, pages 50–51, chapter 9, approved April 8, 1919.

4. Criminal syndicalism and sabotage defined. General laws of Oregon, 1919, pages 25–26, chapter 12, approved February 3, 1919.

5. Defining the crime of sabotage. Session laws of Idaho, 1917, page 446, chapter 136.

6. Crime of sabotage. Laws of Washington, 1919, pages 517–518, chapter 173, approved March 10, 1919. Prevention of criminal syndicalism. Laws of Washington, 1919, pages 518–519, chapter 174, approved March 19, 1919.

7. Criminal syndicalism and sabotage. Statutes and amendments to the codes, California, 1919, pages 281–282, chapter 188, approved April 30, 1919.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. RAKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Is it claimed that under this law mere membership in the I. W. W. would ipso facto constitute ground for deportation?

Mr. RAKER. Under the law as it exists?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Under the law you are now proposing.

Mr. RAKER. If we put in as a fifth provision criminal syndicalism and define it and sabotage, it will include that, but my contention is that under their constitution and their oath and their doctrines which they promulgate membership in that society should ipso facto exclude a man from this country, and he ought to be excluded. Let me read you a resolution which their organization adopted last year.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I am asking for information.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I am trying to give information.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Would it be the duty of the Department of Justice or the Department of Labor to deport all members of the I. W. W. found in the United States after the passage of this bill?

Mr. RAKER. This only applies to aliens.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. All aliens?

Mr. RAKER. All aliens who would come within the purview of this statute should be arrested and deported by the Department of Labor.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I want to know whether the fact of being a member of the I. W. W. places a man within the purview of this statute?

Mr. RAKER. I will answer that in this way——

Mr. WELTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Let me answer the question of the gentleman from Texas first. My view is that under the statute as it now exists, as under the law that we are proposing here, a man who belongs to an organization that advocates or teaches the overthrow and destruction of our Government by violence or force should ipso facto be excluded. If the I. W. W. does so believe, and he appeals to their teachings, he should be excluded from this country.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I do not know as I understand the gentleman's position. Can the gentleman give us any information as to how many aliens there are in this country now members of the I. W. W.?

Mr. RAKER. I can not. I did not go into the number. My feeling is that if you find a sufficient amount of rotten apples in a box and you want to preserve the rest of the apples, you have got to take out the rotten ones. It is immaterial as to the number of reds, Bolshevists, and anarchists. The idea is to get those out who are; that is what we want to do. If you find one believing in that organization, if you find one teaching and practicing it, it is the duty of this Government to deport him.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. It seems to me that what I have read from report, that the Secretary of Labor has been criticized for not deporting men simply because they were members of the I. W. W. Does the gentleman believe that a member of the I. W. W.'s simply, ipso facto, should be deported?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman from California will yield, I will say that the I. W. W.'s constitution comes right up to the border line. There is where the dispute arises. But when they swear the man in they hand him the St. Johns book, which is as revolutionary as anything ever written. How can you make the division?

Mr. RAKER. Now, I want to be specific about this and not be misunderstood. A man who belongs to the organization that advocates and teaches the overthrow of the Government of the United States by violence and force or the unlawful destruction of property is deportable. And the I. W. W.'s, by virtue of their constitution, by virtue of the oath which the member takes, by virtue of the dues that he pays, by virtue of the literature he receives and acquiesces in, ipso facto comes within the law, and he should be deported beyond all question.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I understand; if you can prove enough against him he could be deported; but what I want to know is, has the Secretary of Labor, under the law, a right to deport a man simply because he is a member of that organization, simply upon proof that he is a member of the I. W. W.?

Mr. RAKER. That question can be answered by the report in this case.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That is what the Secretary of Labor is criticized for not doing.

Mr. RAKER. If a man is a member of the organization teaching the doctrines that they do teach, that everybody knows and admits that they teach, that he holds a membership card which is found upon him, that he admits that he belongs to the organization and pays dues to the organization, the Government should deport him without a further overt act on his part.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The gentleman from California thinks that every man who holds a card in the I. W. W. ought to be deported?

Mr. RAKER. You can deport none but aliens. My statement is clear, and there is no doubt as to what it is. A man who belongs to an organization which advocates the unlawful destruction of property, who believes in anarchy which teaches the overthrow and destruction of the Government of the United States by force and violence, which teaches the assassination of public officers because they are public officers, should be deported. There can be no question that it is the intent of Congress, the intent of the American people, and the desire of ninety-nine persons out of a hundred of the men, women, and children who believe in this country, that this law ought to be enforced and enforced rigidly. [Applause.]

I wish to call to the attention of the House the following statement just issued by the State Department:

[Note to the State Department from the Japanese Embassy.]

The Japanese ambassador, under instructions from his Government, has the honor to make the following communication to the Government of the United States:

The Japanese Government, placing supreme importance upon the promotion of the friendly relations between Japan and the United States, and having carefully examined in that spirit the solution created by the question of the so-called "picture brides," have decided to adopt measures for the prohibition of such brides from proceeding to the continental United States.

Mr. RAKER had leave to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington had leave to revise and extend his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," approved October 16, 1918, is amended to read as follows:

"That the following aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States:

"(a) Aliens who are anarchists;

"(b) Aliens who entertain, advise, advocate, or teach, or who are members of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group that entertains, advises, advocates, or teaches disbelief in or opposition to all organized government;

"(c) Aliens who believe in, advise, advocate, or teach, or who are members of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group that believes in, advises, advocates, or teaches; (1) The overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law, or (2) the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers (either of specific individuals or of officers generally) of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government because of his or their official character, or (3) the unlawful damage, injury, or destruction of property, or (4) sabotage;

"(d) Aliens who write, circulate, distribute, print, publish, edit, issue, or display, or cause to be written, circulated, distributed, printed, published, edited, issued, or displayed, or who have in their possession for the purpose of circulation, distribution, publication, issue, or display, any written or printed matter expressing, advising, advocating, or teaching disbelief in or opposition to all organized government, or expressing a belief in, advising, advocating, or teaching: (1) The overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law, or (2) the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers (either of specific individuals or of officers generally) of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, or (3) the unlawful damage, injury, or destruction of property, or (4) sabotage;

"(e) Aliens who are members of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group that writes, circulates, distributes, prints, publishes, edits, issues, or displays, or cause to be written, circulated, distributed, printed, published, edited, issued, or displayed, or that has in its possession for the purpose of circulation, distribution, publication, issue, or display, any written or printed matter of the character described in subdivision (d).

"For the purpose of this section: (1) The giving, loaning, or promising of money or any thing of value to be used for the advising, advocacy, or teaching of any doctrine above enumerated shall constitute the advising, advocacy, or teaching of such doctrine; and (2) the giving, loaning, or promising of money or any thing of value to any organization, association, society, or group of the character above described shall constitute affiliation therewith; but nothing in this paragraph shall be taken as an exclusive definition of advising, advocacy, teaching, or affiliation."

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WELTY: That a new section, known as section 4, be added to "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," approved October 16, 1918, as follows:

"SEC. 4. That upon information filed by the Attorney General of the United States with the Secretary of Labor, supported by affidavit, alleging that any alien has violated the provisions of this act, and the immigration act of February 5, 1917, the Secretary of Labor shall issue his warrant for the arrest of such alien and proceed to hear the evidence, and if the Secretary of Labor is of the opinion that said alien has violated the provisions of said acts, shall order him deported in the manner provided in the immigration act of February 5, 1917."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane.

Mr. WELTY. Before the Chair rules I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman now. The Chair does not care to hear any argument in favor of the point of order.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment proposes to add a new section as section 4 to the act approved October 6, 1918, of which the present bill amends section 1 of that act by simply enlarging it and making it unlawful for any alien to be a member of or affiliated with any organization or society which writes or circulates or does anything against the present form of government.

Section 1 of this act is amended by this bill, and section 2 of that act provides for their deportation, while section 3 of the act provides for their punishment if they should return to the United States.

This Congress appropriated large sums of money for the purpose of enforcing this act. There is no provision under the law requiring the Attorney General to enforce this act. As the appropriation now stands we have given a lump sum of money for the purpose of detecting and prosecuting undesirable aliens, but he has no further power to prosecute deportation. This amendment simply provides that after he has gathered all this evidence as provided by the appropriation made by this Congress and made available last July, that then the duty of the Attorney General is to submit this information to the Secretary of Labor, by information, supported by affidavits and other evidence supporting the case. As it is, this Congress only makes an appropriation without giving authority to act. It stands in the position of appropriating $2,600,000 for the purpose of detecting these criminals who preach the destruction of our Government, and after the Attorney General does that his hands are tied. There is no law requiring him to report or prosecute the case. All that we ask of him in that appropriation is to make an investigation for the purpose of detecting these men and prosecuting them. How will he prosecute? Under the immigration act of 1917 and the immigration act of October 16, 1918, there is only one way of punishing these aliens, and that is by deportation. The acts of 1917 and October 16, 1918, are the only laws upon our statute books giving authority to deport these undesirable aliens.

We have no law for the purpose of using this evidence when collected. No appropriation has been made for the Department of Labor, but we make an appropriation for the Department of Justice, which department has all of these Federal agents for the purpose of detecting the crime, and it is right that the Congress of the United States should make this appropriation for the Department of Justice and not for the Department of Labor; but after it has this money, pray tell me what it should do? The Congress is tying his hands. The Congress has failed to provide a code of procedure after they have detected these aliens.

Is it germane? The original act lacks a section for the purpose of providing machinery. The first section of the law provides for their exclusion. The second section provides for their expulsion, the third section provides for punishment if they come back, and the fourth section, offered here as a proposed amendment, provides machinery for the purpose of carrying out this act, which machinery the law never gave to the Department of Justice.

Let us see if it is not germane. Section 5909, Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, page 483, hold—

To a bill providing for an interoceanic canal, specifying a certain route, an amendment providing for another route was held to be germane.

On January 9, 1902, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was considering the bill (H. R. 3110) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans when Mr. Richard W. Parker, of New Jersey, proposed an amendment providing for a canal across the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, made the point of order that the amendment was not germane, because, while the bill provided for a canal at Nicaragua only, the amendment provided also for a canal at another place. After debate the Chairman said:

"The subject matter of this bill—the enterprise upon which the House has entered—is, in the language of the bill—

"'To construct a canal to connect the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.'"

The Chair is of the opinion that that is the purpose of the legislation sought; that the question of location is wholly a subordinate one, and that it is perfectly competent for Congress to reject one location and to adopt another. For instance, suppose it was a question of the building of a house for the purpose of storing the records of the Government, and a bill was introduced to locate it on a certain square in this city. Can anybody doubt that the proposition might be amended so as to locate it upon another square?

I refer the Chair also to section 5810 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 5:

To a bill providing for reorganization of the Army a new section prescribing a system of competition in marksmanship among the soldiers was held to be germane as an amendment.

If that is held germane in that case, a bill to provide for the organization of the Army, adding a new section providing for marksmanship, why should this section here be held not to be germane?

I refer the Chair also to section 5915, volume 5, Hinds' Precedents:

To a proposition to create a board of inquiry an amendment specifying when the board should report was held to be germane.

Section 5919 of the same volume:

An amendment on the subject of renovated butter was held to be germane to a bill relating to "oleomargarine" and other imitation dairy products.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the precedents which I have cited clearly support my contention that where a criminal law is passed and an appropriation is made to enforce it that an amendment providing procedure is surely germane, otherwise your appropriation is useless and your legislation to-day is useless. I maintain that the amendment is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The bill under consideration is a bill to amend section 1 of the act of October 16, 1918. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELTY] not only seeks to amend the act of October 16, 1918, but it also seeks to amend the immigration act of February 5, 1917. The amendment clearly is not germane, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in sympathy with the purposes of this bill, but I am quite sure that it will not accomplish what is intended, and I very much fear that it will accomplish nothing whatever. I am not prepared to say that this is the fault of the bill, although I think it lacking in many respects.

The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] stated a short time ago that it was perfectly evident that under the constitution and by-laws of the I. W. W., and from the books that it scattered abroad, that it is a society which teaches the destruction of organized government and otherwise comes under the inhibitions of this bill. I entirely agree with the gentleman, but the trouble is that the Secretary of Labor says that that is not so. He says that he has no evidence and can find no evidence that this organization teaches anarchy or the destruction of property. As long as he adheres to that ruling, then this bill will accomplish nothing whatever, because it simply brings us back to where we started, in respect to the question of whether the organization is one of those covered by this bill, and the Secretary of Labor finds it is not.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. If it is determined on an investigation that the association of I. W. W. is circulating seditious literature for the overthrow of the Government, will not that act compel the Secretary of Labor to take cognizance of the provisions of this act?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Unfortunately, it will not. I wish it would. The Secretary of Labor says that while individuals belonging to the organization may be circulating seditious literature and may be preaching the destruction of government, yet as an organization it is doing nothing of the kind, and that, on the contrary, their constitution and by-laws are carefully drawn for the express purpose of avoiding any charge of that nature.

Mr. WELTY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. WELTY. Here is what the Attorney General reported to the Senate in compliance with the resolution adopted by the Senate dated October 17, 1919. He says in reference to the constitution of the I. W. W.:

Its constitution and by-laws have been adroitly drawn so as to avoid the possibility of construing it as teaching either anarchy or sabotage.

That is supporting the Secretary of Labor; but this bill as now amended in paragraph (e) says:

Aliens who are members of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group that writes, circulates, distributes, prints, publishes, edits, issues, or displays—

And so forth, shall be deported.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, the gentleman is too good a lawyer, I am sure, to think that will bring anyone under the provisions of this bill who is not brought under the provisions of the law as it stood before.

Mr. WELTY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; let me make a statement. I prefer to make a little of this speech myself. If the gentleman will pardon me, I do not mean to be discourteous to my friend. Gentlemen have presented here seditious literature. I defy any gentleman to find among any of it to-day anything that would come under the provisions of this bill. The literature they distribute is like their constitution and by-laws; it is drawn so you can not read it in that manner. Take this pamphlet of "Drops of Blood," a most iniquitous document that has been circulated all over this country, but there is nothing whatever in this bill that applies to those who published, circulated, or distributed it. Take this document with reference to "Soviet Russia" that was spoken of here. There is nothing in the bill that will reach anything of that kind here. The real difficulty is that the provisions of the original law have still been kept by the committee, and it has been drawn, as it seems to me, more to shield violators than with an intention to reach them. Notice this provision in reference to assassination or killing of public officials. How does it say the intent must be shown?

It must be shown they were killed because they are public officials, a fact that would be almost impossible to prove in any case. Why was not a simple provision inserted in this bill that any alien who advocated the violation of law or the commission of an unlawful act should be subject to deportation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to have about two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The committee decided that the form of the previous law——

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman, I think, must not have read the provision of the Bolshevist or Russian soviet government relative to their doctrine.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, it is possible I may be in error as to that, because I only glanced over that document. And the gentleman is probably correct in correcting me, but I desire to go on with this discussion——

Mr. RAKER. If the gentleman will permit, this is one of their doctrines:

The disfranchisement of all persons employing any other person in connection with their business; the refusal to recognize the existence of God; the establishment, through marriage and divorce laws, of a method for the legalization of prostitution when the same is engaged in by the consent of the parties; the disfranchisement of merchants, traders, and commercial agents——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield further, but would observe that none of these things are covered by this bill. What I wanted to say was by reason of specifying particularly in this bill just exactly what had to be proved, the committee have, in fact, presented a bill under which it will be possible to evade enforcing the law, just as the Department of Labor is now doing.

Mr. SIEGEL. If the gentleman would yield for just one thing, under section 19 of the act any alien convicted of a certain crime can be deported under the order of the court.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am talking about this bill, and I say that something more stringent is required or little will be accomplished.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. No alien within the United States shall be admitted to citizenship who comes within the foregoing section, and any petitioner for naturalization coming within the foregoing section shall be denied admission to citizenship: Provided, That any naturalized citizen who if an alien would in any manner come within the provisions of the foregoing section shall be proceeded against as provided by law in a suit to cancel the order of naturalization by which he became a citizen of the United States as having been procured by fraud upon the laws of the United States. The denial of said petitioner for admission to citizenship or the entering of the order of cancellation shall make it the duty of the Secretary of Labor to take said alien into custody and deport him or her in the manner provided by the immigration act of February 5, 1917, and a certified copy of the order of denial and order of cancellation shall be forwarded to the Bureau of Naturalization, Department of Labor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order? I think, perhaps, the gentleman will be willing to reserve the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman from Washington reserve the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, there are three kinds of residents in the United States who are menacing our institutions to-day. First, there are certain citizens of the United States of native birth. Second, there are certain naturalized citizens; and, third, there are certain aliens. This bill very frankly deals only with the aliens. I think many cases can be adduced in which naturalized citizens have been a serious source of trouble. While I am in accord with this bill, as far as it goes, I am very sorry that the committee did not see its way clear to go still further and to extend the provisions here relating to aliens so as to cover criminal or revolutionary naturalized citizens also.

The Supreme Court of the United States has held that Congress has ample authority to cancel issued decrees of citizenship.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. Just for a question. The committee believed that it was not germane to this legislation on the question of exclusion and deportation, and the question that the gentleman refers to the committee has thoroughly investigated, and I believe it will bring out a bill which will provide for the very thing the gentleman is contending for.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman answer this question? Will he inform the committee whether, in his judgment, the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization will at an early date report to the House a deportation measure dealing with undesirable naturalized citizens of the United States?

Mr. RAKER. I would not be able to say for all the committee, but I believe we will be able to report a bill providing that if a man's naturalization has been obtained by fraud it shall be canceled and he shall be deported, and, in addition, bring in legislation in regard to the exclusion of aliens coming to this country.

Mr. ROGERS. In my judgment, if you can balance the degrees of iniquity, it is more unrighteous for a naturalized citizen to plot against the interests of the United States than it is for an alien, because, for one reason, the naturalized citizen ought to know more on an average than does the alien; and, for the second reason, he has affirmatively sworn to uphold and support the interests of the United States. If the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization had the jurisdiction, on which I am not prepared at the moment to express an opinion, which would have authorized it to include in some measure a provision relating to disloyal naturalized citizens of the United States, I think it is almost a calamity that it has not brought it into this bill and put it on its passage.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman himself is a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, where that matter belongs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 3, in line 21, by striking out the semicolon after the word "therewith" and inserting in lieu thereof a period, and striking out the rest of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TILLMAN: Page 3, line 21, after the word "therewith," strike out the semicolon, insert a period, and strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is a very clear and a very strong paragraph, and a very proper one. It says:

The giving, loaning, or promising of money or anything of value to any organization to be used for the advising, advocacy, or teaching of any doctrine above enumerated shall constitute the advising, advocacy, or teaching of such doctrine, and (2) the giving, loaning, or promising of money or anything of value to any organization, association, society, or group of the character above described shall constitute affiliation therewith.

The part I want to strike out is this:

But nothing in this paragraph shall be taken as an exclusive definition of advising, advocacy, teaching, or affiliation.

You weaken this very proper, strong, and lucid paragraph by adding on those emasculating words.

Mr. VAILE. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think the effect of these words is just the opposite; and the gentleman, as an attorney, I think, will appreciate the force of this view. If we say that such and such a thing shall constitute advising and such another thing shall constitute affiliation, it seems to me very likely that the court will hold that other things can not constitute advising and affiliation. The advising and affiliation being defined in this act, that definition might be held to be an exclusive definition, and the other acts which might logically and naturally be advising and affiliation might be excluded, and a person who was guilty of them might escape deportation. Consequently these words were put in for the very purpose of showing that these things are among those which will constitute advising or teaching or affiliation, but that these words shall not be exclusive of other things which might constitute those offenses.

Mr. TILLMAN. You seek here to reach the party who gives money to these organizations, who possibly has been in the background, and who is perhaps not an alien but a citizen, but who, is guilty of a very serious offense if he is guilty of the things set forth in the paragraph under discussion. It seems to me the paragraph should be taken by itself. It explains what the giving amounts to. It amounts to affiliation and happily couples the offender in the background with the culpable organization which we are seeking to punish.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman will notice that the paragraph commences:

For the purpose of this section.

Then comes the definition. If that was already in the paragraph, the definition would be confined as to the provisions of this paragraph, and the teaching of anarchy would not be included at all, because this paragraph only includes the definition of the giving and furnishing of money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TILLMAN] is always clear and lucid in his explanation, and his judgment is good, but he has just overlooked the matter that he intends to strike out. I want in particular to call the committee's attention now to lines 10 and 11 on page 1, and lines 1 and 2 on page 2, which read:

Aliens who entertain, advise, advocate, or teach, or who are members of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group, that entertains, advises, advocates, or teaches, disbelief in or opposition to all organized government.

Now, gentlemen, you could advocate that in a hundred ways. You could advocate it by oral statements, you could advocate it by a nod, you could advocate it by publishing a book, you could advocate it by publishing a pamphlet, you could advocate it by putting it in a paper, or you could teach it in various different ways. But none of them that we can find yet comes within the definition that if I give a man $20 for the purpose of using in his organization that teaches these things, I am not necessarily advocating or saying a word about it; I just hand him $20 and he can go scot free. But we say now in this provision that the purpose and intent is to catch everybody that contributes money to these organizations, and that the giving of money or anything of value shall constitute and be advocating and the teaching and encouraging that organization.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. I recognize the force of the argument made by the gentleman and others. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the amendment is withdrawn?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas is withdrawn.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what is intended to be covered by this language at the bottom of page 2:

The overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law.

Now, does that mean the overthrow of the forms of law or the overthrow of the officials who are executing the law? What is that intended to cover where you say "the overthrow by force or violence of * * * all forms of law"?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will say to the gentleman that the lines there and the words are exactly those in the existing act of October 16, 1918, which this bill undertakes to amend, not correcting the effect of verbiage but adding to.

Mr. WALSH. What does it cover now?

Mr. VAILE. If the chairman will allow the suggestion, the gentleman will notice that this is a paragraph referring to aliens who write, circulate, distribute, and print matter, and so forth, which advocates so-and-so.

Mr. WALSH. It is in paragraph C.

Mr. VAILE. Now, the I. W. W. and similar organizations say in their literature that they are hostile to the existence of government. They say that the I. W. W. opposes the institution of the State. We thought that by that clause, which is in the existing law, it was intended to catch people who were generally opposed to law, any or all forms of law.

Mr. WALSH. Would it include within its scope people who went out and took the law into their own hands?

Mr. VAILE. I should think so, although I am not on the bench trying such a case.

Mr. WALSH. I know that the gentleman has made a careful study of the matter, and I am asking him for information.

Mr. VAILE. It is possible that some more apt words might have been chosen, but the members of the committee understood it as the gentleman does, that those who advocate taking the law into their own hands were opposed to all forms of law; and the Attorney General, I might add, wanted these words retained. They are in the existing law.

Mr. WALSH. The Attorney General has had reason to interpret this language, I assume?

Mr. VAILE. Oh, yes.

Mr. WALSH. And to apply the law in that particular part?

Mr. VAILE. Yes. The Attorney General's attitude is that of the House. The Attorney General has passed upon it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, was an amendment offered?

Mr. WALSH. No. I moved to strike out the last word.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11224) to amend the act entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," approved October 16, 1918, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Under the rule the previous question has been ordered, and we are right up to the final vote, where the bill shall be passed or not.

The SPEAKER. That is the proper interpretation of the rule.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The previous question has been ordered under the rule.

Mr. RAKER. That is what I thought.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALSH. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 142, noes 0.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I now ask, Mr. Speaker, that all Members of the House may have three calendar days in which to extend their remarks on this bill which has just been passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have three calendar days in which to extend their remarks on the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will connect with that the condition that the remarks will be Members' own remarks, and that nothing else shall be inserted in the RECORD, I shall not object, but I do think that these editorials and arguments and pamphlets produced by somebody else should not be included.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I accept that condition.

Mr. WALSH. Well, in view of the strenuous contest that has been had here this afternoon in the debate on this bill and the extremely close vote on its passage [laughter], I do not think the membership of the House need worry about having to justify their action in passing the bill. I do not like to object to the request of the distinguished gentleman from Washington, who is also chairman of the Committee on Printing, and if he thinks the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is such as to keep down to reasonable limits these requests for extension of remarks, I shall not object. Can the gentleman give me that assurance?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am inclined to think that the demand throughout the United States for some information as to the progress of legislation of this kind is such that each Member might well make a few short remarks of his own for extension in the RECORD. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. WALSH. Well, of course, the constituents of us Members here will get information from the speeches we deliver on the progress of the legislation.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me it would be a good idea for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] to modify his condition, because it is practically impossible to make an extension of remarks with regard to this particular bill without quoting some of the literature that really is inherent, almost, in the construction of the bill. Strictly speaking, an extension of remarks under the gentleman's condition or limitation, according to the gentleman's statement, would be prohibited. With that in mind, I would suggest to the gentleman that he modify his limitation and make it apply only to extensive quotations from books and pamphlets, which should be omitted.

Mr. WALSH. I simply want to suggest to the gentleman that if extracts from these offensive publications are included it is quite likely that Postmaster General Burleson will exclude them from the mails.

Mr. GARNER. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that any agreement he can make with the gentleman from Massachusetts will be satisfactory to me. It merely occurred to me that the blanket extension of remarks is bad policy, in the first place, and if it is granted it ought to be confined to the Member's own remarks, and let him labor a little before he encumbers the RECORD.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the gentleman's observation is very true, and I would agree to that. I have no particular desire to make any extension of remarks myself, in any event, but I only thought it would be extremely difficult for gentlemen in this particular case to make any extension of remarks at all without quoting somewhat from the objectionable literature which is so large a cause for this legislation.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I wish to suggest to the gentleman that the literature to which he refers has already been too freely quoted and circulated, and if we can not present a case based upon the language of the American Constitution, and if we have to quote this kind of literature and give it further circulation under our franks, we shall not have accomplished very much.

Mr. TOWNER. Doubtless the gentleman himself could do what he suggests, but all of us are not so fortunately constituted with regard to our ability to base our remarks upon the Constitution. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I have a better opinion of the gentleman from Iowa than to think that he has not as great literary resources as the anarchists themselves have.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

EQUIPMENT FOR VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, in an effort to secure material for the work of rehabilitation of soldiers in a city in my district—Holyoke, Mass.—on making inquiries through the Federal Board for Vocational Rehabilitation, the rehabilitation branch here in Washington, I came across the astounding information that the lathes, tools, dies, presses, and general equipment needed for the rehabilitation of our discharged soldiers were not being turned over to that board, because outside interests had in some way secured authority to visit the various salvage depots in the country, some of them situated in Cincinnati, Chicago, Baltimore, and Bridgeport. These outside people have tagged in advance these various equipments that our boys should have in the work of rehabilitation. The people who have secured first consideration of this equipment represent the Construction Metalique, of Brussels. I am credibly informed that that organization corresponds to what would be in this country the local board of trade or allied industries. They, through the Belgian High Commission, in some unknown way have dispatched to the various stations where this salvaged and surplus material is now stored 35 representatives, and wherever the tags that they have placed on these goods are found our own board for the rehabilitation of our discharged soldiers can not touch that equipment.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. GARNER. To whom does this equipment belong?

Mr. TREADWAY. It belongs to our Government and is in the hands of the salvage bureaus of the War Department, having been declared surplus and not needed by either the Army or the Navy.

Mr. GARNER. Where does this mysterious power come from to let outside people have it?

Mr. TREADWAY. I am making these remarks for the purpose of trying to find out. I think it is worthy of our attention where that authority is coming from and why it should be given to foreign commercial interests rather than that our own board, established by Congress, to rehabilitate our disabled soldiers should have precedence.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Has the gentleman's attention been directed to a circular issued by the director of sales of that department within two or three days, which explains in some detail, I think, a policy that might be this very one, or a similar one with regard to other parts of the surplus stores which have been sold to European contractors or governments, upon which there is still reserved the right of Americans to have another chance?

Mr. TREADWAY. That is not the case with reference to the articles to which I refer. This Belgian contract covers 2,600 articles, practically all of which would be available for our vocational work. Further than that, I was informed by the Bureau of Sales that we have recently entered into a contract to sell to French commercial representatives 26,000 articles of this surplus equipment. I am not sure that all of those 26,000 articles would be applicable to vocational training in this country, but nevertheless they do have first choice. And further, I will say that a Mr. Nelson, a private individual, bought large quantities of these needed supplies at the Symington plant, tagged them personally, and sold them, as I understand, to private concerns in St. Paul and Minneapolis, and our officials were not allowed to secure those desired equipments.

Mr. GARNER. The inference to be drawn from the gentleman's statement, as I understand it, is that the Government now owns certain supplies which the Vocational Board will need for the training of these soldiers?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And that they are going to sell them all out to private interests or foreign representatives who have gone into the market to buy them. I do not believe that arrangement is going to be made.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is being done at this very minute.

Mr. GARNER. I do not believe any Government official would be so silly as to be a party to a scheme of that kind.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8778) to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes, had asked a conference with the House on the bill, and had appointed Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. ROBINSON as the conferees on part of the Senate.

THE RAILROADS.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes, to disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate, and that the Speaker name the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill to which he refers, which the Clerk will report by title, and to disagree to the Senate amendments, agree to the conference asked by the Senate, and that the Speaker appoint the conferees.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. MEAD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a motion at the proper time to instruct the House conferees to insist on the retention in the bill in conference of the Anderson amendment on the labor clause, which was placed in the bill by the House. In that respect it radically differs from the provision in the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York reserves the right to object in order that he may present a resolution of instructions.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I do not doubt the gentleman's right to reserve an objection or his right to make such a motion, but I think it would be advisable to send the bill to conference now unhampered, so that the conferees may have a full and free conference. I can state to the gentleman that in view of the fact that the labor provisions are so radically different, it is almost certain that the conferees of the House may have to come back to the House for further instructions, at which time the matter would be open for instructions.

Mr. MEAD. If that is the understanding, I have no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question. I understand the House bill is very different from the Senate bill, or the Senate bill very different from the House bill. Usually we have one hour of debate on a conference report. Would the gentleman from Wisconsin have any objection to extending the time for debate on the conference report when it comes back to the House?

Mr. ESCH. In view of the importance of the legislation and the difference of opinion in the Senate and the House on many subjects, I would not have any objection to extending the period for debate.

Mr. GARNER. If I understood the gentleman in response to the gentleman from New York, he gives the House an assurance that he will bring back for consideration the labor provisions?

Mr. ESCH. I stated that the differences were so radical, and knowing the temper of the House, I felt that it would be almost certain that the House conferees would come back to the House for further instructions.

Mr. GARNER. Let me say to the gentleman that I would like to have an opportunity to vote on the labor provisions, not only to advocate the Anderson amendment but the propositions submitted by the Senate. I do believe that the House ought to have assurance that the conferees will bring it back and give the House an opportunity to consider the labor question. The reason I do not object and undertake to get it under the rules of the House is that I do not believe there is a quorum of the House in town, and I want to see the bill go to conference. I would like an opportunity to test the sentiment of the House on the question of the labor provisions in the Senate bill.

Mr. SIMS. If the Senate should agree to the House provision there would be no need of bringing it back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. ESCH, Mr. HAMILTON, Mr. WINSLOW, Mr. SIMS, and Mr. BARKLEY.

EQUIPMENT FOR VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to further proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] asked a question and then made his own reply in a way that would indicate he did not think that any department of the Government would do exactly what I had said it was doing. I can say authoritatively that there have been 1,000 such tools and instruments as these to which I referred shipped to Belgium under that special tag, and that there are 1,200 more awaiting shipment. That is positive information which can be corroborated by the gentleman from Texas or any Member of the House.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I do not want the gentleman from Massachusetts to put me in a false attitude. I said the inference from the gentleman's remarks was that the Government now owned certain property needed for vocational education of the soldiers; that the policy of the Government would be to sell all of this property either to Brussels agents or private individuals, and then go back into the market and buy the identical property, and I could not conceive that such a policy would be followed by the Government or any agent of the Government.

Mr. TREADWAY. I can not conceive that it should be done, but I still say that it is being done. I am making these remarks to see if we can find out why it is. Any such foolish policy ought to be inquired into. I agree that it is a foolish policy, and not only that, but it is preventing the functioning to a certain extent of the vocational training of our soldiers. We have heard criticisms on the floor of the slowness in which the work is being undertaken, and one of the reasons of the slowness is because the Vocational Board has not been able to obtain the implements and instruments which it desires.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I suggest again that if the gentleman desires to proceed further in the inquiry in regard to this matter, if he will look up the circular of information that has come from the Director of Sales, if it does not cover satisfactorily what the gentleman has in mind, it will open another field worthy of investigation along the same line.

Mr. TREADWAY. I appreciate the suggestion of the gentleman from Vermont and would add to his statement the proposition I made when I made the previous statement, that I was informed by the Director of Sales Office that 26,000 additional tools and implements have already been contracted for to be delivered to French commercial representatives.

There seems to be one reason, perhaps, for this possible mistake that is being made, and that is this: These tools are sold to this private concern in Belgium and to the private individual in Chicago—Nelson, by name—I am informed, at a small discount from what they cost the Government. When the Board of Vocational Education asked for the loan of these various lines of equipment, there was no actual sale. I suppose we are to be paid a moderate price for these instruments and tools and general vocational equipment, soon to be sent to France, and in that way a better appearance will be made in the figures of salvage by the War Department. But that has nothing to do with the need for these very lines of equipment for the discharged soldiers in their vocational training, and it seems to me that we ought, when the opportunity arises, to propose some form of legislation under which the Board of Vocational Education, having to do with the rehabilitation of discharged or disabled soldiers, without any cost whatever to the board any more than the adjustment of the bookkeeping between the two departments, should have preference in the selection and obtaining of those tools and implements, rather than that they should be sold to anyone, whether a private concern in this country or to a Government abroad. Our duty to-day is to the disabled men. There are 21,000, I am told, in training now, and the board expects to have, if it can secure the equipment, 30,000 in training by the 1st of February. Certainly they are hampered by having taken right from under their nose in these various salvage depots the very line of equipment that they need.

I think this is a very important matter, and I have called it to the attention of the House in order that the practice may be stopped, and that there may in due time be legislation which will take care of the matter.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. TREADWAY was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution (No. 23):

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That when the two Houses complete the business of this day (calendar day of Saturday, December 20, 1919) they shall stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, January 5, 1920.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 266. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of the bill to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States.

URGENT DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11223) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Employees' Compensation Commission and the Public Health Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, with Senate amendments thereto, and for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the deficiency appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, and give it immediate consideration. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. Consent has already been given.

Mr. WALSH. Then I ask the gentleman to yield.

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman state how it happens that this hospital in Cook County, Ill., once more is brought up for consideration? That matter was pretty thoroughly thrashed up and down and all around some months ago. I do not quite see how on a deficiency bill we can get this somewhat comprehensive amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the act of March 3, 1919, authorized the acquisition of the hospital at Broadview, Cook County, Ill., at a limit of cost of $3,000,000. The act of July 11, 1919, the deficiency act, contained this provision, which was put on in the Senate and agreed to by the House:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to acquire and complete immediately the hospital at Broadview, Cook County, Ill., authorized and appropriated for by an act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanitarium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, approved March 3, 1919, public act 326, Sixty-fifth Congress."

After that act was passed by the Congress the Secretary of the Treasury and the Public Health Service raised the question as to whether or not the hospital would be large enough and whether the facilities provided for would be adequate to meet the demands that would be made upon the hospital.

Mr. WALSH. That was after the armistice?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. Very recently the Secretary of the Treasury submitted to Congress a deficiency estimate requesting about $2,000,000, as I recollect.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Two million five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. GOOD. Two million five hundred thousand dollars; and also asked authority to increase the limit of cost from $3,000,000 to $5,500,000, or if the ideal plan submitted by him be adopted that the limit of cost be increased to about $7,500,000.

That estimate went to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and it has reported back a bill which simply directs the Secretary to acquire the Speedway Hospital at Broadview within the present limit of cost. The Secretary of the Treasury, as I understand the situation, feels that he should not proceed in the acquisition of this hospital at this time under the present limit of cost, because he feels that additional facilities are needed there now, and made an estimate, if I recollect, of 101 officers' homes in connection with the hospital, costing around $10,000 to $13,000 apiece, providing the ideal plan be approved by Congress. Now, that matter was taken up, as I understand it, by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and they held hearings, and they reported back this bill; and the amendment which was adopted in the Senate is in all respects like the House bill, except the Senate amendment contains this language: "together with such other changes of the existing buildings as may be found necessary and desirable." The amendment, or one quite like it, was originally prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury, but it contained the provision that he should have the power to make such other changes with buildings as he might find necessary, increasing the limit of cost to $5,500,000. Now, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds struck out that provision with other provisions and reported a bill directing the Secretary to acquire the completed hospital with the additional building all planned and specified by the Treasury Department.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me? I was not in the Chamber when the gentleman asked unanimous consent. Had I been here I would have objected, because, as the chairman of the committee knows, he may not be under any obligation to advise me he was going to call up this report at this time, but, having done so, I wish to say I am going now to make the point of no quorum on the consideration of this measure.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will not do that. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I may or may not conclude hereafter that it is right. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have reported it, and I may favor it; but I know what transpired before in reference to this matter, and we ought to have a chance to investigate it.

On the night of July 1 it was brought up under similar circumstances when the House did not have a proper chance to investigate it just prior to a recess that night, and now under identically similar circumstances it is brought up. I did not know it was to be brought up, and we ought to have a chance to investigate it before it is acted upon by the House, and I think the House is entitled to it.

Mr. GOOD. My recollection is, I told the gentleman this morning that I intended to call up this bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That may have been the gentleman's intention, but the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GOOD. I certainly had no intention of concealing anything from the gentleman.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Did not the gentleman understand that an attempt would be made to dispose of it to-day?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No man from South Carolina or any other State would know when the Senate was going to pass a bill, or the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Senate passed the bill yesterday.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I did not know it was going to come up. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order of no quorum.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will withhold that.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I did not know the gentleman was going to call it up.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will withhold it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman is on the subcommittee and should know——

Mr. GOOD. I want to make a further statement.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to complete a sentence first, and then I will yield. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to call this conference report up until the House had acted upon the conference report on the war-risk insurance act. That act grants very material increases in the compensation to soldiers and sailors of the late war. Under a letter addressed to one of the Senators with regard to that act I am advised that for the rest of this year it will require in the neighborhood of $90,000,000 to pay for the increased compensation to soldiers and sailors of the late war.

That bill becomes effective immediately as soon as the conference report is adopted and is signed by the President. It provides for the payment of a good many millions of dollars immediately. It was the intention of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, that has been somewhat smarting under the criticism of the American Legion because action was not taken along this line—and that criticism has come to Congress itself—to make payment as soon as the funds are available. It was my object in calling this up at this time to prevent similar criticism being laid at my door or at the door of Congress if we took the recess and failed to appropriate the money that that bill provides for.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Senate has added an amendment to this bill. It added an amendment carrying $30,000,000 to carry out the provisions of the Sweet war-risk amendment, so that that money can be sent out at once. I am told that the department is ready now to commence the issuance of checks as soon as authority has been granted to pay this sum. And gentlemen can take the responsibility, if they so desire, at this hour, of stopping that legislation.

So far as the Speedway Hospital is concerned, the Senate amendment, in my opinion, does not amount to anything. It does not give any additional authority not already possessed; it does not appropriate a single penny. The Secretary of the Treasury, in my opinion, has all of that authority now.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield first to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PELL].

Mr. PELL. Is the Broadview Hospital the one we discussed before when the Secretary of the Treasury said we did not want it?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; it is the one discussed here when the legislation was passed on March 3, and again referred to in the act of July 11.

Mr. PELL. Do you think, as we have denied the War Department hundreds of millions of dollars needed for the defense of the country, it is a good thing to waste money on providing hospitals which the authorities say they do not want?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman has not read the amendment and did not listen to the reading or he would not ask that question, because this amendment does not appropriate a single penny; it does not grant a single bit of authority not already possessed.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GOOD. And why the Secretary of the Treasury wanted it is more than I can imagine.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GOOD. I yield.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Now, I happen to know something about this Broadview Hospital. The House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had a bill up for consideration yesterday morning and passed upon it, after hearings for some days, and that bill purported to give the authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to take over this Speedway proposition in Chicago. But added to the bill was a proviso authorizing an appropriation of $2,500,000 in addition to the $2,500,000 already appropriated. Now, the gentleman will recall that this proposition was added onto the hospital bill of March 3, 1919, by the Senate. The House at first rejected it. There was a conference. The conferees finally consented to the introduction of this Speedwny proposition in the bill, upon the understanding that there was a proviso annexed to it to the effect that if the Secretary of the Treasury determined, in his judgment, that it was not for the best interest of the Government to take over this proposition, in that event he was to reject it. Now, they dillydallied about the proposal for several months. Finally, on July 11 we passed an act directing the Secretary of the Treasury to take over this proposition and complete it.

Mr. GOOD. Well, the gentleman——

Mr. GRIFFIN. Pardon me just a minute. Let me get on with this.

I want to show you where you are wrong in imagining that this proposal does not include an additional appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman has a question to ask, I will be glad to answer it. I think I know something about the subject myself.

Mr. GRIFFIN. You claim here this does not require an additional appropriation of $2,500,000. I say it does. The House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds yesterday struck out from the bill this provision:

Together with such further changes in said buildings as may be found necessary or desirable.

Now, this is the procedure of the Senate. If this is allowed to stay there, it means they may go ahead with these changes and alterations and additions and hereafter come back to Congress and ask an appropriation in order to pay for these additions.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman ought to be fair. Right in the amendment is a provision that it shall all be done within the appropriation therefor contained in the act entitled "An act," and so forth, which was the act of March 3; the whole thing to be acquired within the limit of cost as fixed by that act. There is no question about that.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It does not state that it is within the appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. But it does. The amendment provides:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed immediately to acquire the uncompleted hospital building at Broadview, Cook County, Ill., and the site thereof, consisting of 320 acres, more or less, and to cause the work on said hospital building to be completed and the five proposed auxiliary buildings to be constructed in accordance with the plans and specifications transmitted to the Shank Co., July 15, August 16, and September 23, 1919, and the appropriation therefor, contained in the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide the hospital and sanitarium facilities"—

And so forth.

Mr. GRIFFIN. What is the verb there? Where does that hitch on to anything in particular?

Mr. GOOD. The Secretary is authorized to proceed to acquire that.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Does it say that it must be within that appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. It says, "that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to acquire" that and these buildings within "the appropriation therefor, contained in the act entitled 'An act,'" and so forth.

Mr. GRIFFIN. It does not say "within the appropriation," and there is no language in there that hitches it up with anything before or after.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the conference report on the so-called Sweet bill is ready to be presented. That bill and this bill, if it passes, both of them, would have to be enrolled and signed by the Speaker and the Presiding Officer of the Senate to-night in the presence of the two bodies. It will take, if we should now agree upon the conference report upon the Sweet bill, until in the neighborhood of 11 o'clock to-night to enroll it. Would not the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] be willing to let the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWEET] now present, as he would have the right to under the rule, his conference report as a privileged matter, and see if we can not dispose of that before we dispose of the other, so that both bills then can be enrolled probably by 11 o'clock to-night? If we wait much longer the Sweet bill can not be enrolled before to-morrow some time.

Mr. GRIFFIN. What becomes of the bill we are now considering?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would come up immediately after the conference report on the Sweet bill is disposed of.

Mr. GRIFFIN. And continue from that point on, subject to reservations?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Because I want to give notice right here that I am going to oppose the passage of this bill with this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will not lose his right.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa presents a conference report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8778) to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the conference report and accompanying statement, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8778) to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5 and 18.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, and 30, and agree to the same.

BURTON E. SWEET,
JOHN J. ESCH,

HOWARD SUTHERLAND,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

On amendment No. 1: The House conferees recede from its disagreement to this amendment, as it changes the salary of the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance from $10,000, as passed by the House, to $7,500.

On amendments Nos. 2, 3, and 4: The House recedes from its disagreement to these amendments for the reason that they simply change the phraseology made necessary by the addition of subdivision 5-A.

On amendment No. 5: The Senate recedes from this amendment, which is a change in punctuation.

On amendment No. 6: The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment, for the reason that it defines the terms "brother" and "sister" so as to include the children of a person in loco parentis to a member of the military or naval forces of the United States.

On amendment No. 7: This amendment relates to persons who come within the class of enemy aliens, conscientious objectors, or deserters, or as guilty of mutiny, treason, spying, or any other offense involving moral turpitude and for willful and persistent misconduct. The present law is not changed in any respect as to these classes, so the House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

On amendments Nos. 8, 9, 10, and 11: The House recedes from its disagreement to these amendments, as they merely change the section numbers.

On amendment No. 12: This amendment relates to the payment of family allowances and allotments where no allotment was made during the service of the soldier, but should, in fact, have been made, in case the family relation of the soldier had been correctly represented by him. It provides for the payment of an allotment to the wife notwithstanding the fact that no deductions from the pay of the enlisted man for compulsory allotment in favor of such person had been made, and notwithstanding the further fact that the enlisted man has been discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States. This can probably be taken care of in legislation pertaining to the War Risk Insurance Bureau now pending before Congress, so the House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

On amendment No. 13: The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment, as it merely changes the section number.

On amendment No. 14: The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment, which strikes out the words "involving moral turpitude."

On amendment No. 15: The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment, as it changes the date when this section shall become operative from October 6, 1917, to April 6, 1917.

On amendment No. 16: The House conferees recede from its disagreement to this amendment, which allows transportation to soldiers, sailors, and marines to and from hospitals.

On amendment No. 17: The House recedes from its disagreement to amendment 17, which strikes from the House text "unless from the records of the Navy Department or War Risk Insurance Bureau it appears that he has applied for insurance in a less sum." This places all those who were lost upon the Cyclops on the 4th day of March, 1918, upon the same basis, regardless of whether they made application for insurance or not.

On amendment No. 18: The Senate recedes from this amendment, which proposed to strike out the House language making section 13 retroactive to October 6, 1917. In other words, the House bill provided that this section should be retroactive to October 6, 1917. The text of the House bill by the action of the Senate in receding from this amendment leaves the measure as it was passed by the House.

On amendments Nos. 19 to 30, inclusive: These amendments are changes of phraseology made necessary by providing that insurance made payable to an estate shall be paid in monthly installments extending over a period of 20 years.

BURTON E. SWEET,
JOHN J. ESCH,
SAM RAYBURN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question in reference to amendment No. 12, the one referred to in the RECORD this morning on page 876, wherein the Senate struck out section 10A, having to do with the payment of an allotment to a discharged man. As I heard the report read, reference was made to legislation pending to the effect that the subject matter would be taken care of.

Mr. SWEET. Yes; there is reference made in the report to pending legislation.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is there any pending legislation under which this same idea could be incorporated?

Mr. SWEET. There is the Wason bill, introduced by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON], which has been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House.

Mr. TREADWAY. Wherein such an amendment as this can be inserted in the future?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEET. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CANDLER. I want to ask concerning the amendment as to persons who stand in loco parentis what changes are made in reference to them? As the bill passed the House it provided for the payment of insurance to those who stood in loco parentis, just as if they were the real parents of the soldier.

Mr. SWEET. That is true. That provision of the House bill has not been changed. There has been added a paragraph (5a) which extends that same provision, in defining the terms "brother" and "sister."

Mr. CANDLER. Then the provision as it originally passed the House has not been modified or changed at all, and the people who were taken care of under the provisions of the bill at that time are still included in the provisions of the bill?

Mr. SWEET. They are. There is no change in that.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. I would like to ask the gentleman concerning two amendments that were offered in the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] and which appeared in the text of the bill on page 5 and on page 8. Both of them added to the provision that a service man should not under certain conditions receive the assistance of the Government if harm came to him as a result of his own willful misconduct the words "involving moral turpitude." In one place, namely, in section 300, the Senate struck out those words. In the other place, namely, in section 31, the Senate left in those words. The cases seem to me exactly parallel. Of course, I do not expect the gentleman to explain why the Senate chose to strike out the words in one place and to leave them in in a parallel place, but I should like to ask the gentleman why the House conferees acquiesced in the Senate action to strike out those three words in section 300?

Mr. SWEET. It was the opinion of the conferees that we should not go so far as to use the words "involving moral turpitude," but should let it stand upon the words "willful misconduct." I will say to the gentleman that during the meeting of the conferees that question was not called to our attention. I think the provision should be the same in both cases, but in order to get this legislation through and have it adopted at this time it seems to me that we should not endeavor to modify the report in any way.

Mr. ROGERS. I dare say that may be true, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] made an exceedingly strong case for those two amendments. He cited the case of a young man who had gone to get a drink of water while the train was stopping for a moment, in violation of the orders of some authority. His legs were cut off by a passing train while he was on that errand, and under this language he would be excluded from compensation. The committee unanimously accepted the Reed amendments, and the Committee of the Whole unanimously indorsed the action of the committee. While I am not proposing to try to upset the conference report at this hour, because I realize that the general situation is such that we will probably have to swallow a minor thing for the sake of the greater good, I do hope that at a later date the gentleman will adhere to his opinion which he expressed in the House and see if something can not be done for cases of that kind.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. Section 300 has been amended by the Senate to read "April" instead of "October."

Mr. SWEET. Yes; we agreed to that, and the basis on which the agreement was made was so that all cases that might come up after April 6, 1917, should come under this law.

Mr. ROSE. That is right.

Mr. SWEET. So that we should not be required to go back to the old pension law to take care of boys whose cases might fall within the period between April 6, 1917, and October 6, 1917.

Mr. ROSE. These cases to which I allude took place between April and October, 1919.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 267. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1919.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 2472. An act to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act;

S. 3284. An act to provide for the national welfare by continuing the United States Sugar Equalization Board until December 31, 1920, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 131. Joint resolution making immediately available the appropriation for the expenses of regulating further the entry of aliens into the United States.

REPRINT OF THE RAILROAD BILL.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be a print of 3,000 copies of the railroad bill for the use of the House, including the Senate substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the printing of 3,000 copies of the railroad bill, including the Senate substitute. Is there objection?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will those go to the folding room?

Mr. ESCH. To the document room.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman mean that they will be printed in parallel columns?

Mr. ESCH. No; that is a very large task, and I am hoping to have the legislative reference library do that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES TO THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE BURNETT.

Mr. RAINEY of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House hold a session on Sunday, January 25, 1920, for the purpose of enabling the Members to pay tribute to the memory of the late JOHN L. BURNETT, of the seventh district of Alabama.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that a session of the House be held on Sunday, January 25, 1920, to pay tribute of respect to the memory of the late Representative BURNETT. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I desire but two minutes.

Mr. GOOD. I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina two minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the consideration of the urgent deficiency bill. I still think it would have been wiser if the matter had been put over to a time when the House could consider it. From the investigation I have made I have become convinced that the situation has changed since this proposition was considered in last June. Then the Public Health Service said they did not need this building, that they were endeavoring to get rid of some buildings they then had. They now state that they need this building. The Public Health Service, upon which we must rely as to the needs of the service, tell us that they need this hospital. They say, however, that if the hospital was built in accordance with the original act, suitable to the needs of the Public Health Service, it would take two and a half million dollars additional in order to so complete it. So that the question confronting us is whether we will agree to this proposition appropriating $3,000,000 and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to proceed to execute this contract, or whether we shall add two and a half million dollars, making it five and a half million dollars.

The Public Health Service says without the two and a half million dollars they can not have the kind of building that they need. I am told that they are asking for buildings for nurses and doctors outside of the hospital building. If that be true I do not approve of it. I think that in the building which is being constructed they should find ample space for housing the doctors and the nurses. I know that space must be provided, but they say they want a laboratory, and I am told that it can be provided in the building costing not more than $3,000,000.

I fear this is what is going to happen. I fear that after the proposal is agreed to and the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to execute this contract to have the building completed within the $3,000,000, that when it is completed what the Public Health Service says about it may be true and that it will be found not suited to their needs, and then they are going to come to Congress and ask for an appropriation for an additional two million dollars and a half to complete it, and Congress having directed the execution of the contract, having spent $3,000,000, will have to appropriate two and a half million dollars additional. If I thought that was not true I could support this proposition with a much clearer conscience than I am going to do it to-day.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. As far as I understand the situation, it is that the Secretary of the Treasury prepare plans for such buildings as he had suggested to him by the Public Health Service; that the people who are interested in this matter have agreed to complete the contract for the buildings on such a plan as he submits within the $3,000,000; that since that time the Public Health Service has suggested that they would like a lot of residential buildings——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will state to the gentleman that that is not quite accurate. The fact is that the plans submitted by the Public Health Service to the contractor in August and September were submitted with a view of ascertaining what kind of building they could build for $3,000,000 and not to present what the Public Health Service said they needed. But I am not interested at all in furnishing buildings, outside of the hospital building, along such lines as the gentleman describes and as I have been informed by others. What I want to know of the gentleman is will they come in and ask for two and a half million dollars more?

Mr. MADDEN. As far as I know, they will not.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I know that the gentleman is not in a position to speak for others interested in this proposition, but can he tell me what is the disposition of others who have been taking an interest in it?

Mr. MADDEN. I think that within the $3,000,000 proposed they can put up all of the buildings they need and all that are necessary, except the residential buildings, which I do not think ought to be constructed there at all.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] to say that this conferred no authority upon the Secretary of the Treasury which he did not have before and that it does not in any way increase the appropriation. Then what is its purpose?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It does this: Originally the act authorized the Secretary to execute this contract for a building suited to the needs of the Public Health Service. It was referred to the Public Health Service to see what is suited to its needs. When that service submitted its needs the Supervising Architect estimated that to complete the buildings in accordance with those needs would cost two and a half million dollars. This proposition is to direct the Secretary to complete the building, regardless of what the Public Health Service says about its needs.

Mr. BUTLER. Will it make it complete for $3,000,000?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This matter has been before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for two days. I live in Chicago, and with the Chicago people I am interested in the proposition. The two and a half million dollars that had been suggested by the Public Health Service would not only provide residences for all of the doctors and nurses and attendants at the hospital, but would provide also this other plan, to provide for a school for officers and nurses, to be of sufficient size to meet the necessities of the entire Public Health Service throughout the country. That is to say, they want a hospital and a plant in which they can house a school of instruction for officers and nurses to be trained for that service at all of the hospitals in the country, because they say the Broadview location is the best for that purpose. One word more——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I want the gentleman to tell me in that one word more whether he is going to come back here and ask for the two and a half million dollars.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am not. Let me say this: The plans which were submitted and discussed before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds show conclusively that $3,000,000 will provide everything in the way of construction for making a complete hospital plant. There is certain mechanical equipment which everyone understands is not a part of the construction of the building.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman, as I prefaced my remarks, that the situation has changed since last summer. Then the Public Health Service said they did not need this. Now they say they need it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who are familiar with the subject, say that for $3,000,000 they ought to complete the building. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], for whose opinion I always have the greatest respect, tells me that for $3,000,000 they can construct a magnificent hospital building. I accept his statement and will not object to consideration at this time. I am glad the gentlemen have committed themselves to the statement that they will not come back here and ask for the two and a half million dollars.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, Congress heretofore enacted a law which I think it thought would direct the Secretary of the Treasury to close the arrangement for the purchase of the Broadview Hospital for $3,000,000. The Secretary did not make the purchase for this reason. The Public Health Service said that it needed buildings outside of the hospital for use by the doctors and nurses, and so forth, which would cost two and a half million dollars. Thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury submitted the matter to the Comptroller of the Treasury, who said that under the law passed by Congress the Secretary was authorized to purchase this hospital for $3,000,000, but that it must be with ample facilities, and that as the Public Health Service now stated that it needed—not using this language—two and a half million dollars to complete additional buildings for the nurses and doctors, and so forth, he could not purchase the hospital for $3,000,000 at all because it would not be a complete hospital. The purpose of this item is to give the Secretary the right to purchase the hospital for $3,000,000 under the plan which has heretofore been approved, without including the useless and extravagant buildings which the service has suggested it ought to have at an expense of two and a half million dollars for the benefit of the doctors and the nurses.

There is no sense whatever in our constructing hospitals in the country with the idea that more than half the expense is to be used in putting up buildings, not for the patients, but for those who wait upon the patients. There will be ample room in this hospital to take care of all the doctors and nurses who need to room in the hospital. Some of them may have to live in dwellings a mile away. That is what one of the public health officials told me. I said, "Great God, a mile is not very far in Chicago. Nobody expects to transact business in Chicago within a mile of where he lives. That is nothing." Now, we do not desire that the Government shall go to the expense of putting up these additional buildings for the benefit of the nurses and the doctors. As far as I am concerned I am opposed to any useless, extravagant appropriations. Where we need to spend money to build hospitals for the benefit of soldiers who are now out of the service we ought to spend money building hospitals where the patients will go, not build fancy dwellings for doctors to live in.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. As I understand, Congress has already authorized the purchase of these buildings and also appropriated the money?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Congress has made the appropriation.

Mr. BUTLER. Made the appropriation and this will not increase the appropriation?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This will not increase the appropriation.

Mr. BUTLER. But it is calculated to limit the expense at that point?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is to build buildings in accordance with the present appropriation and does not contemplate what the Public Health Service did want, a gross expenditure for buildings that did not need to be built.

Mr. GOOD. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] raised a very pertinent and reasonable question when he asked, "If this bill does not provide for an appropriation what is the sense of passing it?" What is the occasion for this section when it is claimed that the appropriation is out of it? There may be a difference of opinion whether there is in it an appropriation or not. I think it conceals an indirect appropriation. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee thinks not. When the Public Health Service appeared before the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House and the Senate they represented that the Speedway proposition, as it was called, at Chicago could be completed within 60 days, and that it would accommodate a thousand patients within six months. Now, that bill was passed March 3, 1919. We all made speeches in this House advocating the erection of these hospitals for the disabled and crippled soldiers. We thought we were doing the patriotic thing. It drags along until July, and then we learn that the Secretary of the Treasury will not take this hospital, will not use it, because the Public Health Service finds that they need additional ornamental structures for physicians, surgeons, and various attendants. Then on July 11 we passed an act directing the Secretary of the Treasury to take over this hospital. Did he take it over? No. He goes ahead and prepares plans and specifications, and then more plans and specifications. And now the legal light of the Treasury Department comes in with an opinion that even the act of July 11 is not adequate to give the authority to take over this hospital. That is the only excuse for the provision of this deficiency act now under consideration. It is an authorization to the Secretary of the Treasury to complete the contract with the Shank concern and take over this Broadview Hospital. When we had the matter up in the committee yesterday we struck out the provision for the two and a half million dollars additional for these ornamental residential structures for the medical staff, and we also struck out the last sentence preceding that which we thought contained an invitation or suggestion, if not an authorization, to the Public Health Service to go into the old matter of building extensive alterations and additions which would justify them in coming back for an appropriation. That is the reason there is doubt in my mind as to whether or not this bill does not in a subterranean way contain the basis of an appropriation.

The language that we struck out was:

Together with such further changes in said buildings as may be found necessary or desirable.

I believe that that is simply an invitation to the Secretary of the Treasury to proceed with the construction of the additional buildings.

Mr. BUTLER. If that should be so, then we would be obliged later to pay for them, would we not?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Surely; but I am assured by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee that that paragraph or sentence does not contain this menace and danger. I am assured by my friend on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, from Chicago [Mr. CHINDBLOM], and some of the other gentlemen from that vicinity, that there is no such menace in this provision. That being the case, I will not insist upon my objection to it, but I think it ought to go into the RECORD clearly as the understanding of this House that that clause shall not give the authorization to the Secretary of the Treasury to spend any money for additional buildings.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, in order that this matter may be a little further explained, I want to say that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] was entirely correct when he said that when the matter was before the House before it did not have the approval of the Public Health Service. As it comes now it comes in an estimate from the Public Health Service and indorsed by the Secretary of the Treasury, that they need this hospital.

In order that my position in the matter may be explained and fully understood, I understand this amendment to read that this hospital, so far as the grounds, 320 acres, and this main hospital building, with the five auxiliary buildings, completed in accordance with the plans drawn by the Supervising Architect in the Treasury Department, and sent and transmitted to the Shank Co. on July 15, August 16, and September 23, 1919, are concerned, the $3,000,000 appropriated in the act of March 3, 1919, would acquire them all.

Mr. BUTLER. And no more to be added?

Mr. GOOD. And not a single dollar will be expected or asked for from Congress for the purchase of the land and the acquisition of the buildings. Of course, you have got to acquire some equipment for this hospital, as you do for all other hospitals. I do not know what that will amount to, but when the Surgeon General came before the Appropriations Committee in July or June, he objected to the acquisition of this hospital, because it was too large. And by the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, which has been transmitted to the Speaker of the House, he now asks for a mortuary chapel; an animal house, costing $120,000; female nurse quarters, costing $225,000; male attendants' quarters, costing $225,000; nurses' and aides' building, costing $320,000; internes' and students' buildings, costing $220,000; whereas under the specifications transmitted to the Shank Co. on the dates provided for in the bill all of these facilities were provided for in the main hospital building. Why, this hospital building is more than half a mile long. It is a concrete building, and there is ample room there to take care of all of the facilities. And the Public Health Service and the Secretary of the Treasury ought to understand that by taking this action it is the intention of Congress that this building and the 320 acres of land and the five auxiliary buildings shall all be acquired within the present limit of cost. The right granted the Secretary of the Treasury to secure numerous changes when necessary is a proper regulation, but should not be abused either by requiring changes that can not be made within the limit of cost so as to prevent the purchase or by obligating the Government for additional funds.

I approve of the action of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that eliminated both of the provisions of the request of the Secretary of the Treasury for an enlarged hospital; that this enlarged program, one of them carrying $7,468,760 for this hospital, should be eliminated, or the other hospital plan, provided for in Exhibit B, costing $5,500,000, should also be denied. This provision, as I understand it—and it seems to me any executive officer ought to understand it the same way—simply provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall proceed to do what the act of July 12 told the Secretary to do, to acquire this hospital within the limit of cost and no further. It will be useless, so far as I am concerned, for the Secretary or the Public Health Service to come before the Committee on Appropriations or any other committee of this House asking for anything in addition to the $3,000,000 already appropriated for the purpose of acquiring this hospital with these grounds and the five auxiliary buildings, so far as buildings or grounds are concerned.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Or the building of any other additional buildings?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly. I am in favor of that. That is all this amendment means.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. I will yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Somebody near me has asked me what the animal house was for, and, as showing the general trend of the Public Health Service, I will state that that same question was asked in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and it was ascertained that this animal house is for the purpose of raising animals for experimentation and vivisection purposes.

Mr. GOOD. Now, Mr. Speaker, the only difference between this provision carried in the bill and the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury is this:

This provision means that the hospital shall be acquired for $3,000,000, instead of either of the alternatives of $5,500,000 or $7,468,000, and so it seemed to the committee that there was nothing to do but to accept this, the lesser of the two evils.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman think that this bill is so safeguarded that they will not go ahead and start an immense plant here that will require in the end $2,500,000 or more millions of dollars to finish it after we are committed to the extent of $3,000,000? Then it will be worthless unless we go ahead and spend the other $2,500,000?

Mr. GOOD. Under the decision of the comptroller referred to in the Secretary's letter, they could not do that; and that is the reason, as I understand, why the Secretary is asking for this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question on the Senate amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate amendment was agreed to was laid on the table.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this concludes the program of legislation which we had hoped to dispose of before the Christmas holiday vacation. There remains nothing more to be done than the signing of a number of bills. I shall ask the immediate consideration of a resolution of adjournment until the 5th of January, and if that is adopted I shall then ask that the House stand in recess until 6 o'clock in order to give the Speaker an opportunity to sign certain bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that those bills are on the way over now from the Senate, so that 5 or 10 minutes' recess only will be necessary.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well; and after the bills shall have been signed I will ask that a recess be had until 5.30 so that the Speaker may sign that and the Sweet bill, which will reach here at the same time.

Mr. Speaker, I call up House concurrent resolution No. 23.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 23.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That when the two Houses complete the business of this day (the calendar day of Saturday, December 20, 1919), they shall stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, January 5, 1920.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House stand in recess for 10 minutes, and at the expiration of that time I shall ask that the House stand in recess until 11 o'clock to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess for 10 minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is the idea of this 10 minutes?

Mr. MONDELL. I explained a moment ago that there would be some Senate bills that would be here from the Senate shortly, and that we should take a recess until they were signed by the Speaker and then stand in recess until 11 o'clock to-night.

Mr. WALSH. The Senate bills are on their way over here, and when they get here the Speaker is going to sign them? Is that the idea?

Mr. MONDELL. That is the idea.

Mr. WALSH. The Senate bills are on their way over here now?

Mr. MONDELL. They are supposed to be. I think they will be here in 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess for 10 minutes.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8992. An act for the construction of a bridge across the Susquehanna River at Laceyville, Wyoming County, Pa.;

H. R. 10402. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permission to the municipal authorities of Little Chute, Wis., to construct, maintain, and operate sewers on certain Government property and under the United States canal at Little Chute, Wis.; and

H. R. 11223. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Employees' Compensation Commission, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and the Public Health Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

RECESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess until 11 o'clock to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that the House stand in recess until 11 o'clock to-night. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House (at 11 o'clock p. m.) resumed its session.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

S. 577. An act for the relief of the Southern States Lumber Co.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM AFTER THE HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to get some information from the majority leader about the program after the holiday recess. Would the gentleman mind stating what the probabilities are with reference to the program on reconvening, so that Members may know of the importance of the proposed legislation? Some of them may not want to come back at once.

Mr. MONDELL. If I recollect rightly, the Monday on which we are to reconvene will be unanimous-consent day, and the Unanimous Consent Calendar will probably be taken up. There may be some bills considered under suspension of the rules on that day. It is quite likely that there will be.

The Indian appropriation bill has been reported to the House. It is quite likely that it will be taken up soon after we reconvene.

I understand that the Post Office appropriation bill is practically ready, and it will probably be taken up soon after our reconvening. These two bills are likely to be considered the first week.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, those are the two appropriation bills?

Mr. MONDELL. Those are the important matters which are likely to come up first.

Mr. WINGO. Of course, if the conferees on the railroad bill should agree, the conference report on that bill would come up as soon as an agreement was reached, would it not?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; the conference report on the railroad bill will be considered, of course, as soon as they report an agreement, and it is entirely possible that the conferees will present for the consideration of the House the labor provisions in the railroad bill quite soon after we reconvene.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, you think there will possibly be a partial report from the conferees involving that feature of the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I think no one can say how soon the conferees may agree; but as soon as they do agree, of course, the matter will be taken up in the House.

We expect to begin a program of important legislation—principally appropriation bills—immediately on reconvening.

Mr. WINGO. Personally, I do not intend to leave Washington, but several gentlemen asked me about it. I told them I did not know. Frankly, I am making this inquiry in their behalf, so that they may read this in the RECORD. Some of them have already gone home. They have been tied down here continuously for a long time. Some of them have important matters requiring their attention and they might want to stay a little longer than the expiration of the recess. The statement of the program is an accommodation to them, so that they may be able to determine the date of their return.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not anticipate that there will be any serious contest over anything that will come up immediately after our reconvening, unless it might be on the railroad bill if the conference report is presented.

Mr. CANDLER. The Monday when we reconvene being unanimous-consent day, is it possible that the Unanimous Consent Calendar may be displaced by anything else, or will it certainly come up on that day?

Mr. MONDELL. I think it will come up, undoubtedly, and there will be some motions made, no doubt, to suspend the rules.

Mr. CANDLER. And probably the appropriation bills will be considered immediately after the unanimous-consent Monday?

Mr. MONDELL. They will.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman will remember that the President suggested that the railroads would be turned back to their owners on January 1. There is no possibility of the conference report coming up to be acted upon before that date. Has the gentleman any information at all as to the purpose of the President in regard to that matter?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no further knowledge of the President's purpose than that I have been able to gain from the newspapers. I presume the gentleman has followed the discussion of that matter in the newspapers. I think it is quite generally understood that the President does not now contemplate returning the roads to their owners on January 1.

Mr. FESS. I presumed that was true, but I wondered whether the legislators here had any definite information upon that subject.

Mr. MONDELL. Some of the gentlemen directly connected with the matter may have, but I have nothing more than what I have gleaned from the newspapers and from gentlemen who I think are fairly well informed.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for another question right there?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. One of the matters that undoubtedly would have come up early in January from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization which has been under investigation by them has been, I think, happily disposed of. The committee and the Department of State have been at work upon it for a number of years.

The Department of State issued the following note this evening:

The Japanese Ambassador, under instructions from his Government, has the honor to make the following communication to the Government of the United States:

"The Japanese Government, placing supreme importance upon the promotion of the friendly relations between Japan and the United States, and having carefully examined in that spirit the situation created by the question of the so-called 'picture brides,' have decided to adopt measures for the prohibition of such brides from proceeding to the continental United States."

This will end that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks debate is not in order at this time.

ADJOURNMENT FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the resolution already adopted, I move that the House do now adjourn until Monday, January 5, 1920.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, January 5, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting draft of proposed legislation transferring certain land at the southeast corner of the Federal building site at Baltimore, Md., to that city (H. Doc. No. 537); to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Interstate Commerce Commission for valuation of property of carriers and for general expenses of the commission, fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 538); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Bureau of Standards for sugar standardization, fiscal year 1921 (H. Doc. No. 539); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation for the Morgan City (La.) post office and for the United States mint at Philadelphia, Pa. (H. Doc. No. 540); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting two lists, one containing information concerning employees of the Department of Agriculture who are performing outside duties, and the other containing information concerning employees of the Department of Agriculture having certain relatives in the Government service (H. Doc. No. 541); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we cease not in all the years to make mention of Thy name and to call upon Thee in reverence and godly fear. When our fathers declared their independence of the nations of the earth they proclaimed their dependence upon Thy divine providence, and in the day that tests the moral and spiritual fiber of our civilization we still feel the need of God's guidance and blessing. So at the beginning of this session we come lifting up our hearts to Thee, putting ourselves as best we can in the divine hands, to be guided and blessed and owned by the great God of our fathers.

We come together remembering one of our companions in service who sits in the shadow of a great sorrow this morning. Bless, we pray Thee, this one where human sympathy can not come and where the touch of human hands can not heal. Do Thou come by Thy tender sympathy and care to give hope and courage and blessing.

Hear us in our prayer, fit us for the service of the day, and save us for Christ's sake. Amen.

PORTER J. MCCUMBER, a Senator from the State of North Dakota, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Tuesday, December 16, 1919, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement showing the number of employees and their compensation in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing whose compensation is paid from "Expenses of loans" and "Compensation of employees," etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES AS COMMISSIONED OFFICERS (S. DOC. NO. 173).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy relative to the receipt of a resolution of December 10, 1919, requesting a statement showing the name, rank and title, and compensation of every officer in the Navy Department, etc., and stating that the information desired will be furnished at the earliest possible date, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

THE BOTANIC GARDEN (H. DOC. NO. 554).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Superintendent of the United States Botanic Garden, transmitting a statement of travel by employees of his office to points outside the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1919, which was referred to the Committee on the Library and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11224) to amend the act entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," approved October 16, 1918, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FERNALD presented a petition of sundry citizens of Brunswick, Me., praying for the ratification of the league of nations covenant and the peace treaty, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CURTIS presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the State officers of Kansas, favoring a Federal investigation of lynchings in the various States, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 586, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Concordia, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the suppression of anarchy and the deportation of undesirable aliens, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Booster Club of Garnett, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation for the prevention and punishment of extreme radicalism, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Ellsworth, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Siegel bill, providing for the marking of cost prices on articles of merchandise for sale, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Sheridan Post, No. 90, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Coffeyville, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the suppression of anarchism and the deportation of undesirable aliens, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBINSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Van Buren, Ark., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for superannuated civil-service employees, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MYERS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Boston, Mass.; Kansas City, Mo.; Heron Lake, Minn.; Long Beach, Calif.; St. James, Mo.; Chicago, Ill.; Durham, N. C.; St. Albans, Vt.; Seattle, Wash.; Elizabeth, N. J.; and Wichita, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit experiments upon living dogs in the District of Columbia or any of the Territorial or insular possessions of the United States, and providing a penalty for violations thereof, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a petition of citizens residing in Colombia and having interests therein, asking for the ratification of the Colombian treaty. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. I present sundry resolutions adopted by the commercial clubs and other organizations in my State, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMERCIAL CLUB,
LARIMORE, N. DAK.

The following resolutions were indorsed and adopted by the Larimore Commercial Club, December 19, A. D. 1919:

"Whereas there has been introduced into the Congress a bill known as the Siegel bill, which provides that all merchants and everyone who deals in foodstuffs, commodities, and merchandise of every kind shall mark the gross cost price on them in plain figures; and

"Whereas the aforementioned law would work a hardship and ruination to legitimate business throughout the Nation for the reason that consumers have no means of knowing the cost of doing business in any particular line and the necessity for charging wide margins on fancy or perishable goods or those seldom called for, but must be carried for a long time to accommodate the trade, and, further, that the public can not appreciate the risks run by dealers in credits, fires, and other ways; and

"Whereas we believe the interference with legitimate business and the natural economic laws by the enactment of this law would be extremely vicious. It is our belief that the present unrest throughout the Nation—the extreme manifestation of which is Bolshevism—is encouraged and promoted by similar laws and the present policy of interference with legitimate business, which is giving the public an exaggerated impression of the misdeeds and unearned profits of all capital employed in business, the wrong deeds of a few being by implication attributed to all: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Larimore Commercial Club, That we place ourselves on record as being unalterably opposed to the enactment of the Siegel bill and all like bills; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to our United States Senators and Representatives in Congress, and that they be requested and urged to oppose the aforesaid Siegel bill and all bills of like import."

J. DEXTER PEIRCE, Secretary.

THE COMMERCIAL CLUB,
LARIMORE, N. DAK.

The following resolutions were indorsed and adopted by the Larimore Commercial Club, December 19, A. D. 1919:

"Whereas civilization and organized society is threatened by sedition and anarchy, openly preached and organized, to a very alarming extent; and

"Whereas there is no law on our statute books to protect us from this very real and most frightful danger; and

"Whereas Congressman MARTIN L. DAVEY has introduced a bill, known as H. R. 10650, designed to meet the emergency: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Larimore Commercial Club, That we do most heartily and emphatically indorse said bill, H. R. 10650, and would most earnestly urge the Congress to adopt the same without delay, with sufficient appropriation for its effective enforcement, as we deem it one of the most important, most necessary, and most urgent measures now before Congress; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress and to Congressman DAVEY."

J. DEXTER PEIRCE, Secretary.

THE COMMERCIAL CLUB,
LARIMORE, N. DAK.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Larimore Commercial Club, December 19, 1919:

"Whereas, first, there has long existed in this country the thought that labor should have the right to combine to strike in order to better its condition of employment and its compensation therefor; and

"Second, in recognition of this so-called right the Federal antitrust acts have been so amended as to legalize it; and,

"Third, certain rights are also guaranteed to all the people of the United States under the Constitution, to wit, the right to labor without outside dictation or interference, and in like manner to enjoy the fruits of such labor and in general the pursuit of happiness; and,

"Fourth, said rights have been invaded by the unrestrained exercise of the right to strike by the labor organizations until the unrestrained exercise of said power now threatens to become competitive and in conflict with the power of the Nation; and,

"Fifth, said power and said so-called rights have been conferred without restriction, and said power and said rights have been abused by national strikes by a minority of the workers, threatening the very life of the people through famine and exposure to the elements: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Larimore Commercial Club, That the attention of our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States be called to this situation, and that they be requested to bring about a revision of these antitrust acts and the enactment of other acts, to wit:

"(a) To repeal all acts conferring privileges upon special classes, so that all classes of citizens be made equal in fact before the law;

"(b) That the Federal antitrust act declare all combinations in restraint of trade which are injurious to the public good to be unlawful;

"(c) That said act recognize that while certain combinations might not be injurious to the entire public, they might be injurious to individuals whose rights should be respected, and that it therefore provide that every combination, voluntary or otherwise, shall adequately make itself financially responsible for the acts of its officers, its agents, and its members, and place itself in position where it can be made legally and actually answerable for all injury caused thereby; and

"(d) That there be enacted into law the principles of arbitration."

J. DEXTER PEIRCE, Secretary.

We, the undersigned, are opposed to and will endeavor to defeat by voice and vote any and all railroad legislation and legislators endeavoring to validate watered stock, pass antistrike legislation, or return the roads immediately under any plan without giving full and just consideration to all plans.

DEVILS LAKE, N. DAK.

Whereas more than one year has elapsed since the signing of the armistice, and practically nothing has been done by Congress in the line of beneficial legislation for ex-service men and women; and

Whereas the national convention of the American Legion held at Minneapolis, Minn., on November 10, 11, and 12, 1919, went on record as being in favor of additional compensation in the form of a bonus for ex-service men and women, and, although no specific sum was named, the sentiment of the convention seemed to be that about $1 per day for each day of service would be just and right; and

Whereas said convention went on record as being in favor of a plan whereby ex-service men could borrow money from the Government for a long term at a low rate of interest for the purpose of buying or developing farms or city homes: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Tim Running Post, No. 24, of the North Dakota Department of the American Legion, respectfully requests and petitions the Members of Congress from North Dakota to use all their energy and influence so that Congress may adopt measures embodying the above recommendations of the American Legion without any further delay, and we especially request that these matters be advanced on the legislative calendar, so that this beneficial legislation may be adopted within the next few weeks.

BROTHERHOOD RAILWAY CARMEN OF AMERICA,
Devils Lake, N. Dak., December 12, 1919.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: There is considerable legislation pending in Congress at the present time relative to turning the roads back to private control. Among the several bills now under consideration are clauses that are a direct affront to organized labor.

Chief among these is the clause prohibiting strikes. Legislation of this kind, instead of bringing about harmony between employer and employee, only adds fuel to the flames of discontent, and you may rest assured that it will be met with the strongest of opposition. Organized labor refuses to go back to the days of involuntary servitude, and we wish to inform our Representatives in Washington that we desire no laws of this kind and that we wish to retain the roads under Federal control for at least two years, so that it can be demonstrated that Federal control can be made a grand success instead of a failure, as the kept press would lead us to believe.

We realize that there is a large deficit, but we know that the private corporations could not run the roads one cent cheaper; in fact, we know that the corporation officials to a large extent have not exerted themselves to make a success of the administration. We are told daily that the Government is incapable of properly handling the roads. To make assertions of this kind only belittles our Government. We have seen railroads go into the hands of the receiver and seen the Government step in and straighten matters out and put the road on its feet again.

We have faith in our Government, and we are frank in saying that America is no place for those who have not. All we want is to be treated as Americans and our Government given a chance to demonstrate its ability in time of peace as well as in time of war.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN WILLIAMS, President.

FARGO, N. DAK., November 25, 1919.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: At a meeting of former Fargo service men, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas we consider that all soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the World War made great sacrifices that the war might be won; and

"Whereas the purchase of Liberty bonds, the payment of the premium on insurance, and the allotments absorbed all of the private's pay; and

"Whereas the $60 bonus was not sufficient to purchase clothing equal to that which was discarded when we entered the service: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the undersigned respectfully ask you to work and vote for the passage of the private soldiers' and sailors' legion bill now pending in Congress, providing:

"'1. For Government employment of demobilized service men who are unable to secure work in private employment.

"'2. A share in the unused land of the United States for all veterans of the World War.

"'3. A $500 cash bonus for all veterans.

"'4. Just and liberal compensation for all wounded and disabled veterans.

"'5. Review and rectification of all court-martial sentences, and return of court-martial fines for minor offenses.

"'6. Repeal of the taxes on luxuries such as ice cream, soda water, soft drinks, and moving pictures.'

MINOT LODGE No. 1089, B. P. O. E.,
Minot, N. Dak., December 16, 1919.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: On December 6, 1919, the Minot Lodge of Elks, No. 1089, after due consideration, adopted the following resolution and instructed me, as committee chairman, to forward to you a copy of said resolution:

"Resolved, That we view with deep concern the spread of disloyalty and seditious sentiments promulgated by syndicalists, I. W. W's., and Bolsheviki.

"That we believe that the time has arrived when Americans should assert themselves and drive from their shores all disloyal agents, and adequately punish those who betray their country by disloyal acts. We hereby call upon the United States Congress to immediately enact a law providing for the summary deportation of every alien in the country who is an enemy of this Government.

"That the law should further provide for the immediate cancellation of the citizenship papers of any naturalized citizen affiliated with and lending aid and comfort to such enemy aliens.

"That we believe no person should be permitted to issue or circulate any writing or pamphlet which has for its apparent object the undermining of American institutions or the inciting of rebellion."

MINOT LODGE No. 1089,
(Consisting of 800 loyal American citizens.)
By ARTHUR M. THOMPSON,
Chairman Committee on Resolutions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I present a resolution adopted in Pittsfield, Mass., at a meeting of 700 representative men and women of Berkshire County, asking for the early ratification of the treaty with such interpretative reservations as may be necessary to secure the acquiescence of other nations. I ask that the resolution may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PITTSFIELD, MASS., January 3, 1920.

GILBERT M. HITCHCOCK,
United States Senator from Nebraska.

MY DEAR SENATOR: At a meeting of 700 representative men and women of Berkshire County, held in the interest of the ratification of the peace treaty with the league of nations covenant and addressed by President Woolley, of Mount Holyoke College, and by Dean Charles H. Haskins, of the Graduate School of Harvard University, the following motion was unanimously adopted:

"We, a body of men and women of Berkshire County, gathered in Pittsfield, Mass., on Sunday, December 28, 1919, are convinced that it is supremely important that the Senate at the earliest possible moment should ratify the treaty of peace and the league of nations covenant with such proper and necessary interpretative reservations as will readily permit the other signatories to acquiesce in the conditions stated by the United States. We, therefore, hereby move that the Senators be urged to promote such action."

JULIA VAN RENSSELAER CROWELL, Secretary.

Mr. HARRISON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Eret, Miss., praying for the retention of Government control of railroads for two years, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution of the Philomathean Society of Cumberland University, favoring the ratification of the league of nations, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the faculty of the University of Kansas, Lawrence, Kans., together with a petition of the American Chemical Society, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the encouragement and protection of the American dye industry, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Local Branch Kansas Federation of Women's Clubs, of Lyons, Kans., praying for the incorporation of relative rank for Army nurses in Army reorganization legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the University Monthly Meeting of Friends, of Wichita, Kans., remonstrating against the shipment of intoxicating liquors to Cuba and foreign countries, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Ministerial Association of Wichita, Kans., remonstrating against intervention in Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Ellsworth, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Siegel bill, providing for the marking of the cost price on articles of merchandise offered for sale, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Hepler, Kans., remonstrating against compulsory military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STERLING presented petitions of the faculty of the Dakota Wesleyan University, Mitchell, S. Dak., and of sundry citizens of Corsica, S. Dak., praying for the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ELKINS presented a petition of Huntington Post, No. 16, American Legion, of Huntington, W. Va., praying for the enactment of legislation for the suppression of anarchism, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of Local Lodge No. 85, International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Drop Forgers, and Helpers, and of sundry employees of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, of Huntington, W. Va., remonstrating against the immediate return of railroads to private ownership, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MYERS presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Oswego, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a revolving fund to furnish seed grain to farmers in drought-stricken regions, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McLEAN presented petitions of the Men's Bible Class of the First Church of Christ of West Hartford, of sundry citizens of Watertown, and of Local Grange No. 64, Patrons of Husbandry, of Storrs, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the New London County Pomona Grange, No. 6, Patrons of Husbandry, of Norwich, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the marking by the manufacturers thereof of the percentage of wool in all woolen clothing fabrics, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of Palos Council, No. 35, Knights of Columbus, of Bristol, Conn., remonstrating against the taking over by the War Department of the war activities of the Knights of Columbus, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the University Club, of Hartford, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the retirement of physically disabled emergency officers of the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Hartford, Waterbury, and Bridgeport, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the retirement of civil-service employees, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Leon Goodale Post, No. 56, American Legion, of Glastonbury, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the suppression of anarchy and the deportation of undesirable aliens, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 620. A bill authorizing the issuance of patent to the Pioneer Educational Society and its successors for certain lands in the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, State of Washington (Rept. No. 344); and

H. R. 400. A bill authorizing the Sioux Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims (Rept. No. 345).

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3391. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the sale of the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, Okla.," approved February 8, 1918 (40 Stat. L., p. 433) (Rept. No. 346); and

H. R. 396. A bill to authorize the payment of certain amounts for damages sustained by prairie fire on the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in South Dakota (Rept. No. 345).

BENJAMIN O. KERLEE.

Mr. FERNALD. I report back favorably, with an amendment, from the Committee on Claims the bill (S. 25) for the relief of Benjamin O. Kerlee and I submit a report (No. 348) thereon. I believe the bill ought to have immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is that a suggestion or is it a request of the Senator from Maine for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FERNALD. I make the request.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be first read, Mr. President.

The bill was read.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I hope there may be unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this bill. It presents a very pitiable case and involves the expenditure by the Government of only $1,200. The claim has been very carefully and thoroughly investigated by the Claims Committee and the bill has been unanimously recommended for passage. The bill has been long delayed, partially through my fault in not having time, owing to my many and pressing duties, to obtain for the committee and present all of the evidence required and press the matter before the committee. I know it is a thoroughly meritorious claim.

The bill now having been unanimously recommended for passage, I urge its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, line 6, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,200," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Benjamin O. Kerlee the sum of $1,200 for injuries received while employed in the service of the Government as a workman in the Kaniksu National Forest, in the State of Idaho, during the year 1915.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD in order that the House committee may have the benefit of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report submitted this day by Mr. FERNALD is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 25) for the relief of Benjamin O. Kerlee, having considered the same, report favorably thereon, with the recommendation that the bill do pass with an amendment.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out of line 6 of the printed bill the figures "5,000" following the dollar mark and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "1,200," so as to provide for the appropriation of $1,200 instead of $5,000, and as so amended the committee reports the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

Benjamin O. Kerlee is 36 years of age. He has living a wife and five children. All of the children are young and helpless, the eldest being 10 years of age. He has no means or property, and is in very poor circumstances financially.

Mr. Kerlee resides at Missoula, Mont. He has always lived in that section of the country. In the spring of 1915, while residing in Ravalli County, Mont., he entered the United States Forest Service under a temporary appointment as temporary workman. He had passed the examination for forest ranger and had promise of a permanent appointment as forest ranger, to begin June 1, 1915. His compensation while serving under a temporary appointment as temporary workman was the equivalent of $1,200 per year. May 12, 1915, after he had been in the service about two months in the Priest River country, in the State of Idaho, on a forest reserve, Government land, while in the employ of the United States Government as a temporary workman of the Forest Service, and while performing his duties as such, in the course of such employment, without any fault or neglect of his, a dead forest tree on the forest reserve fell on him and dislocated his shoulder blade and broke two ribs and crushed the ankle of his left leg, breaking such ankle and breaking five or six bones therein; and he sustained other bruises and internal injuries. He was taken to a hospital, where he was confined four months, when he was sent to his home at Hamilton, Mont. While in the hospital an operation on his ankle was performed by a surgeon, by direction of the United States Forest Service officials. It appears that the broken ankle bones were improperly set. After returning home, on account of such faulty surgical operation, it appears he had to have performed on his ankle another operation, which latter operation was not entirely successful.

Mr. Kerlee was confined to his bed the greater part of a year. For the period of 14 months he was unable to perform any labor at all. He was kept on the Government pay roll one year from the time he entered the service, being 10 months after his injury. He was paid in all one year's salary, of which he earned that portion representing two months. Thus he was paid a salary of $100 per month for 10 months while confined to his bed, being the sum of $1,000. That is all he has ever received from the Government.

Mr. Kerlee has never been able to do any work of much consequence since he was hurt. He has had performed at his own expense several operations on his injured ankle. It appears it was improperly treated at the beginning and that it has been impossible since then to remedy the harm he sustained and to overcome the injury. He is still lame. For nearly five years he has been able to do but little work. He has performed some light work at odd jobs but has never been able to hold a position long. He is incapacitated for manual labor of any consequence. His doctors inform him that he will have to have another operation performed. This will cost him about $600, and the loss of time involved will be from 8 to 12 months. His foot will have to be in a plaster of Paris cast from four to six months. He has no money or means. His long confinement, enforced idleness, and repeated operations consumed all he had. His father and other relatives have helped him almost to the extent of their ability. He is in debt to stores, banks, and doctors to the extent of about $2,500, besides having expended $800 of his own money. The probability is he will never again be strong or sound but always a cripple.

He is now able to do some light work, and earns a little money but not enough to support himself and family. His scant earnings are supplemented by occasional contributions from his father. His father is not able to do more than help out with enough barely to sustain the son and his family. These facts are sustained by affidavits of Mr. Kerlee and certificates from physicians.

This bill was referred by the committee to the Secretary of Agriculture for his opinion and such information as he might give. His response was as follows:

AUGUST 2, 1919.

Hon. SELDEN P. SPENCER,
Chairman Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Receipt is acknowledged of your request of July 29 for a report upon the bill (S. 25) for the relief of Benjamin Kerlee, together with the papers, or copies of the same, on file in this department, and for the department's opinion as to the merits of the claim.

In accordance with your request, there is inclosed a complete copy of all papers in this case on file in the Forest Service, as follows:

Forms C. A.–1 B.
Forms C. A.–4 B.
Forms C. A.–5 B.
Forms C. A.–8.
Forms C. A.–15 A.
Forms C. A.–2 B.
Forms C. A.–15 A.

Letter of May 10, 1015, from the district forester to the forest supervisor.

Letter of December 15, 1915, from Benjamin Kerlee to the district forester.

Letter of December 20, 1915, to Benjamin Kerlee, signed by acting district forester.

Letter of December 20, 1915, to the forester, signed by acting district forester.

Letter of December 30, 1915, to the district forester, signed by assistant forester.

Letter of June 2, 1916, to the chief clerk, Forest Service, signed by the chief clerk, Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The records in the Forest Service show that Benjamin O. Kerlee, a laborer employed in connection with the building of a telephone line on the Kaniksu National Forest, was struck by a falling snag while leading a horse along a trail in the performance of his duties as packer and was rendered incapable of doing work of the kind for which he was employed during a period lasting more than one year. While Mr. Kerlee would not have been employed for the entire year had the injury not occurred, under the language of the compensation act of May 30, 1908, and the regulations of the Secretary of Labor, he was paid full compensation, including the commuted value of the subsistence which would have been received by him as a part of his compensation for the full period of one year. His rate of money compensation was $2.50 per day and the value of the subsistence $1 per day. Mr. Kerlee was paid at this rate for 366 days; the total amount received by him was $1,281. At the end of the compensation period the forest supervisor reported that Mr. Kerlee claimed to be still temporarily incapacitated for resuming the duties upon which he was engaged at the time of injury, although his ankle continued to improve, and that he had changed his occupation to that of barber, for which he would not be incapacitated.

This department has no information regarding Kerlee's present condition or his occupation. The record does show that he was incapacitated at the expiration of the period for which he could be compensated under the act of May 30, 1908.

This appears to be one of those unfortunate cases wherein an employee of the Government while performing official service received injuries for which the administrative officials, under the existing law, could not make adequate compensation. The department is of the opinion that the case, in general, is a meritorious one, but it is a question for the Congress to determine whether and to what extent he should receive further compensation on account of the injuries suffered by him and his consequent incapacity.

In accordance with your request, the affidavit signed by Mr. Kerlee, which was transmitted with your letter, is returned herewith.

Very truly, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

This is a pitiable case, but the general rule being not to pay a claimant who was an employee of the Government when injured more than one year's salary, the committee decided to recommend an appropriation for this claimant of one year's salary—$1,200. It believes that much should be awarded him. The circumstances of the case are so pitiable that a larger sum might justly be awarded, but the committee does not deem it wise to go beyond its usual rule of an allowance of one year's salary. Therefore the committee recommends an appropriation of $1,200, and has recommended that the bill be so amended as to provide therefor. With that amendment the committee is unanimously and emphatically of the opinion that the bill should be enacted.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 3603) providing for the removal of the remains of certain soldiers, sailors, and marines to the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3604) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in matter of the claim of the Overton Hotel Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3605) granting an increase of pension to Andred Tanner; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HENDERSON:

A bill (S. 3606) for the relief of the next of kin of Herman Okerman; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HENDERSON (for Mr. PHELAN):

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3639) making an appropriation for the further reclamation of arid lands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I introduce the bill which I send to the desk, and I ask for its appropriate reference. A little later, during the morning hour, I shall ask to submit one or two observations in respect to the bill and its importance.

The bill (S. 3612) to authorize the United States Bureau of Efficiency to provide for the promotion, transfer, and discharge of certain employees of the executive departments, bureaus, boards, commissions, and agencies, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To what committee does the Senator desire the bill referred?

Mr. KING. I am not sure to which committee the bill should go—whether it should be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment or to the Committee on the Judiciary. I will, however, ask that it may go to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be so referred.

Mr. GORE. I introduce a joint resolution in the nature of a proposed amendment to the Constitution, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 140) amending the Constitution of the United States so as to make citizenship a qualification to vote for Members of Congress was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and is hereby, proposed to the States, to be valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided by the Constitution:

"No person other than a citizen of the United States shall be entitled to vote for Senators and Representatives in Congress or for electors to choose a President and a Vice President when such electors are chosen by direct vote of the people."

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. STERLING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission, and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands in the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. NUGENT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission, and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands in the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. PHIPPS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H. R. 3184, an act to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

Mr. POMERENE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3317) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

LIVING CONDITIONS OF TRAINMEN.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I offer a resolution, which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The resolution (S. Res. 267) was read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it is hereby, requested to investigate and report upon living conditions of trainmen who are compelled to lie over between trips at terminals of railroads, and also to investigate the feasibility on the part of railroad companies of furnishing to their men such accommodations.

STOCKYARD LICENSES.

Mr. NORRIS. I submit a Senate resolution calling on the Secretary of Agriculture for certain information, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 266) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate the names of all live-stock commission agents who, and companies, corporations, or firms which, in the exercise of the powers conferred on him under the licensing proclamations of the President for the licensing of stockyards, dated June 18, 1918, and September 6, 1918, in pursuance of the act approved October 22, 1917, commonly known as the food-control act, have been found to have charged extortionate prices or fees for food furnished or for other services rendered, and to supply the Senate with a statement of the procedure had in all of such cases, and the present status of each case.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. KING. As in open executive session, I offer a resolution and I ask that it may lie on the table. A number of petitions have been presented this morning asking for the speedy ratification of the treaty with Germany. If no action is taken within a reasonable time by the Senate looking toward the ratification of the treaty, I shall move that the Senate, as in open executive session, proceed to the consideration of this resolution. I hope during the day to have an opportunity to submit some remarks dealing with the resolution and in support of the proposition that the Senate should, at an early date, act upon the pending treaty.

The resolution was read and ordered to lie on the table and be printed, as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany concluded at Versailles on the 28th day of June, 1919, subject to the following reservations and understandings, which shall be incorporated in the act of ratification, which act shall take effect and be binding upon the United States when the said reservations and understandings are accepted or otherwise assented to by three of the principal allied and associated powers:

1. The United States ratifies said treaty with the reservations and understandings hereinafter set forth upon the express condition that the United States may withdraw from the league of nations upon serving two years' notice, notwithstanding the proviso in the last section of article 1, but such withdrawal shall not absolve the United States from its obligations under international law or under treaties to which it otherwise has assented.

2. The United States so construes and understands article 10 that whatever obligation arises from said article or other provisions of the covenant of the league of nations to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States, it shall not become effective as to the United States unless Congress by appropriate action shall so provide.

3. The United States will not accept any mandate under article 22 or any other provision of the treaty, except as Congress may in its discretion determine.

4. The United States reserves to itself the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction, and declares that all domestic and political questions relating to its internal affairs, including immigration, labor, coastwise traffic, tariff, commerce, the suppression of traffic of women and children, and all purely domestic questions, are solely within the jurisdiction of the United States and are not under this treaty submitted in any way to the jurisdiction of the league or to any organization or authority created thereby and existing thereunder.

5. That the long-established policy of the United States, known as the Monroe doctrine, as announced and interpreted by the United States, is not in any way impaired or affected by the covenant of the league of nations and is declared to be wholly outside of the jurisdiction of the league of nations and unaffected by any provisions contained in said treaty of peace with Germany.

6. The United States understands that the German rights and interests renounced by Germany in favor of Japan under the provisions of articles 156, 157, and 158 of said treaty are to be returned by Japan to China within a reasonable time after the adoption of said treaty, as provided in the exchanged notes between the Japanese and Chinese Governments under date of May 25, 1915. Accordingly the United States withholds its assent to said articles.

7. No person shall be appointed to represent the United States in connection with the execution of said treaty except as Congress shall by law provide.

8. The reparation commission provided for by said treaty shall not have power to interfere with the commerce between the United States and Germany, except in conformity with an act or joint resolution of Congress.

9. The United States, in the event of war or invasion, shall not be bound to observe the limitation of armaments to which it may have agreed, but reserves the right in such case to take such military measures and provide such armaments as Congress may in its discretion determine to be adequate for the defense of the United States.

10. The United States shall not be obligated to contribute to the expenses of the league of nations or of any official thereof, or of any organization or commission thereunder, unless and until Congress shall have by appropriate legislation provided therefor.

11. The provisions of article 16, requiring the prohibition of intercourse between nationals of the United States and of covenant-breaking States, shall be applied to the nationals of such States residing within the United States only to such extent and in such manner as Congress in its discretion may determine.

12. The provisions of articles 296 and 297 and of the annexes thereto shall not, as against citizens of the United States, be construed to confirm, ratify, approve, legalize, or validate any act otherwise illegal or in contravention of the rights of citizens of the United States.

13. The United States withholds its assent to article 23, except as the matters within such article are, or hereafter may become, the subject of international conventions to which the United States is a party.

14. The United States withholds its assent to Part XIII, comprising articles 387 to 427, inclusive, and will not be bound to participate in or contribute to the expenses of the organizations contemplated by said articles, except as Congress may hereafter in its discretion determine.

15. The United States will not be bound by any decision, finding, or other action taken by the council or by the assembly of the league of nations to which the United States has not assented, in any case in which the interests of the United States are involved and where the member whose interests are adverse to the United States, has given more than one vote by itself or through the votes of other members of the league which may have a political connection with such member.

CONTROL OF FOOD PRODUCTS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on the 20th of December last I received a letter from Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, who asked me among other things to introduce it and have it printed as a part of the RECORD. I cheerfully comply with that request and ask at the same time unanimous consent to have inserted also a copy of my reply.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., December 20, 1919.

SIR: Your letter of December 1, commenting on a statement made by me as to the intention of Congress when it passed the Lever food-control bill, received.

You state you do not for a moment question the sincerity of that statement. You add, however, that the comments of Senators HOLLIS and CHAMBERLAIN, which you quoted several days ago in the Senate, indicated a clear division of opinion regarding the effects of the bill upon existing laws.

A copy of my statement as sent to you also was mailed to Senator CHAMBERLAIN with a request that he submit an opinion as to the justice of the claim that Congress never intended labor strikes should be considered a violation of the then proposed food-control act. His answer, to my mind, indicates there was no division of opinion such as you suggest. Senator CHAMBERLAIN states in his letter, which is dated November 24, 1919:

In reply to your request for my opinion on the subject, permit me to say that I did not think the amendment was necessary, because I did not think it was the purpose of the food-control bill in any way to amend or repeal the Clayton antitrust act dealing with the right of men to strike for the purpose of adjusting their wages or to better their living conditions. I so stated, as your paper shows, on the floor of the Senate, and substantially the same views were entertained and the same statements made by other Members of the Senate and of the House.

No stronger evidence that no differences of opinion existed could be advanced than the statement made a few days ago by Senator CHAMBERLAIN after reading the history prepared by me of the passage of the food-control act.

You state that in the summer of 1918 you sought by amendment of the second draft bill to suspend the exemption of the striker and send him to the front, but that I opposed it with the vast influences behind me.

Why should not an American citizen oppose such a drastic measure? It was not considered in good faith, but as a part of a campaign by the most bitter enemies of labor to discourage all the efforts of the workers to maintain a standard of living to which they were entitled and were guaranteed in a proclamation by the President of the United States. It would also convince the workers in the allied countries that we were a nation of slackers instead of loyal citizens determined to win the war at all costs. Congress very sensibly refused to commit this country to such a course. The fact that it refused is sufficient answer to the inferences you suggest.

That you have misunderstood the American wage earners can best be shown by the following statement by Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, made in September, 1918, near the end of the war:

When the story of America's participation in this war comes to be written, the formation of our great Army, its transfer across the seas, and the heroic battles in which it engaged will no doubt be given the most impressive place, but the wise historian will analyze the causes which made these things possible, and high among them he will find the patriotism and zeal of American labor.

Labor has brought from the mines and fields the raw materials upon which our war industries have had to depend; it has manned the workshops and factories in which those materials were fashioned into articles necessary for the equipment and supply of the soldiers; it has operated the trains and manned the ships which carried the soldiers and their supplies to the field of conflict; it has rested under the Army as a firm foundation; and in the mobilization of our national resources it has brought itself together in a spirit of service without which our financial and military efforts could not have gone forward.

This splendid cooperation on the part of labor in America has been free and voluntary; the spirit which produced it is fundamentally the democratic spirit of our institutions, the establishment of which is the reason and justification for America's participation in the war.

But labor's part in this war has not been limited to the industrial side. It has given to the Army, both for technical service and for soldier duty, tens of thousands of its craftsmen and workmen. Those who could not be spared have been kept at home, often against their wish, and those who have remained at home have taken on the additional tasks of those who went to the front, in order that the great industrial basis of the Military Establishment should be sound and strong.

The country hails its Army abroad and its Army at home as partners in the great conflict which America is waging for freedom.

Your figures concerning the number of strikes during the war are somewhat misleading. You state that between the beginning of the war and the signing of the armistice there were 6,408 strikes. In 4,201 of these, you say, the number of strikers aggregated 2,386,285. The inference is that there were not only more strikes while the war was in progress but that there were more men on strike than ever before. If you will compare your statement with the following from the Monthly Bulletin of the Department of Labor for June, 1919, from which you state you quoted, you will find you have misread the figures:

	Number strikers.
1916	1,546,428
1917	1,193,867
1918	1,192,418

You will therefore observe that during both of the years of the war, when 50 per cent more workers were employed in the country, there were about 350,000 fewer strikers than in 1916, a peace year.

The strikes during the war period are summed up in this statement by the same bulletin:

Between April 6, 1917, the date of our entrance into the war, and November 11, 1918, the date of the signing of the armistice, 6,206 strikes and lockouts occurred. The bureau has statements that but 388 strikes and lockouts, occurring during the 19 months of actual warfare, were in the war industries; that is fewer strikes than occurred during the same period in any other of the countries engaged in the war.

Deducting the strikes called by unorganized labor the actual number of strikes during the war period was 5,512. But these were not confined to any district or industry. Most of them were in the nonessential industries.

Without knowledge of the propaganda carried on in the United States in the interest of the Central Powers, is it too much to claim that the American Federation of Labor exerted a great influence to prevent, avert, and avoid strikes of great numbers and potential importance in our struggle?

Another important fact pointed out by the same bulletin is that one-half the strikes lasted 10 days or less.

It can readily be seen how easy it is to misunderstand statistical reports. But the monthly bulletin from which you quoted proves there were fewer strikes during the war years than in the year previous. During the year 1916 the average number of strikes per month was 368. The average per month during the 20 months of war was 279. You will notice also that you have added the total number of strikers for the entire year of 1917 and 1918 instead of taking 20 months. When you have corroborated these figures there is no doubt you will gladly, in the interest of fairness, correct the statement in the letter to me which you presented to the Senate. The differences are so great that the public should know the exact truth.

Labor has no desire to claim credit for what it did during the war. It did its duty to the country. It is better that others who were deeply interested and represented the Government should give their opinion. To that end I suggest that you carefully read the following from a speech made by Secretary of the Navy Daniels, Labor Day, 1918, two months before the war ended, and when it was known to all men what part labor had played and was playing in the war:

In the crucial days through which we are passing American patriotism and confidence in victory mainly rest upon the knowledge that American toilers are loyal to the core. I say knowledge, for wherein we must needs have exercised faith 16 months ago, at this hour we stand upon the sure foundation of works that have justified our faith. The full and complete enlistment of labor in this country has not only heartened America, but it has, as well, cheered and strengthened the heroic men fighting for liberty across the sea. The magnificent reception of Samuel Gompers in Great Britain, hailed there as the labor apostle of the doctrine "Win the war," shows that labor loyalty here has stimulated the spirit of fighting to victory in all allied countries. The full consecration of men of toil in our country has been demonstrated in their doffing overalls and donning the military uniforms in their increase in production in field and factory of everything needed for the maintenance of Army, Navy, and civilian population; in their robust patriotism applied in building ships in the coldest winter ever known at a speed without parallel; in the rapid production of munitions and all war materials; and in their eagerness to prosecute the war by investing their earnings in Liberty bonds and in all causes that contributed to war needs. But we owe more to the spirit of wholehearted devotion to this free land and its free institutions by organized labor, to which we owe the Labor Day holiday, than to any and all contributions of skill and savings. It is well known that of all men, peace is dearest to men who earn their bread in the sweat of their face. Before liberty was imperiled by Prussian junkerism, every labor organization was a peace society, but every one was a peace society based upon the paradox of Buck Fanshaw, "We will have peace if we have to fight for it." And they are fighting now to end the war in their day and for all time.

With 3,000,000 men under arms from field and factory, the farmers of America this year have furnished 878,000,000 bushels of wheat, as against an average crop of 600,000,000 bushels, enough to feed our own population and export 278,000,000 bushels to feed our Allies. The increase in barley and rye has been as large in proportion. The farmers have produced 13,600,000 bales of cotton as against 11,300,000 bales last year. After exporting many thousand horses and mules to the war zone, the number at home has increased 454,000. The number of milch cows has increased 390,000; other cattle, 2,000,000; sheep, 1,300,000; swine, 4,000,000. These figures illustrate what labor has done on the farm, with hundreds of thousands of its most vigorous men in the Army and Navy.

What labor has done in producing munitions, in shipbuilding, and other industrial lines is an illuminating story of American skill and untiring industry, commanding the admiration of all people. The average production of steel ingots and castings, which represents the total steel production, from 1907 to 1916, inclusive, in those peace times, was 27,210,181 tons. The production in the first year of the war mounted up to 45,800,000 tons. The average production of pig iron from 1907 to 1916, inclusive, was 27,184,330 tons. In the first year of war it increased to 39,000,000 tons. In 1917 the total coal mined in the United States was 654,728,000 tons, as against an average of something over 500,000,000 tons for the previous 10 years. These increases in basic materials are even surpassed by the record in the construction of ships, the production of munitons and other war material, evidencing that labor, reduced by hundreds of thousands of enlistments, has surpassed in production the high-water record of all past history. This, too, in the fact of the desertion of the I. W. W. leaders and certain other slackers who took advantage of higher wages to reduce the working days, failing to realize that every able-bodied man should give himself as continuously and effectively in forging the weapons for the men in the Army and Navy as do the men in trenches or on the deck of fighting ships.

When war came there were people across the seas and some people with no real knowledge of the American men in factories, who asked: "Will labor in America meet the test? Will they be ready to make the supreme sacrifice?" Nobody has asked that question since organized labor, under the leadership of William B. Wilson and Samuel Gompers, voiced the Americanism of the unions, and expressed as well the loyalty of labor without as well as within organizations. The answer is written in deeds that none may question.

It is true, as you say, that legislators are not infallible and that courts construe laws made by them contrary to the intent of the lawmakers. This was true of the Sherman Antitrust Act and many others. But the legislative intent, you say, is a proper subject for judicial inquiry when it is in doubt, but not otherwise. You add:

Yet it must be said that the assurances given you regarding this law, while not binding upon the judiciary or even upon the executive, have been respected until the coal strike carried that policy beyond the bounds of endurance.

That is, if I understand you aright, when the miners found their standard of living was being decreased below the "bounds of endurance" it was criminal on their part to seek redress from the employers who were selling coal at profiteering prices.

I note you state of sections 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act:

Each confines immunity to legitimate acts and conduct, while section 20 merely recites the equity law of injunctions as it has existed for centuries.

It may have been the law for centuries, but so far as the American workman is concerned he never received the benefit of it and therefore sought the enactment of the Clayton law. You suggest that the law exempting farmers and organized wage earners from legal responsibility clothes them with privileges to be exercised on any scale whatever. The Clayton Act merely provides that what one man may do lawfully should not be held unlawful when done by two or more men. What special privilege is contained in that principle?

Then you add that "vested interests enjoyed similar immunity for many years and with similar consequences." Is there any comparison in the exemption from prosecution of wage earners and farmers who are seeking to better their economic condition as a result of their own labor and the violations of law by the associated interests and speculators and exploiters of material things the products of labor? The Supreme Court read into the antitrust law the "reasonableness" of combinations of big business. No such interpretation was given in the activities of the work people in their endeavor to secure relief from injustice and improvement in the conditions and standards of life and work.

Even to-day there are many violations of the food-control act that escape the eye of the prosecutors. Hoarders of food and profiteers appear to be immune, as those who are guilty continue their methods without hindrance from those who should do the prosecuting.

As to the coal strike, I can not understand your statement when you say:

It is the lawful carrying out of no legitimate object.

Is it not legitimate for the miners to seek sufficient wages upon which to support themselves and their dependents? Have they not the right to ask for higher wages and to regulate the hours of employment, and particularly when it is known and shown that the mine owners have profited far beyond even the wildest suggestion of their profiteering careers? Should 400,000 men dig and strive to live on a small pittance when the mine owners had complete freedom in making prices for the product turned out by the miners? Until the strike all governmental restriction as to the selling price of coal had been removed.

You admit the right of wage earners to organize to better their condition, but when they seek to do so you advise their incarceration on the false assumption that they are fighting the 110,000,000 people in the United States.

You state further:

The miners' organization is not in itself a conspiracy in restraint of trade. No one will so contend. But if the strike itself and its declared purpose is not such a conspiracy, then words have ceased to mean anything and human conduct must be measured by other standards than human experience. It proposes to force a general wage scale accompanied by a diminution of hours, without regard to the consequences either to the operator, consumer, or Government.

The "declared purpose" of the strike was not as you state. The declared and real purpose was to secure for the miners a sufficient wage to meet the high cost of living. After the contract was made between the operators, miners, and Government for the period of the war, or until March, 1920, the miners scrupulously lived up to their agreement. This contract, upon which so much stress is now laid, provided that certain grievances were to be adjusted or decided by the Fuel Administrator. But after the armistice the Fuel Administrator, or, rather, the Government, withdrew from the tripartite agreement and gave the operators carte blanche to charge what they would for coal. The miners were left high and dry. Their employers could charge what they pleased for coal, and the Government remained unmoved. When the miners had a grievance that under the tripartite agreement should be referred to the Fuel Administrator—otherwise the Government—there was no one to hear it.

It was this situation that satisfied the miners the war had ended so far as their contract was concerned. They had a perfect right so to believe and determine. There were no rules governing the operators. They could profiteer at will. Then why should there be any Government regulation of the miners alone? The miners, satisfied they were right—and they were—decided to ask the mine owners for increases in wages and a shortening of the workday.

The miners are pieceworkers. They are paid by the ton. Statistics show that the average price per ton received by them is 84 cents. Out of this they must pay for the powder they use; for the tools with which they dig the coal and the blacksmith who sharpens them; for the lamp which guides them in the darkness of the mines and the man who weighs the coal they load into the cars. If the mine is filled with gas, they must rent costly safety lamps from the operators. They must report for work whether it is given them or not. At the same time, a handy man in Washington receives $1 for carrying a ton of coal from the street into a shed or basement.

As the miners are paid by the ton, what difference does it make how many hours a day they work? As the day advances the air in a mine becomes fetid and extremely unhealthy from the breathing of the animals and men. The last two hours are the most deadly. Why should the miners not want to reduce the hours of labor near to the safety zone?

In the past they worked one, two, and three eight-hour days a week. Reducing the hours to six for five days would give them steadier employment and the people would have all the coal they needed. That was the purpose of a diminution of hours. And, as it would not affect the production of coal, I can not understand how the fact should be used against the miners. The consumer would lose nothing, but the miners would gain health and leisure time on the surface of the earth.

That the operator has been profiteering was proven by the Government when it decided the operator should pay an increase of 14 per cent in wages without adding it to the price of coal. All these months since price restrictions were removed the operators have been charging excessive prices. It is safe to say a large number of operators would pay willingly the 31 per cent recommended by the Secretary of Labor and sell coal at present prices. But a few operators are in a combination known as the Coal Mining Association.

The "declared" purpose of the miners, therefore, is to secure by higher wages a share of the increased profits of the operator. They know the operators can afford to pay it. Are 400,000 men, totaling with their dependents more than 2,000,000 humans, to surrender the right to protest and stop work in order to make the wrongs they suffered known to the people because others of our people may be inconvenienced?

The miners are loyal citizens. They proved their loyalty during the war by remaining at work and mining fuel for the munition plants, upon which so much depended. But the war is over. President Wilson has said so.

In substantiation of this, I call your attention to an address delivered by President Wilson to a joint session of the Senate and House November 11, 1918, as follows:

We know only that this tragical war, whose consuming flames swept from one nation to another until all the world was on fire, is at an end, and that it was the privilege of our own people to enter it at its most critical juncture in such fashion and in such force as to contribute in a way of which we are deeply proud of the great result.

In vetoing the prohibition bill because of the war-time provisions, President Wilson reiterated this statement. He said:

I object to and can not approve that part of this legislation with reference to war-time prohibition. It has to do with the enforcement of an act which was passed by reason of the emergencies of the war and whose objects have been satisfied in the demobilization of the Army and Navy and whose repeal I have already sought at the hands of Congress.

Even if the war is not technically at an end it is unquestionably practically at an end.

The Government admitted it when it withdraw from the tripartite agreement and removed all selling-price restrictions for coal. Must the miners be made victims of the high cost of living while the operators are permitted to go their way unrestricted by the legislative, executive, or judicial arm of the Government?

Is seeking better wages and conditions of employment unlawful? Should the wives and children of the miners go hungry and illy clad because the operators refused to negotiate a new wage agreement? For the operators are to blame for the present strike. They claimed the war had not ended, and that they would not make a new wage scale for the present time under any conditions except for the period after March, 1920.

Another misunderstanding of the conditions surrounding the miners' strike seems to have been taken for a fact by you when you say:

But the leaders of 400,000 men engaged in a basic industry and contending for immunity from all law must have their way whatever the consequences to the remaining 110,000,000 of free Americans.

The best answer to this is the fact that although the leaders of the miners called off the strike the miners had not returned to work. That certainly demonstrates that it was a miners' strike, not a strike called by their leaders.

But there is much more to say on this question. The real justice of the miners' strike can not be better justified than by quoting from Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane. His report to the President dated November 20, 1919, would appeal to the most flinty hearted. The fact, as set forth by him, that miners were working only 39 hours a week before the strike and 24 hours a week last spring, and that in Ohio, even in the banner year of 1918, they averaged less than 200 days, ought and should bring to their aid every right-thinking man in America, whether he be a layman or a legislator. Read what the Secretary of the Interior has to say and then judge whether the miner was justified in quitting work:

The record year 1918, with everything to stimulate production, had an average of only 249 working days for the bituminous mines of the country. This average of the country included a minimum among the principal coal-producing States of 204 days for Arkansas and a maximum of 301 for New Mexico. In such a State as Ohio the average working year is under 200 days. In 1917 the miners of New Mexico reached an average of 321 days, and in the largest field, the Raton field, it was actually 336, probably the record for steady operation.

This short year in coal-mine operation is due in part to seasonable fluctuation in demand. The mines averaged only 24 hours a week during the spring months. The weekly report of that date showed that 80 per cent of the lost time was due to "no market" and only 15 per cent to "labor shortage," while "car shortage" was a negligible factor. In contrast with this should be taken the last week before the strike when the average hours operated were 39 and "no market" was a negligible item in lost time, while "car shortage" was by far the largest item. It follows that the short year is a source of loss to both operator and the mine worker and is a tax on the consumer.

With substantially the same number of mines and miners working this year as last the accumulative production for the first 10 months of this year is 100,000,000 tons less than that mined in the same period last year. This 25 per cent loss in output means that both plant and labor have been less productive, and, in terms of capital and labor, coal cost the Nation more this year than last, for in the long run both capital and labor require a living wage.

The public must accept responsibility for the coal industry and pay for carrying it on the year round. Mine operators and mine workers, of whatever mines are necessary to meet the needs of the country, must be paid for a year's work. The shorter the working year the less coal is mined per man and per dollar invested in plant, and eventually the higher priced must be the coal. It is obvious that the 236 tons of coal mined by the average British miner last year could not be as cheap per ton as the 943 tons mined by the average American mine worker, backed up as he was with more efficient plant. (A proud contrast!)

It would clearly appear that the coal business may be stabilized, not wholly but in a very large measure, in some of the western fields, if the public does not regard its supply of coal as it does its supply of domestic water, which requires only that the faucet shall be opened to bring forth a gushing supply. Coal does not have pressure behind it which forces it out of the mine and into the coal yard. It rather must be drawn out by the suction of demand. And herein the public must play its part by keeping that demand as steady and uniform as possible.

You also say:

For one, I do not believe that 10 per cent of the miners of America have their hearts in this enterprise and do not know that it and similar ones can succeed only at the expense of free government and all that makes this country fit for a free man to live in.

What assault is made on free government when underpaid workmen use the only means they have to secure a proper wage? This is a free country, and in our free country can the miners be denied the right of seeking a better standard of life and work, to seek it through negotiations with their employers, the mine owners, and upon flat refusal of the operators, as a last resort, to quit work?

A great conference was held at Washington March 12, 1917, before the war, in which the official representatives of the workers in all industry met and unanimously declared:

The present war discloses the struggle between the institutions of democracy and those of autocracy. As a Nation we should profit from the experiences of other nations. Democracy can not be established by patches upon an autocratic system. The foundations of civilized intercourse between individuals must be organized upon principles of democracy and scientific principles of human welfare. Then, a national structure can be perfected in harmony with humanitarian idealism—a structure that will stand the tests of the necessities of peace or war.

We, the officers of the National and International Trade-Unions of America, in national conference assembled in the Capital of the Nation, hereby pledge ourselves, in peace or in war, in stress or in storm, to stand unreservedly by the standards of liberty and the safety and preservation of the institutions and ideals of our Republic.

In this solemn hour of our Nation's life it is our earnest hope that our Republic may be safeguarded in its unswerving desire for peace; that our people may be spared the horrors and the burdens of war; that they may have the opportunity to cultivate and develop the arts of peace, human brotherhood, and a higher civilization.

But, despite all our endeavors and hopes, should our country be drawn into the maelstrom of the European conflict, we, with these ideals of liberty and justice herein declared as the indispensable basis for national policies, offer our services to our country in every field of activity, to defend, safeguard, and preserve the Republic of the United States of America against its enemies, whomsoever they may be, and we call upon our fellow workers and fellow citizens in the holy name of labor, justice, freedom, and humanity to devotedly and patriotically give like service.

That declaration was unanimously indorsed at the following convention of the American Federation of Labor, November, 1917.

And, better than all, American labor made good its pledge. You also know the result of that declaration. During the war it was necessary for representatives of the American Federation of Labor to go to the allied countries of Europe to put new life into the hearts of the people who had been most sorely tried by the horrors of the conflict. They went there at the request of the governments and of the organized workers of the allied countries. And the first declaration to the workers of Europe that there should be "no peace without victory" was made by representatives of the American Federation of Labor.

At an international conference of the interallied labor movements held in London, September, 1918, in which delegates from the American Federation of Labor participated, it was declared that the war must be waged until victory of the allied and associated countries should have been secured. This was a direct reversal of the previous declaration of the same body, held in February, 1918, at which no representatives from the American labor movement were present.

Great credit was extended to the labor men of America. They were extolled in beautiful language. The workers of America are the same to-day that they were in those trying times. They still are loyal American citizens, who will give up their lives to keep our country free. But many of those who gave every credit to the workers while the war was on now denounce every move made by labor.

What is the reason for this? Is it because those who control the industries and finances desire to establish involuntary servitude in order to pile up greater fortunes? Men must be free to make a country great. Free men can work or refuse to work for any reason or no reason. Slaves must work. To say to the working people that they must work and for whatever wages and conditions the employers benevolently condescend to give establishes involuntary servitude. It makes slaves of the workers. But now they are told that while they have the right to organize to better their economic condition they have no right to strike to gain these desirable ends. They must work whether they want to or not. Where is the justice in this?

Again you state:

And if others shall dare to take their places in the coal mines that coal may be dug and be distributed, war is to be waged upon them and upon their wives and children.

I do not understand upon what you base this statement. Is there any evidence to that effect? Have women and children been attacked or has anyone who sought work in the mines met with such a war as you suggest? While nearly half a million men were on strike there was no more trouble than during times when all the miners are at work.

Do you know, sir, that the miners in declaring and conducting this strike directed approximately 70,000 of their members to remain at work as engineers and assistants to protect the mines from being flooded and to perform the service of guarding the property of the mine owners?

If more evidence is needed that the strike was a peaceable one, permit me to refer you to an editorial in the New York World, a newspaper that can not be accused of overfriendliness to labor. It is headed "Labor with clean hands," and is as follows:

As the bituminous-coal strike passes with the steel strike into industrial history one outstanding fact should be fixed in memory.

In these two fields of labor more than three-quarters of a million of working men abandoned their occupations to enforce demands for higher wages, improved conditions, or recognition of their unions. We have heard a great deal of the extreme radicalism of large numbers of both elements. It has been said that steel workers and miners were seething with bolshevism. The first named were represented as intent not so much upon collective bargaining as the wildest schemes of expropriating property and establishing soviet government. As for the miners, it has been charged in the United States Senate that they were in conspiracy with Mexicans on the border line of treason.

Yet in the long list of American industrial disputes not one great strike can be mentioned in which there was so little disorder. With hundreds of thousands of men idle, in many cases in want, the victims of injustice, as they believed, and most of the time seeing no hope of relief, there has been hardly a disturbance of the peace anywhere. Whether wisely led in other respects or not, labor resumes work with clean hands.

There is nothing more reassuring in the present situation than the record thus made. Let all alarmists, therefore, who see in existing unrest only dreadful symptoms of violence and pillage under Russian inspiration recall the bloodshed and terror of railroad, steel, and coal strikes in former days, when Lenin and Trotski were unknown.

The above editorial is typical of many which have appeared in the American newspapers.

You surprise me when you say:

Had your proposed amendment to the Lever bill been incorporated into it, and thus made a part of it, the power and the duty of the administration to meet and overcome this emergency would not have been at all affected by it.

That amendment provided that the proposed food-control act would not repeal sections 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act, which permits the normal activities of labor. You declare that if it had been made a part of the law it would have been the duty of the President to ignore it and proceed as has been done to prosecute the miners for striking. I hope I have misconstrued your statement, for it is hard to believe that a lawmaker, a Member of the highest branch of Congress, would advocate the breaking of any law, while at the same time he was unjustly denouncing the miners for breaking a law not in existence.

Furthermore, you assert that the sovereignty of the Government had been assailed by the strike when "law and order had been disregarded." Where has the law been disregarded? What law is there to forbid miners to ask their employers for a better living wage? Merely asking for and striking when refused an increase in wages is not an attack on the sovereignty of the Government. Such a conclusion is not only unjust and unwarrated, but you yourself must know it.

You ask:

What is the right of a strike? If it means the right of men to quit private employment individually or collectively, everyone will concede it. No man can be made to work against his will in free America except he becomes a vagrant or convict.

Very true. That is what labor contends. Then why are the miners pilloried as enemies of government, Why are they declared disloyal because they struck. You add:

But the right to quit work essentially involves the corresponding right to continue at work, and one is just as sacred as the other.

Certainly. That right is possessed by the workers. Free men can work or quit work for any reason or no reason. No one can control their labor except themselves, for it is not a commodity. It is a part of their very being. Therefore the "right" to work or not to work is inherent in the workers themselves. But the idea seeems to be arbitrarily to take away this natural right by acting as if the labor of a human being is a commodity or an article of commerce.

In the attitude of labor in peace and in war in March, 1917, previously referred to, this was incorporated:

We maintain that it is the fundamental step in preparedness for the Nation to set its own house in order and to establish at home justice in relations between men. Previous wars, for whatever purpose waged, developed new opportunities for exploiting wage earners. Not only was there failure to recognize the necessity for protecting rights of workers that they might give that whole-hearted service to the country that can come only when every citizen enjoys rights, freedom, and opportunity, but under guise of national necessity labor was stripped of its means of defense against enemies at home and was robbed of the advantages, the protections, the guaranties of justice that had been achieved after ages of struggle. For these reasons workers have felt that no matter what the result of war, as wage earners they generally lost.

Does it not appear now that the autocratic methods used during the war and accepted by the workers as a means to win the conflict are now to be continued in the interest of the employers? It is not fair. It is not right. Can such a policy be defended by honest men?

You state that "civilization is not a creation but an evolution."

More than 2,500 years ago the workers had their trade-unions. They were called collegias, and when permitted by law their activities were confined to sick and burial benefits. Wherever these collegias existed the enlightenment of the people was the greatest, for their ethics were adopted by the people as a whole. Members of these collegias 500 years before the Christian era declared, among other things, for the principle of one wife.

Since trade-unions were first formed they have sought the economic advancement of humanity. They were the pioneers in America in demanding compulsory education. Their efforts brought safety, sanitary, and health legislation. Their every aspiration has been to bring happiness into the home. In order to make plain the position of the American Federation of Labor to the whole people, a few extracts from the proceedings of conventions will not be out of place.

In 1887 it was declared:

The opportunities of the American Federation of Labor are that it may become a grand and powerful organization, fulfilling its great mission to bring the working people into the various organizations of the trades, to assist in the amelioration of their conditions, to raise mankind to a higher level, aspiring to a nobler civilization.

In 1888 this declaration was made:

The benefit the American Federation of Labor has been in the period of its existence to the toiling masses of our country is more, probably, than will be told before generations to come. There is scarcely a division of thought upon the question that the workers, being the producers of all the wealth of the world, should at least enjoy more of the results of their toil. On every hand we see fortunes amassing, elegant mansions and immense business houses rearing; we see the intricate machinery in its rotary motions, the genius of man, all applied to the production of the wealth of the world; and yet in the face of this thousands of our poor, helpless brothers and sisters, strong, able-bodied, willing to work, unable to find it, hungry and emaciated, without sufficient to properly nourish the body or to maintain the mental balance. On the other hand, others bent by their long-continued drudgery and unrequited toil. While these wrongs have been upon the body politic from ages gone by, we can yet trace the improvements in the condition of the people by reason of our various organizations. Wherever the working people have manifested their desire for improvement by organization there, as with a magic wand, improvement has taken place. Wherever the working people are the poorest, most degraded, and miserable, there can we find the greatest lack of organization; and in the same degree as the basis of organization is improved, there can we see the greatest improvement in the material, moral, and social condition of the people.

In 1902 the convention declared:

This session of the American Federation of Labor marks an episode in the progress of enlightenment unparalleled in the world's history. We meet in solid phalanx, regardless of creed, regardless of dogma; with national pride but without international prejudice. The world is our field of action, and man is our brother. We not only proclaim, under the unsullied and untarnished banner of trade-unionism, but live the principles of liberty, equality, fraternity, and justice. Ours is an affiliation of men of like interests and of kindred spirit. It is the natural growth of a sentiment for unity that binds and seals the compact for harmony, fidelity, and fellowship. Our cause demands that there is no worker so deep down in the abyss of misery and despair that we dare refuse to extend a helping hand in his uplifting; that there is no high pinnacles of grandeur to which the toiling masses should not aspire to attain. The trade-unions are of, by, and for the wage-workers primarily, but there is no effort which we in our movement can make but what will have its beneficent, salutary influence upon all our people. The misery of the past, the struggles of the present, and the duty for the future, demand that no effort be left untried, that all energy be exercised and opportunity taken advantage of to organize the toilers of our country upon the broad platform of the trade-union, in full affiliation with the American Federation of Labor. The dim, dismal past, with all its pain and travail, must give way to the better and brighter future for which the workers have borne the burdens and made the sacrifices that the people of our time, and for all time, may be truly free.

In 1906 it was said:

Who can estimate or even dream of the benefits that have accrued to the working people through the efforts of the trade-union movement as embodied in the American Federation of Labor? What has it brought in the way of better homes, better food, a less number of children of our members in the factory, mill, or shop? A wider, better, more enjoyable, and comfortable life. Who will or can measure the work of the trade-union, either in the world of industry, in our social surroundings, or in moral growth? To have seen a part of this work and accomplishments should nerve us to still greater efforts in the future.

In 1910 it was declared:

Organized labor contends for the improvements of the standard of life, to uproot ignorance and foster education, to instill character and manhood and independent spirit among our people, to bring about a recognition of the interdependence of the modern life of man and his fellow man. It aims to establish a normal workday, take the children from the factory and the workshop and place them in the school, the home, and the playground. In a word, the unions of labor, recognizing the duty of toil, strive to educate their members, to make their homes more cheerful in every way, to contribute an earnest effort toward making life the better worth living, to avail their members of their rights as citizens, and to bear the duties and responsibilities and perform the obligations they owe to our country and our fellow men. Labor contends that in every effort to achieve its praiseworthy ends all honorable and lawful means are not only commendable but should receive the sympathetic support of every right-thinking, progressive man.

But the assertion made by you that "violence can destroy but can not promote civilization" can best be answered by referring to a few of the incidents of violence that have benefited and encouraged civilization. Did not the Crusaders encourage Christianity? Did not the French Revolution advance civilization by leaps and bounds? Did not the Civil War free the slaves in the United States? This was violence in the extreme.

In labor strikes there sometimes is violence. But it is not premeditated nor committed with the consent of the trade-unions. There is always more or less violence between individuals, whether strikes are in progress or there is industrial peace.

Did not the Great War decide that men and governments should be free to work out their own destiny in a lawful way? Did not its outcome make for civilization? While we still feel its effects and the people have not been restored to their normal state of civilization, they will be advanced many years at a jump because of it.

Man is combative, and yet you must know that there is no factor in all our country so potent to decrease or prevent violence as the much misunderstood and misrepresented organized-labor movement of America. A greater crowd will follow a prize fighter through the streets than will gather to see a public official or man of great learning. Individual passions will find vent no matter whether there are strikes or industrial peace. Men who have led restrained lives can not realize the effect of red blood in healthy, energetic workingmen. Some men would rather fight than eat. When war comes the pacifists are not found among their numbers. It was to the credit of the United States that in the Great War the young men of our country were fighters. Take the right to fight for what is good away from our people and we will become a Nation of pacifists. Look at China, a nation of pacifists. There are no strikes in China. Wages are very low, as they are fixed to suit the employer. The worker has nothing to say about them.

Labor men find that in most cases those who oppose the activities of the trade-unions do not appreciate that the worker is just as anxious for a better economic life as any other citizen who may or may not have to work.

Only those who have worked in the mines know the hardships endured by the miners. I would venture to say that if each Senator of the United States would become a miner for a year he would not only come out strongly in favor of their strikes, but would place the blame for the walkout where it belonged—on the coal operators.

I have tried to answer all your suggestions. This has caused me to write a much longer letter than I had intended. But I hope that some of the thoughts I have expressed may give you a different view of the situation, and be the means of acquainting the uninformed of the fact that the miners are in the right and could under the circumstances do nothing else than strike. That was their only recourse.

Part of this letter was written within a few days after the receipt of your communication, but, owing to the many problems which had to receive my immediate attention, composition of this letter was unavoidably delayed. May I ask that you will have this reply made a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and oblige,

Very respectfully, SAML. GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 3, 1920.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 20th ultimo was received after the adjournment of Congress, hence I shall be unable to insert it in the RECORD in compliance with your request before the 5th instant. I do not know that any reply is expected. I feel constrained to make one only because it might otherwise be fairly said that I acquiesced by my silence in both your facts and conclusions. Some of them are very pertinent, and for both our sakes I wish that all of them were.

I am, of course, familiar with the statements of Secretaries Baker and Daniels, which, broadly speaking, are correct. But their failure to note many delays and interruptions in the course of production, with which they were personally and painfully familiar, condones without removing them; a conclusion to which the Shipping Board, the Aircraft Construction Board, the ordnance and munitions plants, etc., will readily agree. They know from experience that Mr. O'Connell's advice to "strike for dollars," to "get in their minds the beautiful doctrine of more," to "place officers in position to go out and demand, and then back them up" was literally and continuously observed by many wage earners in many sections and at many critical moments in the conflict. It is these I have criticized, and not the great body of wage earners and producers as you have mistakenly assumed. And it is these whom the Secretary of War did not except from his generous eulogism, although, in my opinion, he should have done so.

The statistics regarding strikes and strikers during the war were furnished me by an experienced and reliable authority upon whose accuracy I readily relied. His figures tally with your statement of the aggregate number for the years 1917 and 1918, through the greater part of which period the war extended. Hence your own figures concede a strike list which for war time, and in view of your official pledge of cooperation, was ominously large. The shortness of one-half the strikes indicates how the public needs compelled acceptance of demands made at crises when time was precious and inexorable.

By quoting you approve Secretary Daniels's Labor Day eulogism. So do I in the main, for I note that he properly includes all forms of labor within its terms—the farmer, the unionist, and the nonunionist. And he deprecates "the desertion of the I. W. W. leaders and certain other slackers," even as I have done. Need I reiterate that it is with these I have been concerned, that your services to your country during the war were beyond value, and that the body of the people, wage earners included, in the mass was sound?

I do not imagine that we occupy much common ground regarding the recent coal strike. Therefore, to reply seriatim to your several quotations from my letter concerning it and your comments thereon would not prove profitable. I shall dismiss most of them with the reminder that my comments assume—and I think correctly—that the movement was properly characterized by the President and by the Department of Justice. You think differently, otherwise you would not have given it the sanction of your official indorsement after Mr. Wilson had declared it "illegal and immoral," and after it had been forbidden by the courts. If I misstated its declared purpose, I am sorry. But if I comprehend the English language, and the statements of its spokesmen are authentic, the end and aim of the strike was the nationalization of the mines. The public judge the end and aim of the steel strike not by the formula of "higher wages and improved conditions," but by the contemporaneous utterances of Mr. Foster and Mr. Fitzpatrick, repeated freely and frequently by the striking workmen. Intelligent and farsighted men like yourself, Warren Stone, and others know that increased wages chase increased cost of living, but never overtake it, and that nothing but increasing production and thrift ever can, while strikes of national magnitude affecting basic industries immeasurably aggravate the end it is ostensibly designed to cure. I do not question that the coal miners make just complaint of many inequalities, operating unjustly upon some of them, but the increase in pay and decrease in hours demanded were general. If obtained, these inequalities would have persisted without alteration and doubtless have become the basis of more extreme demands, equally barren of beneficial results. Operators and employees seem unable to perceive that their interests and well-being are mutual; that class consciousness, which is but another name for class animosity, should not bar the way to the goal of a give-and-take agreement based upon conditions which they understand better than anybody else. All the arguments in the world can not overcome my statement, that the strike, and for that matter all strikes of nation-wide character, involve a contention that the strikers must have their way regardless of consequences to the rest of the people. The reasons for such action may be largely compelling, but until it can be established that the right to strike is supreme, inviolate, beyond the control of the law, dominating all other rights, subject to exercise, whatever the social, moral, physical, economic, and political consequences to the rest of the community, and to their rights in their respective spheres of life, it will not be accepted by public opinion or by the mass of the people. If it is to become the rule of conduct in the United States of America, we must extend it to consumers, to mine and railway owners, to every organization of men and women, and then it will be worthless except as an agency of chaos and civic dissolution.

I make no issue with your recitals on pages 13 and 14 of your letter, but add to them the reminder that practically everybody aided in prosecuting the war to a successful conclusion. Farmers, merchants, manufacturers, lawyers, physicians, engineers, ministers, clerks, toilers, both union and nonunion, whites, blacks, Jews, gentiles, the native born and the naturalized became a unit for America. Here and there disloyalty sounded a discordant note, not for any class but among the members of all classes. They did their duty to their country in time of war; would that they might similarly cooperate and perform an equally imperative duty in times of peace.

You take vigorous exception to my assertion that if others should take the places of strikers in the coal mines, and so forth, war would be waged upon them and their wives and their children, and ask if I have any evidence of this. Evidence? Every man of common sense knows that such is the status of every prolonged strike of serious dimensions. You say this was a peaceable strike, that some 70,000 members were directed to remain as engineers and assistants to protect the mines from flooding and injury. How many of them would have remained at such work had outsiders entered the mines in place of the striking workmen? How many men did take such places before receiving assurance of protection by the strong arm of the Government? There was less disorder in the recent coal strike than in any other of similar dimensions. But there was less effort save in Kansas, West Virginia, and possibly one or two other sections to resume operations. Another month of its continuance and—what would have happened?

You sometimes and very properly refer to the strike as a weapon. Why? Because it is just that. It is a double-edged weapon. It must smite the employer and him who intervenes. If it spares either, it is ineffective. The man who wields it knows this. So does the employer, and the "scab" knows it better than either. I am not now criticizing; I am stating a fact. Your weapon is good for nothing if you do not wield it. Henry George, himself a trade-unionist, said that labor associations rest upon force, which they must exercise in some form whenever they try to raise the wage scale. This is and must be the basic element behind the strike. You give your unqualified approval to my contention that the right to quit work involves the corresponding right to continue at work, one being as sacred as the other. It is too fundamental for academic qualification. But how is it in practice? Let the industrial history of the world during the last 50 years make reply. The principle has been a beautiful abstraction. The right exists; it is active in spots; it will pass with the final establishment of the closed shop. Leaders like Mr. Foster have decided views regarding the status of the nonunion worker, and they reflect quite accurately the prevailing method of dealing with him in times of industrial disturbance. Recently in Chicago a property owner was fined by the painters' union for painting his own porch, and slugged because he would not pay it. The incident may be sporadic. I hope it is; but it illustrates the necessary attitude of organization toward those outside the pale. It is neither better nor worse than the treatment frequently accorded the little business man by the big combination. Both practices are wrong; neither should be tolerated.

My statement that had your proposed amendment to the Lever bill been accepted it would not have affected the power and duty of the administration to overcome the coal emergency was no advocacy either of "the breaking any law," nor the unjust—or other—denouncing the miners for "breaking a law not in existence." I advocate the breaking of no law. Neither do I announce in advance of proposed legislation that I will disregard it if enacted. I believe with Gen. Grant that the best way to be rid of a bad law is to enforce it, and it would, of course, be most unjust to accuse one of disregarding a law which did not exist.

My contention was and is that since the exemptions of the Clayton Act are confined to certain organizations "lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof" and since the strike has been declared unlawful by the highest authorities in the land, your amendment could not have been broader than the exemptions it recognized. I am sorry that I did not express myself more clearly. Of course, I know that you combat my view of the nature of the strike, and your assumption, if well taken, sustains your conclusion. But it is upon that point that the difference occurs. I do not quarrel with the self-laudatory utterances of the federation which you quote so copiously. It has always commanded my respect and support in its effort to advance the well-being of its members through peaceful and legitimate channels, and it always will. Our differences arise from conditions and policies which you deem legitimate and defensible and which I do not. We can not expect to convince each other to the contrary, but we can, I trust, always recognize the distinction between what we criticize and what we commend.

My assertion that violence can destroy but can not promote civilization will not yield to occasional historical instances to the contrary. There are exceptions, of course, but they either prove the rule, in which event they sustain it, or they prove too much, in which event they make civilization the offspring of violence. The crusaders no more encouraged Christianity than Mohammedanism. Religious wars have been many. Religious massacres have not been unusual. Inquisitions have flourished apace in the past, and religious persecution has not altogether disappeared. None of these, in my judgment, ever promoted civilization. The French Revolution is a notable exception to the general rule. The enlightened opinion of the world would long ago have stricken the shackles from the slave had the Civil War never occurred. The World War just ended was the greatest crime ever committed against civilization. It is the best, as it is the latest, illustration of the ghastly folly of shedding human blood for human advancement. Civilization was saved, but, in my judgment, has been brutalized by the horrible tragedy. You are too well informed, too humane, and too mindful of the need for peace to even indirectly advocate violence as a promoter of civilization. Your assurance that violence in labor strikes is not premeditated nor done with the consent of trade-unions proves this, although it does not absolve the latter from moral responsibility for the inevitable consequence of a policy which inexorably leads to it.

I concede that organized labor is a potent factor for the decrease or prevention of violence. It is because of this that public opinion is reluctant to accept its assurances of irresponsibility when violence occurs, and especially when it is fomented by certain organizations with whom direct action is a creed.

The worker, like every other American, is not only "anxious for" but is entitled "to a better economic life." It is not a new ambition. On the contrary, it is distinctly American. It has always been obtainable by everyone through the uplifting agencies of American law and American opportunity. I have never mined for a year or any other length of time, but that is not necessary to my past experiences. I have followed the plow and wielded the hoe through many a long and wearisome day. I know something of manual labor, of its severity not only, but of its dignity as well. I have had many a hard struggle with adversity in my day, and I can say with truth that advancement has come by dint of hard work, earnest effort, observance of law, and respect for the rights of all others. What the world needs is tolerance, sympathy, cooperation, and mutual understanding between all the sons of men, whatever their pursuits or coordinations. Each and all of us are linked with and dependent upon every other. Hence we must progress together if we progress at all. Force, violence, antagonisms, suspicions, recriminations may satisfy our immediate resentments, but they get us nowhere. And I fear they never will.

The contrast you draw between China and the United States is a strong one, but you might have drawn it with equal success between the same nations 50 years ago. The different conditions are no more attributable to trade-unions here and their absence there than those between the United States and Mexico, in both of which countries they exist. Fundamental racial inequalities will persist through social, economic, and political conditions, a fact graphically illustrated by many episodes of the past few years. They may be mitigated, but not by force or the menace of it.

Very respectfully,

C. S. THOMAS.

President American Federation of Labor.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I present a letter from the acting president of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., accompanied by a petition praying for the ratification of the treaty of peace with reservations. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter and petition were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRINITY COLLEGE,
Hartford, Conn., December 18, 1919.

The Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you the inclosed petition for a speedy ratification of the treaty of peace, including the league of nations covenant, with a minimum of reservations.

I beg to call your attention to the fact that it bears the signatures of every member of the teaching staff of Trinity College, with the exception of one, who is also in favor of the peace treaty and a league of nations but desires the league in a different form.

Yours, very respectfully,

HENRY A. PERKINS,
Acting President.

HARTFORD, CONN., December 17, 1919.

We, the undersigned members of the faculty of Trinity College, are convinced of the supreme importance of the ratification of the treaty of peace as soon as possible, with a minimum of interpretative reservations, and we most strongly urge the Senators from Connecticut to do their best to promote such action, and we will support them in favoring a resolution ratifying the treaty of peace, including the league of nations covenant, in terms that shall not be offensive to other signatories of the treaty.

Arthur Adams, Frank Cole Babbitt, H. M. Dadourian, Harold S. Palmer, Horace C. Swan, Robert E. Bacon, Charles E. Rogers, Charles A. Fischer, Wills M. Upton, Frederic W. Carpenter, Robert B. Riggs, Edward C. Stone, Odell Shepard, Stanley L. Galpin, Henry A. Perkins, J. J. McCookes, Le Roy C. Barret, G. A. Keene, Albert H. Yost.

I certify that the names signed to this petition are those of the entire teaching staff of Trinity College, with the exception of one.

FRANK COLE BABBITT,
Secretary of the Faculty.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I present an article on Public Opinion by Mr. Frank I. Cobb, printed in yesterday's New York World, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OPINION STILL HAMPERED BY RESTRICTIONS IMPOSED BY WAR AND PLAGUED BY FLOOD OF DUBIOUS PRIVATE PROPAGANDA—SAYS NEWSPAPERS MUST FIGHT RISING TIDE OF PRUSSIANISM TO REGAIN FREEDOM OF THOUGHT—MOBILIZED AS WERE THE MEN AND MATERIAL REQUIRED FOR EFFECTIVE WARFARE—THE CENSOR, IN "PLAYING" SAFE, WAS APT TO SUPPRESS MORE THAN WAS NECESSARY TO KEEP VITAL INFORMATION FROM THE ENEMY—CONTROL OF PUBLIC OPINION ALSO ENABLED THE GOVERNMENT TO SPREAD USEFUL AND PROPER PROPAGANDA.

The following address on the subject of the Press and Public Opinion was delivered by Frank I. Cobb, editor of the World, before the Women's City Club of New York on December 11, 1919. The address aroused so much interest and so many requests that it be published have been received that the World prints it in full:

"For five years there has been no free play of public opinion in the world.

"Confronted by the inexorable necessities of war, Governments conscripted public opinion as they conscripted men and money and materials.

"Having conscripted it, they dealt with it as they dealt with other raw recruits. They mobilized it. They put it in charge of drill sergeants. They goose-stepped it. They taught it to stand at attention and salute.

"This governmental control over public opinion was exerted through two different channels—one the censorship and the other propaganda. The ostensible function of the censorship was to keep the enemy from obtaining useful military information. Its ultimate function was to suppress all information that Government wished to suppress for any reason whatsoever. There is a popular notion, born of cynicism and suspicion, that the legitimate objects of the censorship were deliberately prostituted to the business of concealing military and administrative blunders. I am inclined to doubt it. There are instances in which it was so employed, but on the whole the censor usually followed the ordinary military routine, suppressing everything that might give aid to the enemy and then suppressing everything else for which his superior officers might criticize him for not suppressing. The censor's motto was 'safety first,' which meant safety for the censor. In consequence, the censorship was usually stupid and generally ineffective. Figaro once maliciously remarked that the French censorship had managed to keep the movements of the French troops a secret from everybody except the Germans. That was true, in the main, of all censorships.

"As the war progressed the censorship became less and less a factor, and propaganda increased in importance. Modern warfare is not a conflict between armies, but between nations, and what is going on back of the lines may be far more important than what is going on at the front. Governments relied on propaganda to equip and sustain their armies, to raise money, to furnish food and munitions, and to perform all those services without which armies would be vain and helpless. The organized manipulation of public opinion was as inevitable a development of modern warfare as airplanes, tanks, and barbed-wire entanglements.

TWO KINDS OF PROPAGNDA.

"There were two kinds of propaganda, one that represented the appeal to reason and the other that represented the appeal to any emotions that could be directed toward the winning of the war. The classical examples of the first kind of propaganda are the British White Book, which contained the diplomatic correspondence that preceded the war, and the State papers of President Wilson defining the aims and objects of the war in terms of human liberty.

"The effect of this kind of propaganda can not be overestimated. Without it the war could not have been won.

"The other kind of propaganda resembled in a general way the activities of the cheer leaders at a football game. It was noisy and demonstrative and emotional and spectacular, and as such it often served a highly useful purpose. Sometimes it was frankly mendacious, for mendacity plays no insignificant rôle in the drama of war. When Government lies it does not lie sneakingly and furtively, but proudly and ostentatiously.

"When the armistice was signed and demobilization began, public opinion was demobilized, too. It was turned loose to shift for itself, and naturally it felt a little awkward in civilian clothes. It had been trained to think only in terms of war and had almost forgotten how to think in terms of peace. Moreover, it was like the emancipated slaves of the South after the Civil War. Its shackles were struck off, but it did not quite know what to do with its freedom. It was in the habit of being told what to think and what to feel, and when it was left to its own resources it was bewildered. At this point private propaganda stepped in to take up the work that Government had abandoned, and when we deal with public opinion to-day we are dealing largely with private propaganda.

GOVERNMENT LIED GLIBLY.

"Government suppressed the truth; Government distorted the truth; Government lied glibly and magnificently when occasion seemed to require; but, after all, governmental propaganda was at least directed toward war ends, and those ends were the protection of the country and its institutions against its armed and embattled enemies.

"When we come to the question of private propaganda we are on wholly different ground. Private propaganda is not one of the by-products of war, but it has taken on new phases since the war. It established itself long before the war and was a development of the press agent, who from being merely a theatrical attachment had extended himself to Wall Street, to big business, and to most of the institutions that have to deal with public opinion. Shortly before the war the newspapers of New York took a census of the press agents who were regularly employed and regularly accredited and found that there were about 1,200 of them.

"How many there are now I do not pretend to know, but what I do know is that many of the direct channels to news have been closed, and the information for the public is first filtered through publicity agents.

"The great corporations have them, the banks have them, the railroads have them, all the organizations of business and of social and political activity have them, and they are the media through which news comes. Even statesmen have them.

"These publicity agents, on the whole, are a very able body of men, and in some respects they perform a highly valuable service, but at the same time they are essentially attorneys for their employers. Their function is not to proclaim the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, but to present the particular state of facts that will be of the greatest benefit to their clients—in short, to manipulate the news.

BASIC TRUTH HIDDEN.

"A great deal of the confusion of public opinion to-day is the direct product of that system.

"Take, for example, a great industrial disturbance, like the coal strike. What are the essential merits of it? Do you know? If you do, you are very fortunate. I don't, although I have spared no effort to get at the facts, many of which lie further underground than the coal itself.

"The reason none of us can get at the basic truth is very simple. The coal operators meet in secret, and through their publicity agent they give out a statement of their side of the case. The leaders of the miners meet in secret, and they give out a statement of their side of the case. Either statement by itself is plausible and believable. The two of them, taken together, are wholly irreconcilable and simply add to the sum total of human ignorance.

"And thus it goes. The more of that kind of publicity we have the less we know, the less certain we can be of anything. But while this is a pernicious propaganda it is by no means the most dangerous form that is now manifesting itself.

"After the Thirty Years' War bands of marauding soldiers wandered around Europe terrorizing the inhabitants of every town and village to which they could gain access, and something of that sort is going on now in the United States. Bands of propagandists are wandering around terrorizing public opinion and trying to frighten it into submission to theories of government that are strange to American institutions.

"Some of these marauders represent radicalism and some reaction, but there is a striking similarity in their methods. Radicalism appeals to violence against reaction, and reaction appeals to violence against radicalism. One menaces with threats of the torch and the bomb and the other with threats of the rope and the rifle. Both profess to be champions of human freedom. Radicalism pretends to be engaged in restoring human liberty to its primitive simplicity, and reaction, wrapped in the Stars and Stripes, is ready to have everybody else die for the Constitution as it thinks the Constitution ought to be interpreted.

POST-WAR MENTAL REACTIONS.

"A war that has shaken the very foundations of human society is bound to produce some extraordinary mental reactions. A war that has wrecked vast empires, overthrown dynasties, and brought about sweeping revolutions is not likely to leave society just as it was before. Yet large numbers of excellent people think that mankind should have picked up its work where it left off when it went into the trenches and go on as if nothing at all had happened. Others are convinced that because war has resulted in revolution in certain countries there ought to be revolution everywhere—the more the better.

"What the United States needs more than anything else to-day is the restoration of the free play of public opinion. That requires, first, the reestablishment of the freedom of discussion, for without freedom of discussion there is no public opinion that deserves the name.

"Will Hays, the chairman of the Republican national committee, made a speech recently in New York, in which he proudly proclaimed that 'there is in this country a religious faith which believes in the divine origin of the Constitution of the United States.' When I first read Mr. Hays's words I was staggered by this new incarnation of Hohenzollernism. Then I saw that he had probably hit upon a serious and lamentable truth. A most energetic propaganda is engaged in converting the Constitution of the United States into a cult, into a religion, and its champions are eager to burn all dissenters and heretics at the stake.

"The Constitution of the United States is one of the great achievements of all history, but criticism of it is not blasphemy, and a man is not necessarily damned who thinks that in the light of 130 years' experience a better framework of government might be constructed.

TWO ORIGINS OF REVOLUTION.

"The men who drafted the Constitution certainly did not consider it a piece of divine inspiration. They knew how it was made. Nor had they any superstitious reverence for government as an institution. They regarded it rather as a necessary evil. Nor were they altogether certain, from the meager data of a limited experience, as to the ability of the people to rule themselves. That is why they established a government of checks and balances which could not function too freely. To this day the Government they created operates with great difficulty under even favorable conditions, and whenever the President and Congress happen to belong to different parties government is deadlocked and must wait for another election. But what the fathers did clearly understand was human liberty, at least in so far as the white man was concerned, and there they took nothing for granted.

"It is not the powers that they conferred upon the Government, but the powers that they prohibited to the Government, which make the Constitution a charter of liberty. The Bill of Rights is a born rebel. It reeks of sedition. In every clause it shakes its fist in the face of constituted authority and thunders 'Thou shalt not,' and because its ultimatum is 'Thou shalt not' it is the one guaranty of human freedom to the American people unless they themselves destroy their safeguard.

"We are in danger of forgetting this under the terrorism of mass thought, but we can forget it only at our imminent peril. There is revolution in reaction as well as in radicalism, and Toryism speaking a jargon of law and order may often be a graver menace to liberty than radicalism bellowing the empty phrases of the soap-box demagogue.

SOUNDS LIKE SEDITION.

"Writing from Paris to Abigail Adams, Thomas Jefferson said that—

"The spirit of resistance to government is so valuable on certain occasions that I wish it always to be kept alive. It will often be exercised when wrong, but better so than not to be exercised at all.

"If the author of the Declaration of Independence were to utter such a sentiment to-day, the Post Office Department could exclude him from the mail, grand juries could indict him for sedition and criminal syndicalism, legislative committees could seize his private papers and search them for evidence of Bolshevism, and United States Senators would be clamoring for his deportation on the ground that he had been tainted with the ribald doctrines of the French Revolution and should be sent back to live with the rest of the terrorists.

"Thus the political philosophy of one generation becomes the political anathema of another.

"Now, I am not much disposed to agree with Jefferson's dictum on the moral duty of resistance to government unless it is abundantly qualified. Nevertheless all the liberties that we hold to-day have come from resistance to government, and most of them were won by blood and iron. Thanks to the men who were willing to challenge authority and die for liberty, we, their political heirs, have been armed with newer and better weapons.

"To Abraham Lincoln the issue of the Civil War was very simple. It was that 'among free men there can be no successful appeal from the ballot to the bullet.' There we are on solid ground. With universal suffrage that is a foundation which can never be shaken, and we can build on it in complete confidence. Under free institutions whatever can be taken to the ballot box has the inalienable right to make its appeal to the ballot box. Whatever denies the final authority of the ballot box is a challenge to the Republic, and that alone is a challenge.

"This standard of judgment can be applied to all the unrest and discontent to which the country is now subjected. In so far as discontent appeals directly to violence there is an abundance of law to meet it if public officials, municipal, State, and Federal, will discharge the commonplace duties of their offices. In so far as it appeals to public opinion and the ordinary processes of representative government we need not be disturbed for the safety of the Republic unless we lack faith in popular institutions and believe that at heart the American people are destitute of sense and sanity and incapable of self-rule.

"The policy of repression that has been generally adopted by governors, mayors, and police officials—in some cases by Federal authority—to meet this propaganda of radicalism is fatal. Two thousand years of history bear witness to its folly. Nobody ever succeeded in bettering the weather by putting the thermometer in jail, and nobody will ever remove the causes of unrest and discontent by trying to suppress their manifestations.

BEST TEST OF TRUTH.

"Justice Holmes of the United States Supreme Court recently said in a dissenting opinion in a sedition case that 'the best test of the truth is the power of the thought to get itself accepted in the competition of the market.' That will always remain the best test of truth, and we can not afford to tamper with it, however strong the immediate provocation may be, nor can we afford to suppress that competition.

"In a speech delivered in Carnegie Hall last week a very eminent New York lawyer, Mr. Henry W. Taft, complained that the Department of Justice was shifting to the States the duty of prosecuting radicals, and asked: 'But is not the protection of American people against revolutionary propaganda peculiarly within the function of the Federal Government?' The protection of the people against crime and violence and the destruction of property is an elementary function of government. But government protecting the American people against revolutionary propaganda is a new manifestation of paternal authority. I wonder what old Sam Adams would say to that? Or Patrick Henry? Or Benjmin Franklin, with his grim joke about hanging together or hanging separately? Or Thomas Jefferson? Or George Washington? Or all the rest of that noble congregation of rebels who to their defiance of George III pledged their lives and their fortunes and their sacred honor?

"This theory that it is the duty of government to protect the people from propaganda is Prussianism. It was the gospel of His Imperial Majesty the German Kaiser. Protecting people from revolutionary propaganda was one of his most sacred functions. Now there is no Imperial Majesty and no German Kaiser, and no majestaets-beleidigung and no divine right. Autocratic Russia saw the doctrine in its fullest flower, and it was eventually followed by the most horrible, by the most ghastly, by the most degrading revolution known to human history. Significantly enough, no sooner was this new tyranny established than Lenin and Trotski proceeded in their turn to 'protect the people from revolutionary propaganda' by suppressing all but the Bolshevist newspapers.

REVOLUTION BY USURPATION.

"Either the people are fit to govern or they are not. If they are fit to govern it is no function of government to protect them from any kind of propaganda. They will protect themselves. That capacity for self-protection is the very essence of self-government. Without it popular institutions are inconceivable, and the moment that a republican form of government sets itself up as the nursemaid of the people, to train their immature minds to suit its own purposes and to guard them from all influences that it considers contaminating, we already have a revolution and a revolution backward, a revolution by usurpation.

"How is there to be any public opinion at all if government is to be the final arbiter of political theories and economic doctrines?

"When government undertakes to regulate opinions, the burden of proof must always rest upon it. If history teaches any lesson whatever, its lesson is that the most dangerous and futile of all methods of combating erroneous political and economic beliefs is for government to set itself up as a judge and executioner.

NO NEW EXPERIENCE.

"But, it will be said, the doctrines that government is called upon to suppress are of foreign origin; they are advocated in large part by an alien population; they are antagonistic to the principles of the Republic, and we can not afford to have the American people adopt them. Quite true. But what of it? This is not the first time that there has been nation-wide unrest and discontent. It is not the first time that wild and lunatic remedies have been prescribed for public ills. It is not the first time that foreign revolutionary theories have invaded the United States. It is not the first time that property rights have been attacked in their very citadel.

"American conservatives were once quite as terrified by the spread in this country of the extreme theories of the French Revolution as they are now terrified by the spread of Bolshevism. They were quite as eager for repression; yet the French Revolution never shattered a single American institution. It raised up no American breed of Marats and Robespierres. It set up no guillotines on American soil and beheaded no aristocrats. The American people thrashed the issue out and went on their way.

"Is it not possible that they still retain a scanty remnant of their ancient common sense? Is it not possible that they might even listen to a sympathetic exposition of the maniacal principles of Bolshevism without being seized with an irrepressible desire to destroy everything they have created and give themselves over to famine and disease and anarchy in order to establish a dictatorship of the proletariat?

BOLSHEVISM IN THE OPEN.

"I am not afraid of Bolshevism in the open, where the American people can examine it and weigh it and consider it. I am not afraid that the American people are going to rise up en masse and join the I. W. W. to destroy the institution of their own private property unless government prevents them by force. It is just as well to remember that the preamble of the Constitution of the United States does not begin 'We the Government of the United States,' but 'We the people of the United States.' The history of this country for more than 140 years proves that the American people can be trusted, and in the long run they can be trusted a great deal further than the professional politicians that they generally select to represent them in their government.

"The failures of popular government have always been failures of public opinion—mostly of public opinion that was ill-informed, of public opinion that was denied the facts, of public opinion that was misguided by self-constituted masters. That will always remain a great menace, and public opinion is never to be safeguarded by trying to prevent it by law from coming into contact with political heresy. There is no surer way to give those doctrines a foothold than to proscribe them. It is not the revolutionary doctrine which is shouted from the market place that is to be feared, but the revolutionary doctrine that is whispered everywhere in the ear of discontent and that can claim in its favor the test of martyrdom.

MILITANT PATRIOTISM.

"There is no other such prolific breeder of revolution as reaction, and reaction is now engaged in capitalizing the militant patriotism that the war aroused. It is denying freedom of speech, denying freedom of assemblage—denying the most sacred guaranties of the Constitution that it professes to guard and defend.

"When the French soldiers began to return home after four years in the trenches, thousands of them declared that they would never again do any work. It sometimes seems that after the armistice was signed, millions of Americans must have taken a vow that they would never again do any thinking for themselves. They were willing to die for their country, but not willing to think for it, and under the influence of propaganda they had lost the habit of independent thought.

"It is here that we squarely confront the question of the responsibility of newspapers in respect to the formation of an enlightened and fully responsible public opinion.

NEWSPAPERS AND THE WAR.

"Of the work of the American newspapers in the war the most chronic faultfinder can not justly complain. They printed all the news that government would permit them to print. They almost bankrupted themselves to obtain it. They were the first victims of the censorship and the daily prey of the propagandists. They never hesitated in rendering any service of which they were capable, and they never counted the cost. On the whole, they displayed a sense of responsibility that in itself is the highest decoration for distinguished service.

"When we come to the newspaper in relation to the events of the last year, it is a very different story and a less satisfactory story. Newspapers are very human institutions, and when the fighting ceased they reacted in much the way the general public reacted. The notion was general that, with hostilities ended, prewar conditions would naturally be restored, and the newspapers followed the common notion.

"That was a great mistake. They were not prepared for the waves of discontent and unrest that spread over the country. They were not prepared for the social ferment that followed the war. They were not prepared for the industrial upheavals that came. For the most part they had settled down to the comfortable assumption that with Germany beaten, with the Kaiser exiled, with the war won, everything was going to be for the best in the best possible of worlds, and that is not the way it turned out at all.

THE BASIC CAUSE.

"When strike followed strike, when industrial disturbances became nation-wide, when labor and capital instantly began a hand-to-hand fight over a new division of the profits and the spoils, when the labor leaders discovered that there was a tight labor market and began to squeeze the employer, just as the banks squeeze the borrower when there is a tight money market, a vast number of perfectly good and respectable people were much disturbed in their souls, and the newspapers reflected this disturbance. Instead of trying to get at the basic cause of it all, they adopted the primitive medicine-man procedure of hunting out the devil upon whom the responsibility could be laid.

"Four hundred thousand steel workers had gone out because the leader of the strike had once been a syndicalist. All the shipping in New York was tied up because I. W. W. agitators had taken possession of 80,000 longshoremen. Four hundred thousand miners quit in defiance of Federal law because two factions in the union were battling for control. And so it went. Nothing in this complicated world is ever quite so simple as that.

"The first duty of a newspaper to public opinion is to furnish the raw materials for it and the tools for its formation. American newspapers are not doing this in respect to this new economic situation, as many newspaper men keenly realize without quite knowing how to remedy it. The war has left a new set of problems and the newspapers have not yet met them. They are not driving to the heart of things. They are still skimming the surface, and it is only now and then that a reporter gets under the skin of these great events.

DUTY OF THE PRESS TO-DAY.

"This, in a way, helps to account for the more or less chaotic state of public opinion in this country, and it is doubly unfortunate, because the American people have no passion for profound study of public questions until these questions reach the stage of a crisis. Day by day they like to get their news from headlines and to rely for their judgments on what somebody tells them.

"The gravest duty that confronts the American press to-day is to bring these vast questions that have come out of the war into the forum of public discussion. The barrier of propaganda must be broken down. The competent, independent investigating reporter must come back to his own. This is vital. The American people can not deal intelligently with any of these problems without knowing the facts, and they can not know the facts until the newspapers brush aside the propagandists of contending factions and get back to first principles of news gathering. All this is fundamental.

"It is impossible of fulfillment, nevertheless, unless the newspapers set themselves squarely against this rising Prussianism which is seeking to make a fetich out of government and endow it with the power of damnation over all dissenting political and economic beliefs. If the guaranties of the Bill of Rights are to be overriden in the name of superpatriotism, the newspapers themselves will be the ultimate victims of the new dispensation that is called to suppress freedom of speech and of the press, and we shall have no public opinion at all except that which cringes under the lash of officeholders. If Government is to be erected into a god, who of us can be sure of salvation?

SECURITY OF THE MINORITY.

"Lord Acton made the security of the minority the basis of freedom and that will always be the basis, however offensive the minority's views may be and however mischievous the principles that it advocates may appear. De Tocqueville framed essentially the same definition in still more striking form when he voiced his warning against the tyranny of the majority. The inherent sovereignty of the citizen over government was pictured by it in words that for a century and a half have been part of the political heritage of the English-speaking peoples.

"The poorest man in his cottage may bid defiance to all the force of the Crown. It may be frail; its roof may shake; the wind may blow through it; the storms may enter, the rain may enter—but the King of England can not enter; all his forces dare not cross the threshold of the ruined tenement.

"Free government must forever be the resultant of all the forces that are brought to bear upon it, radical and reactionary, liberal and conservative, revolutionary and Bourbon, socialistic and individualistic, and whenever any of those forces is compelled to resort to secrecy the equilibrium is destroyed and the way is open to disaster.

"What I have said to-night is not a plea for the new radicalism, for to me most of this new radicalism is the very negation of political and economic sanity. What I am pleading for is the restoration of the traditions of the Republic, for the restoration of the proved safeguards of human liberty, for the restoration of the free play of public opinion, without which democracy is stifled and can not exist; for the restoration of the old faith of the fathers which has never yet failed the Nation in a crisis—the faith that they themselves sealed in their own blood.

"God forbid that our supreme achievement in this war should be the Prussianizing of ourselves!"

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Paris Temps. Portions of it have been printed, but I have procured the complete article and translated it. It is a very interesting article, being a careful examination of every one of the reservations by that leading paper of France, which speaks with great authority. It analyzes every one of the different reservations and finds no objection to any one of them.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Le Temps, Paris, Dec. 6, 1919.]

THE STORY OF THE AMERICAN RESERVATIONS.

"Why have the Allies been obliged to send to Germany the injunction that the supreme council drafted yesterday? It is, in the first place, because the treaty of Versailles has not yet been ratified by the United States.

"The German military men and diplomats believe that the line of the Allies has been broken. This it is which emboldens them, and we have been forced to bring them back to reason.

"Why do we not know how we can make the league of nations function and how we can put into operation the treaty of guaranty which is to protect France against German aggression? How are we to obtain for Europe the financial help of America? Why do we not know, in a word, how we can repair the injuries of the war nor how we shall maintain the stipulations of the peace? It is, in the first place, because we do not know whether the United States will ratify the treaty of Versailles. American intervention has powerfully contributed to victory. Will not the American abstention compromise the fruits of that victory?

"There is the danger. Now, let us seek the underlying cause. Why has not the treaty of Versailles been ratified by the United States?

"The answer is made that it is on account of the reservations which the American Senate has adopted. But who in Paris has read these reservations?

"We publish to-day a complete translation of them. Do they, as it is said, destroy the bases of the treaty? Rather than accept them, would it be better to go without the American ratification? Everybody with the text in hand can reach an opinion. In the meantime let us express ours.

"The 14 reservations and interpretations of the American Senate are preceded by a preamble which directly interests the allied powers. The American ratification will not become effective, the Senate declares, unless three of the principal allied powers—England, France, Italy, and Japan—accept by an exchange of notes the 'reservations and interpretations' voted at Washington. This declaration of the Senate presents a question of form and also a question of substance. Can the Allies accept in this form the reservations and interpretations formulated by the United States? We do not see what prevents their doing so. Yesterday the supreme council authorized the Jugo-Slav delegation to formulate a reservation in acceding to the arrangements which are annexed to the treaty of St. Germain. There is, therefore, a precedent. And if the precedent did not exist it would be one of the cases in which we may say that it would be necessary to invent one. There is no man of good sense who will not admit that we can not hesitate upon a question of form as to accepting the ratification of the United States.

"But there is also a question of substance. Have the reservations and the interpretations of the American Senate been conceived in such a manner that the Allies can accept them? That is what remains to be examined.

"In the first article of the treaty of Versailles—which is also the first article of the pact or covenant establishing the league of nations—it is stipulated that 'any member of the league may, after two years' notice of its intention so to do, withdraw from the league, provided that all its international obligations and all its obligations under this covenant shall have been fulfilled at the time of its withdrawal.' The American Senate interprets this text in the following terms: 'The United States shall be the sole judge as to whether all its international obligations and all its obligations under the said covenant have been fulfilled.' This interpretation is not contrary to the treaty. Moreover, it may be asked what force exists which could retain the United States in the league of nations if after two years' notice they consider that they have the absolute right to withdraw?

"Article 10 of the treaty obliges the signatories, as members of the society of nations, 'to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league.' In addition, other articles of the treaty in certain cases may necessitate armed intervention. The American Senate declares that there can be no such intervention 'unless in any particular case the Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the sole power to declare war or authorize the employment of the military or naval forces of the United States, shall by act or joint resolution so provide.' This is the evidence: Article 1 of the American Constitution reserves exclusively to Congress the power of declaring war as well as the power of raising and supporting armies and of providing and maintaining a navy. No treaty, no pact, can constrain the United States to use their armed forces without the preliminary approbation of the Congress.

"It is because of an analogous idea that the Senate, in its eleventh reservation, asserts for the United States the right of determining whether it is proper or not to interrupt commercial relations and others with a country which has entered upon war outside the control of the league of nations. If the United States did not reserve to themselves this power of determination, they might be drawn into the war without Congress having had the opportunity to pass upon it.

"The third, the seventh, and the ninth reservations call for no discussion on our part. They consist in prescribing that the President of the United States must consult Congress before accepting a mandate in foreign territory, before engaging in expenses for the league of nations, and before sending delegates in the commissions, committees, and other organizations where the United States is to be represented.

"The fourth and fifth reservations are more important. The United States maintain that they alone have the right to decide 'what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction,' and so forth, and in this way withdraw themselves from all intervention by the league of nations or any foreign power. They declare themselves resolved to be the sole interpreters of their 'long-established policy, commonly known as the Monroe doctrine.' But who is there among the allied powers who would wish to seek a controversy with the United States upon this point? Certainly it is not France, and France is well resolved, for her own part, to decide alone what the questions are which relate solely to her domestic jurisdiction.

"Is it necessary to make objections to the eighth reservation, which provides that the restrictions upon the commerce of the United States with Germany, upon the demand of the reparation commission, shall not be effective unless they have been sanctioned by the American Congress?

"Must we refuse to the Americans the right proclaimed by the tenth reservation, to augment their armaments without the consent of the council of the league 'whenever the United States is threatened with invasion or engaged in war'?

"The eighth article of the covenant is drawn in such a way that no member of the league of nations is forced to limit its armaments in the degree suggested by the council. If a State, nevertheless, accepts this limitation, which is not obligatory, is it to be forbidden to increase its armament when it feels itself to be imperiled?

"In its fourteenth reservation the American Senate declares that the United States will not consider itself bound by decisions of the league of nations when one of the States belonging to the league shall have cast several votes, due to the votes of the dominions of the other countries which are politically bound to it. France can not protest against this suggestion, because it has not wished to ask that Algeria and the French protectorates should be represented in the league of nations by delegates whose votes would be added to its own.

"There remains finally—outside of the twelfth and thirteenth reservations, which do not appear to raise any difficulty—the famous reservation No. 6, which relates to Shantung. The form is radical, and if China had signed the peace of Versailles it would have been necessary to admit that the Far Eastern part of the treaty had been overthrown. This reservation declares that 'the United States withholds its assent to articles 156, 157, and 158, and reserves full liberty of action with respect to any controversy which may arise under said articles between the Republic of China and the Empire of Japan.' But this article applies to Chinese territory, and China has not signed. Practically, judicially even, this is all still in suspense. The American declaration changes nothing in the existing situation. The rights of each party remain intact. Japan remains in possession of the object of litigation. The American reservation overturns nothing, as nothing is yet constructed, and is it for this that we shall refuse the ratification of the United States, that ratification upon which depends perhaps the entire peace?

"It has been asserted that the reservations of the American Senate were a disavowal of the work accomplished by the conference at Paris. It has been asserted that the United States in this way signify their will and intention of not concerning themselves further either with Europe or the peace. The time has come to oppose the truth to this mischievous misrepresentation.

"Even if the reservations required that in two or three places the league of nations be changed—and it can be amended regularly in virtue of article 26—the reservations of the United States contain nothing which would warrant the Allies in rejecting an American ratification offered under these conditions. The reservations contain, on the other hand, certain very wise interpretations which we have an interest in sanctioning. Let French opinion, when informed, express itself boldly."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I also ask to have printed in the RECORD a dispatch containing an extract from articles in the London Times approving the acceptance of any reservations that America chooses to adopt.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RATIFY TREATY ON ANY TERMS, EUROPE URGES UNITED STATES—LONDON TIMES SAYS RESERVATIONS, IF DEEMED NECESSARY, WOULD BE WELCOMED TO STABILIZE WORLD.

LONDON, December 30.

The Times says editorially that it is of the highest importance to the civilized world that the United States should sign immediately the treaty with Germany, and expresses the opinion that the British people, and also the French, would welcome America's ratification on any reasonable terms. The Times says:

"The Allies want America to ratify the treaty for many reasons of the highest moment. They want her to ratify now; they want her ratification to have the American people behind it. They would greatly prefer that she should ratify the treaty as her President and her other representatives helped to mold it and as President Wilson signed it.

"They think that ratification as it stands would do most for the immediate pacification of a troubled world, for the economic welfare of mankind, for the development and stability of public law, for the adjustment by legal means of international differences, for the prevention of future wars, for the spread of civilization, for the security of society in all lands, and generally for the gradual progress toward fulfillment of the just and generous ideals for which America came and fought by the side of her sister democracies.

"That is their belief. They believe also that such ratification is in the true and abiding interest of America herself.

"But if America does not now share this belief, they recognize without reserve that the right of decision must be hers. If she thinks that reservations are necessary for her safety and freedom, that they are demanded by the provisions of her Constitution or by the traditions of her foreign policy, they will welcome ratification by her on any reasonable terms.

"We are confident that this is the view of the British people and we feel almost as certain that it is the view of the French."

Mr. LODGE. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Morning Post, another of the great newspapers of London, taking a different view, which is that the United States is quite right in rejecting the whole league and that England ought to do the same.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HALF A LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

"We have raised a still, small voice against the covenant in this country and upon several grounds. The first is that it creates a dual allegiance, which we take to be dangerous to the British Empire. Hitherto every State within the Empire has looked to His Majesty's Government as the supreme authority and the only protection; the covenant creates a new authority and a new guardian to which States within the Empire might appeal against the authority of His Majesty's Government. That is objection No. 1. Objection No. 2 is that it reduces and undermines the sovereignty of our now independent State. Hitherto the British nation has been a sovereign nation with all a sovereign nation's powers; the proposal is to transfer some of these powers—vital powers—to a superior government upon which the British nation will be in a permanent minority. Our third objection is that it leads the nation to rely upon an outside power for security, whereas all history shows that a nation survives in a free State only by its own power to defend itself. The covenant we have compared to a rotten parapet on a bridge, which is more dangerous than a bridge with no parapet at all. And our fourth objection was that under any such scheme the preponderance of power in the league would fall into the hands of the Central Powers—that is to say, of Germany—which by its position commands more influence than we upon the circumference of the European circle are likely to possess. That objection, we admit, might be weakened if the United States were a party to the covenant, because the United States might be expected to balance Germany. It is correspondingly strengthened if the United States stands out of the covenant.

"And that is what the United States appears to be going to do. The Senate, in the barbarous but expressive phrase of President Wilson, has 'cut the heart out of the covenant.' It has added a series of reservations, the result of which is to leave America without any obligation either to support or to obey or even to remain within the league of nations. Now, for our part, we can not but admire the Senate for the stand that it has taken. It has, in fact, taken its stand upon the independence of the United States as a sovereign nation, and its power to look after its own affairs and its own defense. It has also recognized the law of growth and decay in history, and has refused to commit itself to the portentous obligation of maintaining the world as it happens to stand in this present year of grace. The United States, if the Senate carries its point, will 'assume no obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere with controvesies between other nations, whether members of the league of nations or not, or employ military or naval forces under any article of the treaty for any purpose,' unless by act or resolution of Congress. That is to say, as far as the United States is concerned, the league of nations might as well not exist. Besides this cardinal reservation there are others—the United States reserves the right to increase armaments, the right to decide what questions are its own affair, the sole right to interpret the Monroe doctrine, etc. In fact, there is hardly a shred or tatter of the original covenant left if these reservations are allowed. Now there is talk of compromise, and there is the presidential 'veto power'; that is to say, the President can refer a bill back within 10 days after its passage, and that bill does not become law unless it is supported by a two-thirds vote of both Houses. But the President can not force his covenant upon the Legislature, and the Legislature does not seem to be in the least inclined to give way. Unless the unexpected happens, the covenant will only pass as an eviscerated and derisory measure. The President, to be quite candid, is not in a position to deliver his own goods.

"Now, there was one argument which was always advanced by certain wiseacres in support of the league of nations. It was this: That by no other means could America be induced to enter into relations of alliance with France and England. We never thought much of that argument, but now that it is apparently to be exploded are we still to be forced into this covenant? Are we to join in a league in which the most powerful member refuses beforehand to accept the responsibilities which we shall have to accept? We notice that the league of nations press is already preparing the country for this incredible proposition. We are to accept all the obligations, and the United States is to accept none of them, yet the United States is to have an equal vote with ourselves. Surely it is obvious that no self-respecting nation can look at such an arrangement. We must all regret the illness of the President, but it is idle to disguise the fact that his enthusiasm for an impractical ideal has got the whole world into a terrible mess. We do not know what solution there may be, but we can only hope that the abortive covenant will be separated from the treaty and allowed to drop into a deserved oblivion."

BOLSHEVIST MOVEMENT IN RUSSIA (S. DOC. NO. 172).

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed as a Senate document a memorandum on Certain Aspects of the Bolshevist Movement in Russia. It has been printed by the State Department and given to the press to-day, and the department thinks it is very desirable to have it printed as a Senate document. I think so, too. It is very valuable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TREATY OF PEACE AND LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. KNOX. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to the London Times by Thomas E. Holland, a distinguished international lawyer of Oxford, England, offering certain suggestions for ratifying the treaty of peace with the league of nations.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

OXFORD, December 16.

To the EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR: The league is unquestionably "a brave design." Sympathy with its objects and some hope that they may be realized have induced myself, as doubtless many others, to abstain from criticizing the way in which the topic has been handled by the representatives of the victorious powers. Recent discussions seem, however, to render such reticence no longer desirable.

It begins to be recognized that, as some of us have all along held to be the case, a serious mistake was made by the Paris delegates when they combined in one and the same document provisions needed for putting an end to an existing state of war with other provisions aiming at the creation in the future of a new supernational society. Two matters so wholly incongruous in character should surely have been dealt with separately. Whether it is now too late to attempt a remedy for the consequences of this unfortunate combination is a question which can be answered only by the diplomatists whose business it is to be intimately in touch with the susceptibilities of the various nations concerned. In the meantime, however, on the assumption that this state of things is productive of regrettable results, I may perhaps venture to indicate, recommending their adoption, the steps which appear to be required for the reformation of the treaty as drafted. My suggestions would run as follows:

(1) Subtract from the treaty of Versailles Parts I and XIII; the former constituting a league of nations, the latter, in pursuance of a recital that universal peace "can be established only if it is based upon social justice," wholly occupied with a sufficiently ambitious scheme for the regulation by the league of all questions relating to "labor" which may arise within its jurisdiction.

(2) Let Part I, with Part XIII annexed, constitute a new and independent treaty; to be, as such, submitted to the powers for further consideration. (The opportunity might be taken of ridding it of all references to a system of "mandates," which might very probably lead to jealousies and misunderstandings.)

(3) Parts II to XII, XIV, and XV would then constitute the real treaty of peace, in which it would, however, be necessary in the numerous articles attributing functions, for the most part of a temporary character, to the "league of nations," to substitute for any mention of the league words descriptive of some other authority, yet to be created, such as, for instance, "a commission to be constituted by the principal allied and associated powers."

I am, sir, your obedient servant.

T. E. HOLLAND.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

On December 23, 1919:

S. J. Res. 137. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to construct a pontoon bridge across the Chattahoochee River at West Point, Ga., and for other purposes.

S. 3284. An act to provide for the national welfare by continuing the United States Sugar Equalization Board until December 31, 1920, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 11224. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," approved October 16, 1918, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The first business on the calendar will be stated.

The resolution (S. Res. 76) defining a peace treaty which shall assure to the people of the United States the attainment of the ends for which they entered the war, and declaring the policy of our Government to meet fully obligations to ourselves and to the world, was announced as first in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 529) for the relief of the heirs of Adam and Noah Brown was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 600) for the relief of the heirs of Mrs. Susan A. Nicholas was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1223) for the relief of the owner of the steamer Mayflower, and for the relief of passengers on board said steamer, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 174) for the relief of Emma H. Ridley was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1722) for the relief of Watson B. Dickerman, administrator of the estate of Charles Mackman, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 168) to create a commission to investigate and report to Congress a plan on the questions involved in the financing of house construction and home ownership and Federal aid therefor was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2224) to incorporate the Recreation Association of America was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1660) to provide a division of tuberculosis in, and an advisory council for, the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CANAL ZONE REGULATIONS.

The bill (S. 1273) to prohibit intoxicating liquors and prostitution within the Canal Zone, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] on several occasions has asked that this bill go over, stating that the same object sought to be attained by the passage of this bill has been attained by legislation already enacted by Congress. If the Senator from Washington were here I should ask that the bill be indefinitely postponed, but, in his absence, I will simply ask that it be placed on the calendar under Rule IX instead of under Rule VIII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2457) to provide for a library information service in the Bureau of Education was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 131) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1448) for the relief of Jacob Nice, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 102) to equalize the pay and allowances of commissioned officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Coast Guard with those of the Navy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 172) for the selection of a special committee to investigate the administration of the office of the Alien Property Custodian, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2978) to establish additional fish-cultural subsidiary stations in the State of Michigan, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

HEIGHT OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 6863) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Colorado to ask that the bill go over.

Mr. THOMAS. I will withdraw the request temporarily.

Mr. SMOOT. On a number of occasions during the last few months I have asked that this bill go over, but I understand now that the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], who reported the bill, is willing to accept an amendment which I have prepared, and if the Senator from Colorado does not object I should like to offer the amendment to the bill at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. Reserving the right to object, I will give the Senator an opportunity to offer the amendment.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 3, following line 6, I propose to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, line 6, after the words "hereinafter provided," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following words:

And provided further, That in residence districts the usual accessories of a residence located on the same lot, including the office of a physician, dentist, or other person, and including a private garage containing space for not more than four automobiles, shall not be prohibited.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I hope there will be no objection to the consideration of this bill this morning. We have had it up on another occasion. It was considered for one morning, and its passage is very much desired by the commissioners. I think it will tend to preserve the city of Washington from the erection of objectionable buildings. The committee is perfectly willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from Utah, and I hope we may consider the bill this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, before passing to the next order of the calendar I wish to add to what the Senator from New York has said that there is an immediate emergency for legislation on this subject. There is now in course of construction in Washington a $1,600,000 apartment house that ought not to have been permitted to go to the height it is, but we would have been compelled in good conscience to provide an appropriation for damages if we had stopped it. I am satisfied that this apartment house will in some degree encroach upon the rights of the park on which it abuts. This bill contains some proper regulations for subjects of that kind. There is still further frontage on this same park that at any time, under existing laws, may be covered by another structure. There is nothing now, except moral pressure on the public buildings department of the District, to restrain similar cases, and I hope some immediate and prompt action will be taken on the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say that my objections to the bill in the past have been on the ground that it confers undue power upon a commission here to say just what class of buildings shall be built in any district created under the terms of the bill. I think myself that it ought to be modified more than I have modified it by the amendment which has just been adopted; but I know there is a necessity for some sort of legislation regulating the buildings that may be erected in the District in the future, and for that reason I am not going to object further to its passage in its present form. I do believe, however, that it is going altogether too far and that we could attain the same object that the advocates of the bill expect to attain by cutting from the bill a number of provisions granting what I, at least, consider undue authority.

I am not going to say anything more, however. If the Senate desires the bill passed, it can pass it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I regard this bill as one which is aimed at or which was provoked by the construction of certain apartment buildings which are at present in an uncompleted condition. These buildings are very much needed because of the crowded and congested condition of the population in the District. They are being constructed under agreements which were based upon the purposes of the owners and which were preceded by bond issues, part security for which, of course, are the buildings when they are completed according to the plans.

I have always assumed that building conditions in the District were the subject of regulations which were adopted or enacted some time ago. There are no so-called skyscrapers in the District; and the fact, unless I have been greatly misinformed, is due to the existence of regulations, possibly of congressional statutes, upon the strength of which the buildings now under course of construction were begun, and, of course, upon plans prepared in accordance with existing conditions. If that is so, there may be no urgent reason for this legislation at this time; and if it is so, any legislation now enacted will be prospective in its operation.

But, Mr. President, my principal objection to the bill is that it creates another commission; it adds another to the multitudinous bureaus that are already infesting the District. While it is upon the face of it a somewhat harmless one, a little thing, it is nevertheless one which, like all others, will expand, and as its activities increase the office force supposed to be necessary to enforce its provisions will also increase and the expenditures will increase from the modest sum embraced in this bill to whatever subsequent Congresses may in their wisdom, or the lack of it, see fit to grant.

I know that a good many of these commissions are needed; but the whole drift of our governmental activity for the past 15 or 20 years has been to the creation of bureaus, commissions, and commissions. Scarcely a law is enacted but that it carries with it the creation of a bureau for the enforcement of its provisions. We are becoming, if indeed we are not, a bureaucracy. The time is rapidly approaching when it will be difficult for a man to kiss his wife except by act of Congress, and then perhaps only through the agency of a bureau or a board or something of that sort. Now, this is the new year. Let us at least try to stem the tide of this tendency to increase and multiply bureaus and commissions. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection until I can make a statement on this matter?

Mr. THOMAS. I will.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I introduced in the last Congress a bill which was the forerunner of this measure. I introduced it because some four years ago we adopted in the city of New York a regulation dealing with this very subject. We had discovered after years of experience that all sorts of buildings were being constructed in the finest residential sections of our city, objectionable buildings—garages, stables, factories. People often were getting permits for the purpose of holding up owners of valuable land, and we concluded there that we ought to have some such method of controlling the character of buildings to be constructed in that city. This law has been in operation now for a period of nearly five years. It has worked splendidly.

I have in mind a transaction in which I was interested myself. I had built a number of valuable houses on a residential street where there was no restriction in the deeds as to the character of the buildings. A man came along and applied for a permit to build a laundry, five stories high, at a cost of several hundred thousand dollars. He built this laundry, and it injured the value of the surrounding property to the extent of at least a quarter of a million dollars. I have in mind another instance in New York City, where an application was made for a permit to build a public garage in a residential section after the zoning law went into effect. It was denied, with the result that the value of the existing property was preserved.

The pending measure was developed as the result of my bill of last session. It was not presented to cover the one building now in course of construction on Sixteenth Street. It was introduced for the purpose of maintaining the beauty of the city of Washington, and I will say to the Senator from Colorado that no measure has been introduced in any session of the American Congress that will do more than this measure to help the future of Washington.

The Senator speaks of the fact that the bill creates an additional commission. It is true that there must be some governmental authority to pass upon this subject, and we have provided a commission which is composed entirely of present officials of the Government. The bill states that they shall be paid no additional salary. The clerks necessary will be provided from existing bureaus of the city government, and it will not cost the taxpayers anything. I am sure that if the Senator from Colorado will examine carefully into the merits of this measure he will be convinced that it is an excellent thing to do.

I might add that very recently a law has been passed in Missouri covering the construction of buildings in St. Louis, and within the last 30 days the same thing has been done for Baltimore, and it is under consideration in the city of Philadelphia. The thing has worked splendidly in New York, and efforts are being made throughout the country to make similar laws effective in the various communities, and I hope the Senator will permit the bill to be considered.

Mr. THOMAS. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ETHEL PROCTOR.

The bill (S. 2773) for the relief of Ethel Proctor was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ADMISSION TO ARMY AND NAVY HOSPITALS.

The bill (S. 2207) admitting civilian employees of the United States Government stricken with tuberculosis to Army and Navy hospitals was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine with amendments, on line 5, after the word "admitted," to insert "so far as capacity may allow," and on line 6, after the word "Navy," to insert "or for the Public Health Service," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That civilian employees of the United States Government stricken with tuberculosis while in the employment of said Government shall be admitted, so far as capacity may allow, to hospitals already established for the Army and Navy or for the Public Health Service on the same terms accorded those already entitled to admission.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs whether this bill would interfere in any way with the hospitals that are now controlled by the military branch of the Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I can reply to the Senator from Utah only in a very sketchy way. The bill did not come from the Committee on Military Affairs. I have never given it examination. I assume that if there are not now, there soon will be some empty beds in the Army hospitals. Of course, it has been the purpose of the department and the hope of Congress that as the hospitals were emptied out, nearly all of them being of temporary construction, they would be disposed of and not maintained indefinitely for any other purpose.

I confess to not having examined this bill, as it did not come before the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Utah will not object to the consideration of this bill. A most distressing case came to my notice a short time ago. A lady, who was the sole support of her mother and two children, obtained employment in the War Department when the call went out to the women of the country to come and take the places of men who had left to serve in the Army. While she was there she contracted tuberculosis and applied for admission to the Navy hospital. Under the rules and under the law they were obliged to deny admission to her. She picked up and went to Denver, Colo., where she is now. I have recently heard from her. The case just casually came to my notice. I am not interested in the lady in any way, but it occurred to me that she was almost if not quite as much entitled to admission to an Army or Navy hospital as though she were actually in the field when she coptracted the disease. I trust that we shall not deny to the civilian employees of the Army and Navy admission to the Army and Navy hospitals.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator from Montana a question relating to the bill? I have just examined it for the first time. It is true it is very short and simple. I notice that it permits the admission of civilian employees of the United States Government who have been stricken with tuberculosis into Army and Navy hospitals, so far as the capacity may allow, and also by an amendment into Public Health Service hospitals. As I recollect, the Public Health Service hospitals are essentially for civilians. It is true that at present they are largely filled with ex-soldiers; but they are civilians, nevertheless.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My understanding is that most of the Public Health Service hospitals were originally erected for the care of seamen.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but under an amendment to the statutes a couple of years ago, or under war-time legislation, the Public Health Service is now charged, as I understand it, with the care of tuberculous patients who are discharged soldiers and discharged sailors. There must be additional capacity in those hospitals, and I am wondering if it would not meet the emergency which the Senator from Montana mentions if we confine this privilege to the Public Health Service hospitals and leave out the Army and Navy hospitals, which are for the treatment of military persons.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am not advised, of course, as to the capacity of the hospitals. My attention has not heretofore been called to this bill. I simply spoke of a case that came under my observation. But I desire to call attention to the fact that just as soon as one of these civilian employees is demonstrably tuberculous it becomes obviously the duty of the superintendent of the particular branch of the Government in which that person is employed to dismiss him or her from the service. The contamination would be disastrous as a matter of course. It is a most unfortunate situation, and if the disease were contracted in the service it does seem to me as though there were at least a moral obligation on the Government to take care of the patient.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am in hearty sympathy with the contention of the Senator from Montana. I only had the thought in mind that from the administrative standpoint it is unwise to mingle civilian patients and military patients in an Army hospital, because an Army hospital has to be operated under military regulations, and certain disciplinary measures must always be enforced; and if there were room in the Public Health Service hospitals for the persons to whom the Senator from Montana refers, I think it would be wise to confine their admission to that kind of a hospital, which is essentially a civilian hospital.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am not able to give the Senator from New York any information on that point. I observe that the bill was reported by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], who doubtless will be able to give definite information on the subject.

Mr. FRANCE. I would say, if the Senator from New York will yield, that there is hardly a possibility of any civilian employees being placed in an Army or Navy hospital. In all probability such civilian employees would be placed in one of the Public Health Service hospitals.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is where they ought to be placed.

Mr. FRANCE. But if there should be a vacant bed in an Army hospital or in an Army tuberculosis sanatorium, and there should be a civilian employee with tuberculosis, it seems to me that it would be very unwise to deprive that civilian employee of treatment simply because there happened to be no vacant bed in a Public Health Service hospital or sanatorium. In case of an emergency he could be placed in an Army or a Navy hospital, but in all probability that emergency would never arise.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall not object to the bill on that ground. I merely wanted to make the suggestion. I assume that the Senator from Maryland is correct.

Mr. FRANCE. I think it would be better to have the bill read in such a way that they would be admitted only to Public Health Service hospitals; and yet, in case of an emergency, it would seem to be justifiable to place even a civilian in an Army sanatorium for treatment for tuberculosis. I hope that there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall not object. I merely wanted to make that observation. I assume that the War Department and the Treasury Department will be sensible enough to keep civilians, so far as possible, in civilian hospitals.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill admitting civilian employees of the United States Government stricken with tuberculosis to Army and Navy and Public Health Service hospitals."

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2785) to provide aid from the United States for the several States in prevention and control of drug addiction and the care and treatment of drug addicts, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 76) for the investigation of influenza and allied diseases, in order to determine their cause and methods of prevention, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) directing the Court of Claims to investigate claims for damages growing out of the riot of United States negro soldiers at Houston, Tex., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2672) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN H. RHEINLANDER.

The bill (S. 1302) for the relief of John H. Rheinlander was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment in line 4 to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$1,200," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,200 to John H. Rheinlander, of St. Louis, Mo., to compensate him in full for all claims he may have against the United States arising out of injuries received by him while in the Government employ in the Quartermaster Department, United States Army, at St. Louis, Mo., in February, 1883.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask for the reading of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the report (No. 237) submitted by Mr. ROBINSON October 1, 1919, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1302) for the relief of John H. Rheinlander, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with an amendment, and as amended recommend that the bill do pass.

Your committee recommend the following amendment: In line 4, strike out the figures "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,200."

The facts in the case are fully set forth in House Report No. 1327, Sixty-second Congress, third session, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report.

[House Report No. 1327, Sixty-second Congress, third session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 28049) for the relief of John H. Rheinlander, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

In line 4 strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,200."

This is a claim for personal injuries. The claimant, John H. Rheinlander, was a former employee of the Government in the Quartermaster Department, United States Army, at the old St. Louis Arsenal, St. Louis, Mo., and on February 20, 1883, from the submitted affidavits, while taking a shipping order in the course of his employment from the office, he fell on the stone steps of the building, which were covered with snow and ice and in a dangerous condition, thereby sustaining injury which resulted in permanent lameness and other injuries to his knee and limb joints, necessitating several painful and expensive operations.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand it, this claim is based upon an injury done to the claimant in 1883, and the claim is therefore 36 years old.

Mr. SPENCER. The injury was sustained in 1883. The claim has already been passed by the House at least once, if not twice. It is one of those claims which come to me by information. If the man had been injured by any private owner under the same circumstances, there would undoubtedly have been a liability in a much larger amount. The Government building was in a dangerous condition from snow and ice, and was left in that condition, and this man having been sent out upon his duties, slipped and fell. He was operated on many times, and is permanently crippled. It seemed to the committee that the claim was a perfectly fair one and that the Government ought, at least in some amount, limited by the amendment of the committee practically to a year's salary, to recognize the injury which he suffered without any fault of his own.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator a question. When was this claim for the first time presented to Congress?

Mr. SPENCER. My information is only general, but it is that it was presented soon after the injury occurred, and the injury occurred, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] well states, in 1883. The claim has been again and again before Congress. I do not know whether it has ever passed the Senate. I know that it has passed the House. It passed the House in the Sixty-second Congress the first time, which, of course, would be some 10 years ago.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the report shows that it passed the House of Representatives in the Sixty-second Congress, third session, and that is the only time the claim has passed either the Senate or the House. There is nothing in the report to show when the claim was first presented to Congress. As stated by the Senator from Missouri the claim is quite a novelty, and, upon his statement, seems to be differentiated from other claims. These claims generally come to the Senate in this way: We have a host of claim agents here in the District of Columbia, and when they can not find through the press or Government publications some person who has a claim, directly or indirectly, against the United States, they take a summer vacation and go South, or go West, or to some other part of the country, and try to hunt up claims against the Government during their sojourn. Such claims are then brought here and presented to Congress. I doubt very much whether in one out of a hundred instances such as this, where the claim arises out of an occurrence 30 or 40 years before, the claimant himself ever thought he had a claim against the Government of the United States until some claim agent told him of it and offered to take the case and present it to Congress, and if he gets it through Congress, takes about 60 or 70 per cent of the amount received, the claimant receiving the balance. I do not say that this is such a claim.

Mr. SPENCER. Does the Senator from Utah indicate at all that any of that gruesome history is true of this case?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Missouri did not hear what I said. I said that this may be differentiated from the general run of cases.

Mr. SPENCER. Then, so far as the Senator from Utah knows, what he states does not apply to this case?

Mr. SMOOT. As far as I know, Mr. President; but I would not say it did not until I had made an investigation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] that he had better ask that the bill go over until he can secure some information that will enlighten the Senate as to why this claim has not received the consideration of the Senate before this time. If it comes up for consideration now I shall be obliged to vote against it. I do not see how I can vote to approve a claim for a personal injury suffered in the year 1883, barred, as a matter of course, by any statute of limitations that anybody ever thought of, unless some reason is advanced why it has thus long been deferred. The State of Missouri has been represented in all these years by able, industrious, and conscientious representatives in this body, and it does seem to me as though, if this claim is one that is entirely meritorious, they would have urged consideration of it long before this time. I would feel that no one could justify himself in voting in favor of a claim that is as old as this without some kind of information that is excusatory in character, explaining the long delay in the presentation of it.

Mr. SPENCER. Does it answer the Senator from Montana at all to say that, at least, in the Sixty-second Congress the bill was passed by the House, and is it not fair to say that with the usual expedition given to bills of this character it had been in the House long before then? I am not able to say to the Senator, but I shall be very glad to get the information if he wants to know when the bill was first presented to Congress, but I do know that it was presented many years ago, and that in the Sixty-second Congress it was passed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Sixty-second Congress convened March 4, 1911, which would still make the claim almost barred.

Mr. SPENCER. Undoubtedly if it originated then there would still have been a long period of intermission between the accident and the introduction of the bill. I have no desire to press the bill. I will seek the information that the Senator desires. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

OWNERS OF STEAMER "TEXAS."

The bill (S. 1255) authorizing the Texas Co. to bring suit against the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] why we should legislate especially upon this particular subject. The United States has been operating a vast number of vessels of every character and description during the last two or three years, and I apprehend that collisions have been exceedingly numerous. It does seem to me that the matter ought to be taken care of by some general legislation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Navy Department is forbidden by law from considering claims amounting to over $500. This being a claim for more than that amount the only possible relief is through an act allowing the claimant to bring suit in a proper United States court in order to have the merits determined there. I have before me several similar cases that have had similar treatment from the Senate, one of them being a bill that passed Congress in the Sixty-third Congress, second session.

I will say to the Senator from Montana that, in view of the facts I have mentioned, this has been made the subject of a special bill. All that Congress does is to permit a suit to be brought in a court of proper jurisdiction in order to determine whether there is a meritorious claim and whether the Government is responsible.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I appreciate that, but that does not answer my question. The question is, Why should there not be some general legislation upon the subject so that we would not treat one claimant any differently from all claimants; that is, either refuse to give all claimants any redress, which would be entirely unjustifiable, or give them all the same redress?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is wrong to specially pick out one shipowner who suffered by reason of a collision and give him a right of action which we do not give to others.

Mr. SHEPPARD. We have given relief in this way to a number of those who have asked for it. This company appealed to the department at first for redress, and was told it could receive no consideration there under the law, and was referred to Congress, as other claimants have been referred to Congress.

I agree with the Senator from Montana that there ought to be general legislation. There is no general legislation, and the only method for relief is the method I have pursued. I have no particular interest in the matter.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Would it not be quite appropriate to introduce a bill covering the whole subject rather than to reach it by special legislation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think the Senator's suggestion is an excellent one, but inasmuch as other bills have been passed allowing claimants to have their cases determined in court, I think it is fair to pass this bill, and then consider the advisability of some general legislation on the subject.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was just wondering why W. A. Thompson, jr., vice president of the Texas Co., is making a claim against the United States, charging the Government at the rate of $2,116 a day for demurrage for loss of time for the steamer while under repairs. Three hundred and sixty-five days, at $2,116 a day, make $771,340. I take it for granted the Senator from Texas would not claim that this one steamer would have earned clear $771,340 per year.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think the Senator is correct, and I do not think the court would sustain a claim of that kind. This is merely a statement of the claim as filed by the claimant. The whole matter is to be passed on under judicial procedure. The passage of the bill does not mean a recognition of the merit of the claim in any sense whatever.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is right in that, but what I had in mind was that, on the face of it, it is unreasonable and unjust when a claimant comes to Congress and asks to be allowed a claim in the form that it is to be referred to the United States courts to be decided whether the Government should pay it or not. He ought to come with clean hands. I do not believe that Mr. Thompson thinks for a moment that the one steamer that was damaged by the Government of the United States would earn a net profit of $771,340 in a year, which is the basis for the claim that they ask Congress to pass on to the courts of the United States.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will say to the Senator that I am told that some of the vessels belonging to the United States Shipping Board have earned that much on one or two trips.

Mr. SMOOT. I think, then, that instead of trying to find out the profiteer who sells a pound of bacon a day or 2 pounds of sugar to a customer once a week, the Attorney General had better look after the profiteers along the line of the shipping interests.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator will understand that I do not attempt to justify the claim in any respect whatever.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that, and perhaps I should not take the time of the Senate, but I do know that the claim upon its face is an unjust one. I can not say what the court would finally decide, but if I were in the company's place I would have made a fair claim and, as I said, come before the Congress of the United States with clean hands. Then, when I went before the court, if the Congress was willing to allow me that privilege, I would have undertaken to prove to the court that the statement I made to Congress upon which action was asked was a just and fair and reasonable claim.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I believe we can rely on the courts to do full justice in the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to inquire into the advisability of reporting a general bill upon the subject.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have no objection whatever to that course and trust the motion will be agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

CANADIAN CAR & FOUNDRY CO. (LTD.).

The bill (S. 413) for the relief of the Canadian Car & Foundry Co. (Ltd.) was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the agency of Canadian Car & Foundry Co. (Ltd.), the sum of $192,278.83, as a refund of import duties paid on certain materials to be manufactured in the United States for shipment abroad, but which were destroyed by fire.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

The bill (S. 2189) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act homestead claims may be initiated by actual settlers for public lands of the United States in Alaska known to contain workable coal, oil, or gas deposits, or that may be valuable for the coal, oil, or gas contained therein, and which are not otherwise reserved or withdrawn, whenever such claim shall be initiated with a view of obtaining or passing title with a reservation to the United States of the coal, oil, or gas in such lands, and of the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same; and any settler who has initiated a homestead claim in good faith on lands containing workable deposits of coal, oil, or gas, or that may be valuable for the coal, oil, or gas contained therein, may perfect the same under the provisions of the laws under which the claim was initiated, but shall receive the limited patent provided for in this act: Provided, however, That should it be discovered at any time prior to the issuance of a final certificate on any claim initiated for unreserved lands in Alaska that the lands are coal, oil, or gas in character, the patent issued on such entry shall contain the reservation required by this act.

SEC. 2. That upon satisfactory proof of full compliance with the provisions of the laws under which the entry is made and of this act the entryman shall be entitled to a patent to the lands entered by him, which patent shall contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal, oil, or gas in the land so patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same. The coal, oil, or gas deposits so reserved shall be subject to disposal by the United States in accordance with the provisions of the laws applicable to coal, oil, or gas deposits or coal, oil, or gas lands in Alaska in force at the time of such disposal. Any person qualified to acquire coal, oil, or gas deposits, or the right to mine and remove the coal or to drill for and remove the oil or gas under the laws of the United States, shall have the right at all times to enter upon the lands entered or patented, as provided by the provisions of this act, for the purpose of prospecting for coal, oil, or gas therein, upon the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of a bond or undertaking to be filed with him as security for the payment of all damages to the crops and improvements on such lands by reason of such prospecting. Any person who has acquired from the United States the coal, oil, or gas deposits in any such land, or the right to mine, drill for, or remove the same, may reenter and occupy so much of the surface thereof as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining and removal of the coal, oil, or gas therefrom, and mine and remove the coal or drill for and remove the oil or gas upon payment of the damages caused thereby to the owner thereof, or upon giving a good and sufficient bond or undertaking in an action instituted in any competent court to ascertain and fix said damages: Provided, That the owner under such limited patent shall have the right to mine the coal for use on the land for domestic purposes at any time prior to the disposal by the United States of the coal deposits: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing the exploration upon or entry of any coal deposits withdrawn from such exploration and purchase: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to authorize the entry or disposition of withdrawn or classified coal lands or lands valuable for coal, oil, or gas under section 2306, United States Revised Statutes, or acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, commonly known as soldiers' homestead law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2444) to create the commission on rural and urban home settlement was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. On behalf of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3201) fixing the salary of the district attorney for the eastern district of New York was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RETIREMENT OF PUBLIC-SCHOOL TEACHERS IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (H. R. 5818) for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I do not believe that a bill of this importance should be considered during the morning hour, and I object to its further consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, may I inquire what the objection of the Senator from New Mexico is to the consideration of the bill, and why he desires it now passed over?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The thought which I had was that a bill of this importance should not be considered during the morning hour. I do not believe that Senators will have an opportunity to give it that consideration which it deserves. The bill proposes to establish a new system which involves very fundamental principles, and it seems to me the bill ought to be considered in connection with the bill for the retirement of Federal employees.

Mr. SHERMAN. A bill practically identical to this passed the Sixty-fifth Congress in February, 1918, but failed to pass the other House. I greatly hope the Senator from New Mexico will not make any objection to its consideration now.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If the Senator from Illinois insists upon the present consideration of the bill and believes that it should be passed during the morning hour, personally I shall not stand in the way of such action.

Mr. SHERMAN. The similar bill to which I refer was discussed at some length in the Sixty-fifth Congress, and was then passed by the Senate. I do not believe there can be any objection to the bill if Senators will examine it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. In view of what the Senator says, if he wishes to have the bill taken up during the morning hour, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. If there is any objection, I should like to develop what the objection is in the morning hour, so that if more time is needed than can now be given to its consideration the bill may be taken up on some future occasion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the reading of the bill concluded. I have not had an opportunity as yet to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Assistant Secretary will conclude the reading of the bill.

The Assistant Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That within 60 days after the passage of this act, there shall be deducted and withheld from the basic salary of every teacher in the public schools of the District of Columbia an amount computed to the nearest tenth of a dollar that will be sufficient, with interest thereon at 4 per cent per annum, compounded annually, to purchase, under the provisions of this act, an annuity equal to 1 per cent of his average annual basic salary received since the passage of public act No. 254, approved June 20, 1906, for each year of his whole term of service, payable monthly throughout life, for every such teacher who shall be retired as herein provided.

The deductions herein provided for shall be based on such annuity table as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, and shall be varied yearly to correspond to any change in the basic salary of the teacher: Provided, however, That said deductions shall in no case exceed 8 per cent of his annual basic salary: And provided further, That when the basic salary exceeds $1,500 the deductions shall be made as on a basic salary of $1,500.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be filed with the Board of Education on September 10 of each year a certificate showing the amount of deduction to be made from the salary of each teacher during the year, said deduction to be made in 10 equal amounts, one to be deducted each school month. A similar certificate shall be filed not later than the 15th day of each calendar month to cover cases of new entrants. No deduction shall be made from less than an entire month's salary.

SEC. 2. That the amount so deducted and withheld from the basic salary of every teacher shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and shall be credited, together with interest at 4 per cent per annum, compounded annually, to an individual account of the teacher from whose salary the deduction is made. The fund thus created shall be held and invested by the Secretary of the Treasury until paid out as hereinafter provided, and the income derived from such investments shall constitute a part of said fund for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That any teacher who shall have reached the age of 62 may be retired by the Board of Education on its own motion, or shall be retired if application is made by the teacher. Any teacher who shall have reached the age of 70 shall be retired unless in the judgment of two-thirds of the Board of Education such teacher should be longer retained for the good of the service.

SEC. 4. That any teacher who shall have reached the age of 45, or who shall have taught continuously for 15 years in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and who by reason of accident or illness not due to vicious habits has become physically or mentally disabled and incapable of satisfactorily performing the duties of teacher, may be retired by the Board of Education under the provisions hereinafter stated.

SEC. 5. That following the passage of this act every teacher who shall be retired under the provisions of section 3 or section 4 hereof shall receive during the remainder of his life an annuity composed of (1) a sum equal to 1 per cent of his average basic salary received since the passage of public act No. 254, approved June 20, 1906, for each year of his whole term of service, and (2) an additional sum of $10 for each year of said service, such annuity to be payable monthly and to cease and determine at his death.

SEC. 6. That the annuity of a teacher retired under the provisions of section 3 hereof shall not be less than $480, and the annuity of a teacher retired under section 4 hereof shall not be less than $420.

SEC. 7. That the second part of the annuity provided for by section 5 hereof shall be paid by appropriations from the same fund as the current expenses of the District of Columbia are now paid or may hereafter be paid; and if the deductions from a teacher's salary made under section 1 and section 2 hereof with accumulated interest, shall be insufficient to pay the first part of the annuity provided for in section 5 hereof, the deficiency shall be paid by appropriations from the same fund as the current expenses of the District of Columbia are now paid or may hereafter be paid.

SEC. 8. That in computing length of service of retiring teachers credit shall be given, year for year, but not to exceed 10 years, for public-school service or its equivalent outside the District of Columbia.

No sum shall be paid to any teacher upon his retirement under the provisions of section 3 hereof unless he shall have been employed as a public-school teacher continuously in the District of Columbia from the time of his attainment of the age of 52 years.

No sum shall be paid to any teacher upon his retirement under the provisions of section 4 hereof unless he shall have been employed continuously as a teacher in the public schools of the District of Columbia for 10 years immediately prior to his retirement.

When the average basic salary exceeds $1,500, the first part of the annuity provided for in section 5 hereof shall be based on an average basic salary of $1,500.

SEC. 9. That upon separation of any teacher from the service of the public schools of the District of Columbia prior to the age of 62 years, except for disability, as provided in section 4 hereof, he shall receive the amount of his deductions, together with the interest then credited thereon, as provided in section 2 hereof.

No teacher who shall withdraw the amount of his deductions under this section shall, after reinstatement, be entitled to the benefits under section 6 unless he shall have served at least 10 years after such reinstatement. In case of his reinstatement in the service of the public schools of the District of Columbia, the monthly deductions thereafter from his salary shall be computed as herein provided and from his age at the date of such reinstatement.

SEC. 10. That in case of the death of a teacher while in the service, the amount of his deductions, together with the interest then credited thereon, as provided in section 2 hereof, shall be paid to his legal representatives.

In case of the death of an annuitant before he shall have received annuity payments equal to the amount of his deductions, together with the interest credited thereon as hereinbefore provided, the balance thereof remaining to his credit at the date of his death shall be paid to his legal representative.

SEC. 11. That the provisions of this act shall apply to all teachers who were on the rolls of the public schools of the District of Columbia for the month of June, 1919, if otherwise eligible.

SEC. 12. That every teacher who shall continue in the service of the public schools of the District of Columbia after the passage of this act, as well as every person who hereafter may be appointed to a position as teacher in the public schools of the District of Columbia, shall be deemed to consent and agree to the deductions made and provided for herein, and the salary, pay, or compensation, which may be paid monthly or at any other time, shall be a full and complete discharge and acquittance of all claims and demands whatsoever for all services rendered by such teacher during the period covered by such payment, except his claim for the benefits to which he may be entitled under the provisions of this act, notwithstanding the provisions of said public act No. 254, approved June 20, 1906, and of any other law, rule, or regulation affecting the salary, pay, or compensation of the teachers employed in the service of the public schools of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 13. That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the discharge of any teacher at any time in the discretion of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia under the provisions of law.

SEC. 14. That the term "teacher" under this act shall include all teachers permanently employed by the board of education in the public day schools of the District of Columbia, including the superintendent of public schools, the assistant superintendents, all supervisors and directors of instruction, group principals, principals, special teachers, and librarians therein; the term "basic salary" shall be construed to mean the lowest salary of the class in which the teacher is placed; and whenever the pronoun "his" occurs in this act it shall be construed to mean both male and female teachers.

SEC. 15. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall prepare and keep all needful tables, records, and accounts required for carrying out the provisions of this act. The records to be kept shall include data showing the mortality experience of the teachers in the service of the public schools of the District of Columbia and the rate of withdrawal from such service, and any other information pertaining to such service that may be of value and may serve as a guide for future valuations and adjustments of the plan for the retirement of teachers. The Secretary of the Treasury shall make a detailed comparative report annually to Congress showing all receipts and disbursements under the provisions of this act, together with the total number of persons receiving annuities and the amounts paid them. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall have made every third year after the passage of this act an actuarial valuation of this retirement fund and the operation thereof, which shall show the financial condition of the fund, and shall report the findings of such investigation to Congress at the opening of the following session.

SEC. 16. That in order to carry out the provisions of this act during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $50,000, including not more than $5,000 for clerical and other services and all other expenses, is hereby appropriated from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the Treasury of the United States in the proportion authorized by law. Thereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall include in his annual estimate of appropriations a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this act. No officer or employee receiving a regular salary or compensation from the Government shall receive any additional salary or compensation for any service rendered in connection with the system of retiring teachers provided for by this act.

SEC. 17. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to perform, or cause to be performed, any or all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

SEC. 18. That none of the money mentioned in this act shall be assignable, either in law or equity, or be subject to execution or levy by attachment, garnishment, or other legal process.

SEC. 19. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any teacher who receives an annuity from any State or municipality other than the District of Columbia.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Illinois if State legislatures generally throughout the country have enacted laws for the pensioning of teachers? Has that practice become general?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; it has become almost general. Of the 48 States there are 35 which now have provisions for the retirement of teachers, and in most instances such legislation has contributory provisions, as is the case in the pending bill. The 35 States having such legislation include the larger States of the Union.

Mr. MYERS. How large a proportion of the expense does this bill provide that the teachers shall bear by their contributions?

Mr. SHERMAN. The initial expense to the Government as provided in the bill is $50,000. The expense to the Government increases year by year, until finally at the peak it amounts, I think, to $175,000 a year. I am, of course, quoting now entirely from memory. There is, however, a certain amount to be deducted from the annual basic salary of the teachers equal to a sum that will purchase a 4 per cent annuity compounded, computed similarly to annuities on life policies. The part contributed by the Government, or by the District of Columbia—which is the same thing, except as to the taxes paid by residents of the District—is an amount equal to $10 per annum of each year of service of the teacher. That will be contributed by the Government, or proportionately by the taxpayers of the District of Columbia, under the half-and-half plan, as taxes are collected at present. That will be the only contribution of the Government. It is purely a contributory plan. I myself do not believe in a plan that is wholly a pension to be derived from Government sources. I believe in its being divided between the beneficiary and the Government, either the District or the State, as the case may be.

This same bill, I wish to repeat, was passed by the Sixty-fifth Congress in February, 1918. It involved some discussion at that time, which was had on the floor, and resulted in its passage, as I have stated. The House did not reach the Senate bill in time to effect its passage. The House has now passed a bill and sent it to the Senate. What we are considering is a House bill, but it is practically the same bill that passed the Senate in the Sixty-fifth Congress. I regard it as a fair pension measure. It is contributory on the part of the teachers, and the entire force of teachers in the District, about 1,000 in number, will be the beneficiaries of the bill.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, on account of certain conditions which I understand exist in school circles here in the District, I am not in favor of the bill; but out of respect to the Senator from Illinois, who is in charge of it, I will not interpose an objection to its consideration at this time. If the Senators want to consider it at this time and pass it I shall not interpose, on my part, any arbitrary objection; but I am not in favor of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when the bill was introduced in the House an appropriation of $50,000 was made for all expenses up to and including June 30, 1920. Half of that time has elapsed, but no change whatever is made in the appropriation; and it seems to me that the appropriation ought to be cut down at least to $30,000, including not more than $3,000 for clerical and other services. I want to ask the Senator from Illinois if that would not be about right if $50,000 was sufficient when the bill was introduced?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the $50,000 is to be deemed an appropriation for the entire 12 months there ought to be a proportional abatement, but whatever surplus may remain will be carried over. It will not be spent.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, there never will be any surplus. If there were an appropriation of $250,000 every dollar of it would be spent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am quite well aware of the general truth of that statement, but this is not administered by the ordinary department; it is administered out of a fund, and the appropriations for clerical purposes are limited. I have no objection to reducing the amount for clerical purposes. The $50,000, if there is any part of it remaining unexpended, because of its being a fractional part of the year, will only be carried over to the teachers' fund. I have no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I think if he will read the provision he will see that it applies to the whole amount. The language is:

> That in order to carry out the provisions of this act during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $50,000 * * * is * * * appropriated.

I thought I would give more than half, strike out "$50,000" and insert "$30,000," and strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,000."

Mr. SHERMAN. Rather than take any chance of delaying the bill upon that ground I will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 8, line 19, it is proposed to strike out "$50,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$30,000." In the same line it is proposed to strike out "$5,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$3,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, I want to call the Senator's attention to page 2 of the bill, beginning with line 9, down to and including the word "month," in line 14. That part of the bill reads as follows:

> The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be filed with the Board of Education on September 10 of each year a certificate showing the amount of deduction to be made from the salary of each teacher during the year, said deduction to be made in 10 equal amounts, 1 to be deducted each school month.

There may not be 10 school months; and in such a case how would the deductions be made?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the number of school months should change, the deductions must change correspondingly. If the school year should be extended to 11 months, the number of deductions would be 11, or if it should be reduced to 9, there would be a similar change.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it says:

> Said deduction to be made in 10 equal amounts, 1 to be deducted each school month.

That means that there must be 10 payments made each year, and it means that 1 must be made in each of the school months. It necessarily follows that there must be 10 school months, and there must be 10 payments made. Now, if there are 10 payments to be made, and there are only 8 school months, it will not work at all. It seems to me the wording ought to be such that there will be no conflict or misunderstanding whatever.

Mr. SHERMAN. There will be no practical difficulty in the administration of the law under the existing language, because 10 school months has been the school year for many years; and if it should be changed, it can be taken care of by the Appropriations Committee when it is considering the bill providing the appropriations for the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMOOT. It could not be done unless the law were changed.

Mr. SHERMAN. The law could be changed each year. There is an annual appropriation bill for the District, providing the money out of which these payments are made; and if a change should be made in the 10 school months, the matter can be taken care of in an appropriation bill. If the school year should be changed by any change of existing law or any regulations of the board of education, that can be covered in the annual appropriation bill for the District.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Could not the difficulty be met by merely having the language changed so as to provide that the payments shall be made in equal installments, one in each school month?

Mr. SHERMAN. That would cover it. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there would be no conflict.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just strike out the word "ten" and let it read "in equal payments."

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to making that change.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the language would be:

> Said deductions to be made in equal amounts, one to be deducted for each school month.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then it can be curtailed to 9 months or extended to 11. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 13, page 2, it is proposed to strike out "ten" and, before the word "each," to insert the word "for," so that it will read:

> Said deduction to be made in equal amounts, one to be deducted for each school month.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should simply like to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. There is a partial contribution to this retirement fund by the District of Columbia. I should like to know if the Senator has made an estimate of the amount which will be contributed by the District in any given case showing what that contribution is in proportion to the contribution made to the fund by the teacher?

Mr. SHERMAN. The larger part, from 60 to 75 per cent, is the contribution by the teacher, withdrawn from the basic salary. Forty per cent or less is the contribution by the District, one-half of which comes from the Government and one-half from the assessed value of property in the District.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, section 18 read as follows:

That none of the money mentioned in this act shall be assignable, either in law or equity, or be subject to execution or levy by attachment, garnishment, or other legal process.

Do I understand from the language of that provision that it means only the moneys that are paid by the school-teachers into this fund, or, after they are retired and the annuities are granted to them, that the amount that is paid to them annually thereafter under the provisions of the bill will be exempt from execution or levy by attachment, garnishment, or other legal process?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is all exempt, Mr. President, whether the contributory portion or the portion coming from the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator really think that is a good law?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I do. I am prepared to answer that question affirmatively. In the 35 States the invariable provision is that these funds are not subject to legal process, either of garnishment, attachment, or otherwise. The fund is made for the relief of the teachers, and it is very much in the nature of exempt property. That is in addition to the general provision that governmental funds are not subject to attachment. That would apply only to the part contributed by the Government, it is true; but in this instance it is an involuntary taking by the Government of a percentage equal in amount each year to the sum required to buy a 4 per cent annuity for the teacher, and I believe it ought to be regarded as in the nature of exempt property—not subject to attachment.

The majority of the teachers here are women. Most of the teachers in the District do not own homesteads. They have no $1,000 or $1,500 exemption of homesteads, as we have in the States, and $400 or $500 or more of personal property exempt, making from $1,400 to $2,500 in the States that is exempt from attachment or garnishment or the taking under process for the payment of debts. This is intended to be a substitute for the exemptions that apply under State laws, and I do not think it is unfair.

Mr. SMOOT. That would apply to just such cases as the Senator has spoken of, but a great number of the teachers here own their own homes. They have the same exemption from execution or levy by attachment or garnishment that any other citizen of the United States has. Under this provision not only are they allowed those exemptions, but they are also allowed an exemption from execution for all that they will have by way of annuity under the provisions of this bill.

I do not believe that legislation of that kind goes to make an honest man or an honest woman. If you exempt the wage of men and women entirely, so that no action can be taken against them, no garnishment or attachment made against what they may own, it has a tendency to make them careless; it has a tendency to make them in many cases dishonest; and I really think that when passing laws we should not extend the exemption more than it is extended to the general citizenship of the United States.

Of course, I am not going to make any captious objection to the bill, Mr. President, but I wanted at least to record my dissent to legislation of this character.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the objection which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has raised to this provision does not cover the real point. We do not allow Government employees here in the departments to be garnisheed and brought into court, for the reason that we do not want the Federal Government hampered and bothered with a lot of judicial proceedings, where they have to put in an appearance in every case and defend; and we ought not to make the District government here subject to the same difficulty. If the wages of teachers are subject to garnishment and attachment, notices will be served on the District, and the District authorities will have to appear in court and answer in all those cases in some form or another. I think it has come to be the practice in most of the States of the Union, where a person is engaged in the public service, that either a large proportion of his salary is immune from any attachment or garnishment or else it is altogether exempt from such process. I think that the school-teachers, who, compared with other employees of the Government, are getting rather small salaries, ought not to be discriminated against any more than any other class of Government employees.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator from Minnesota will allow me, is it not quite in accordance with the general practice that the Government, or a Government agency, may not be garnisheed, or the property of its employees in the hands of the Government attached?

Mr. NELSON. That is the general practice.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator stated the position exactly correct when he said that the salaries paid by the Government of the United States are exempt from garnishment. We all recognize that fact. But this provision does not apply to the salaries which will be paid to persons while they are in the service. This is in reference to annuities, which go to them after they are out of the service.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the Senator that I would apply to those who receive annuities the same rule that we apply in the cases of soldiers. This is really a pension, and we do not want this small pension subject to garnishment or attachment any more than we do in the case of soldiers.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Secretary of the Treasury must administer both funds, and necessarily the Secretary would have to come into court and answer, as the Senator from Minnesota suggested.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there is quite a difference between a soldier and a teacher. But I am not going to discuss the question any further. I do not like this kind of legislation.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] whether there is any maximum sum provided in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is limited by the pay of the teacher; it shall be not less than $480, as provided on page 5, in section 6, and in the case of the annuity of a teacher retired under section 4, not less than $420. There is an automatic limitation according to the salary of the teacher. A teacher who had a salary of $2,500 would receive a larger retirement fund than one with a salary of $1,800. But it could not go beyond the automatic limitation fixed on the basis of the salary.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

GRADE OF LIEUTENANT GENERAL.

The bill (S. 3224) relating to the creation in the Army of the United States of the grade of lieutenant general was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the Army of the United States the grade of lieutenant general is hereby revived, and the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint to said grade one general officer, who, within the United States, prior to the close of the recent war, rendered especially distinguished service, and two general officers, who, prior to the close of hostilities, especially distinguished themselves in command of field armies in the American Expeditionary Forces; and the officers appointed under the foregoing authorizations shall have the pay prescribed by section 24 of the act of Congress approved July 15, 1870, and such allowances as the President shall deem appropriate: Provided, That no more than three appointments to office shall be made under the terms of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from New York explain the object of the bill and state who will be the beneficiaries under the proposed legislation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator will remember that Congress restored the grade of General of the Army and authorized the President to nominate one officer to that grade; that a nomination was sent to the Senate and confirmed, and as a result Gen. Pershing became General of the Army of the United States.

The Senator will also remember that shortly after the close of hostilities the President recommended not only that Gen. Pershing be given this rank, but also that the Chief of Staff be given the same rank, that is, General of the Army; but the Congress apparently decided that it would be wiser to have but one General of the Army, and it confined its action in that regard to extending the honor to Gen. Pershing. Although the act which restored the grade of general did not mention Gen. Pershing by name, of course it was understood that his name would be sent to the Senate for confirmation.

The question then arose as to what other rewards should be extended to the officers who had distinguished themselves in the war in our armed forces; and the Congress apparently having made up its mind that there should be but one General of the Army, the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, after a long discussion and a good deal of inquiry, came to the conclusion that there were some officers of the Army whose service had been so conspicuous and valuable to the country that they should be given the rank of lieutenant general of the Army. The committee made up its mind, further, that there were three such officers, one the Chief of Staff, Gen. March; the second, Gen. Liggett, who commanded the first army, and who made an excellent reputation and name for himself as a commanding officer of a field army in the Argonne; and the third one, Gen. Bullard, who commanded the second field army in France. Gens. Liggett and Bullard were the only American officers who commanded field armies in the presence of the enemy prior to the close of hostilities. One other American officer, Gen. Dickman, commanded the third field army, but the third field army was not formed until after the armistice. It was the third field army that did service in the occupied German territory along the Rhine. That was commanded by Gen. Dickman. It is also remembered that Gen. Dickman has been proposed by the President as a permanent major general in the Army, and hence it may be said that his war-time record, which is an excellent one, is about to receive, if the Senate confirms his nomination, adequate recognition.

It might be remembered also that Gen. Harbord, who had a most distinguished record in the American Expeditionary Force, both as a fighting man in the famous Second Division and later as commander of the Services of Supply, has been nominated by the President as a major general in the Regular Army, and so it may be said that his services are about to receive adequate recognition.

But Gens. March, Liggett, and Bullard are the three officers whom the Committee on Military Affairs believe very sincerely should have this recognition and be made—if the President so wishes, of course—lieutenant generals. The Senator from Utah, and probably all Senators, are familiar in a general way with their services.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I will say to the Senator that I am; but I wanted some explanation, as the report furnishes no detailed information along the line of my inquiry.

I want to call attention, in line 2, page 2 of the bill, after the figures "1870," to the words "and such allowances as the President shall deem appropriate." Is not that rather a broad power granted to the President?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That would seem so, Mr. President; but that is the language which was used in old-time statutes which re-created the grade of lieutenant general and authorized the President to fill it by nomination, subject to confirmation by the Senate. As I recollect it, the laws governing the pay and allowances of the officers of the Army do not cover in detail certain classes of allowances in the grade of lieutenant general, I suppose, because that grade has been so seldom used. I think our lieutenant generals have been Gen. Grant, Gen. Sherman, and Gen. Sheridan. They later each became a general, as I remember it, or for a short time at least. The language which the Senator has quoted has been the language, as I recollect it, used in those separate bills passed years ago to re-create that grade in order to extend recognition to special officers. I may say to the Senator that it is really a very small matter. The allowances that might be made under that, I think we can feel sure, would not be extravagant and the power would not be abused by the President.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, some six months ago I introduced in the Senate a bill providing for additional recognition and reward to the rank and file of the American Army. As yet I have heard of no favorable report upon that measure or any other measure of a similar character. Until Congress sees proper to give, as I see it, the proper recognition and reward to the rank and file of the Army, I propose to object to further promotions in rank and increase in compensation to higher officers. Therefore I object to the consideration of the bill at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

THE IRISH QUESTION.

The resolution (S. Res. 215) providing that whenever the United States becomes a member of the league of nations this Government should present to the council or the assembly of the league the state of affairs in Ireland and the right of its people to self-government was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON and Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF THE JUDICIARY CODE.

The bill (S. 2692) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill was read and amended on November 3.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] desires to be heard upon the bill. He was called out of the Chamber just a little while ago, and stated he would return as quickly as possible, but if during his absence the bill was reached on the calendar, he wanted me to object to its consideration. Therefore, Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

STEPHEN A. WINCHELL.

The bill (S. 1374) for the relief of Stephen A. Winchell was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PROMOTION OF AMERICANIZATION.

The bill (S. 3315) to promote Americanization by providing for cooperation with the several States in the education of non-English-speaking persons and the assimilation of foreign-born residents, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, this bill could not be considered now, of course. I give notice that when we dispose of the Sterling bill I am going to move to take up this measure.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL FARM-LOAN ACT.

The bill (H. R. 9065) to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

The bill (S. 3317) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States, and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FRANCE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 3184.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the formal reading of the bill, and that the bill may be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Fletcher	Keyes	Pomerene
Borah	France	King	Sheppard
Brandegee	Gore	Kirby	Sherman
Calder	Gronna	Lenroot	Smith, Md.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. MCCUMBER answered to their names when called.

Mr. PAGE and Mr. RANSDELL entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, before the Secretary proceeds to read the bill I desire to make a brief statement.

As is well known by Senators who are conversant with the subject, water-power construction has been at a standstill in the country for upward of 10 years. This has been mainly owing to the fact that we have had no appropriate legislation.

Under the river and harbor act of 1899 and also under the so-called dam or water-power act of 1906 it was provided that no right to construct dams across the navigable waters of the United States should be granted without the authority of Congress. Under those provisions the practice grew up of introducing separate bills in each case and passing them through the two Houses of Congress subject to the conditions of the act of 1906.

That was the status of the matter until 1908, when President Roosevelt sent a communication to the Committee on Commerce stating that he would approve of no water-power bills thereafter unless there was a provision for the payment of compensation or royalty to the United States for the use of the water. Afterwards the Committee on Commerce made a report adverse to that and two bills were subsequently passed, one known as the Rainy River bill and the other as the James River bill. The Rainy River dam was on the international boundary line between the United States and Canada. The James River dam was in the State of Missouri. President Roosevelt vetoed the two bills. Ever since that time there has been an embargo, I might say, on water-power legislation.

The main difference grew out of the fact that a majority of the House of Representatives concurred in the views of President Roosevelt; that is, that a royalty should be paid to the United States for the privilege of constructing dams on navigable streams.

In the Senate, however, a different view of the matter was taken. The majority of the Senate held the view that, aside from purposes of navigation, aside from the interests of commerce, as might be said, all other property rights in the waters of a stream belong to the respective States, and that the Federal Government ought not to charge compensation for what is State property and not Federal property; in other words, the majority of the Senate has consistently contended for the idea that the streams and rivers of the country were the property of the States in which they were situated, and that the Federal Government had control of those streams only to the extent that the interests of commerce and navigation demanded; that, aside from that, all other use and all other property in the waters belonged to the State or to riparian owners, as the case might be. Subsequently several bill—I do not recall exactly how many—were passed in the Senate, but failed of passage in the other House. Finally, in the Sixty-fourth Congress, the House of Representatives passed two bills; one bill, reported from the Committee on Public Lands, relating to water power on the lands of the Government, and the other bill, reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, relating to water power on streams other than those running through public lands. Those two bill, however, were not concurred in by the Senate.

Matters remained in that condition until, in the Sixty-fifth Congress, the House of Representatives created a new committee—a water-power committee—composed of six members of the Committee on Public Lands, six members of the Committee on Agriculture, and six members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That committee, after very extensive hearings, formulated a bill, which was passed by the House and came to the Senate.

In the meantime the Committee on Commerce of the Senate reported what was commonly known as the Shields bill, and, in the Senate, that bill was adopted as a substitute for the composite House bill to which I refer. In saying that the House bill was a "composite" bill, I might say it included what was really in the two other bills to which I have referred which were passed in the Sixty-fourth Congress. It included water power both on public lands and outside of public lands. As I have stated, in the Senate the Shields bill was adopted as a substitute for the House bill.

The bill then was sent to conference. There were six conferees on each side. On behalf of the Senate three of the conferees were from the Committee on Public Lands and three were from the Committee on Commerce. There were six members of the conference on the part of the other House, and I think they represented the three committees from which the original water power committee was created.

After an extended conference, the conferees finally agreed upon a water-power bill, mainly on the basis of the House bill; that is, the House bill was taken as a basis and a few amendments were made thereto. That was during the last session of the last Congress. The conference report on the bill was adopted by the House of Representatives, and undoubtedly it would have been adopted by the Senate if time had been given for its consideration, but it being near the close of the session there was a congested condition of legislation, an embargo on business, and it was found impossible to bring up the conference report for consideration in the Senate.

The bill now under consideration, except in two or three particulars, is substantially the same bill that was agreed to by the conference committee to which I have referred. There are two or three amendments which have been attached to the bill in the Senate; but aside from those, it is substantially the bill the conference report upon which was adopted by the House of Representatives.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I have been very much interested in the statement which has just been made by the Senator from Minnesota. I have had no opportunity to examine the bill, and appreciating its great importance I desire full information as to its provisions. However, as I understand the Senator, this bill is a departure from the position which has been steadfastly maintained for years by the Senate and is an acceptance of the position which has been announced by the House of Representatives; and this bill, therefore, if I understand the Senator correctly, proceeds upon the theory that the States have no interest whatever in their waterways; that the Federal Government, under the power to control interstate commerce, may go into the States, may establish a most oppressive and bureaucratic system of licensing with respect to the use of the streams for power purposes; that every plant or mill that may be constructed along the banks of streams within the States are under the control of functionaries of the Federal Government; in other words, that the Government of the United States becomes a great landlord; that its hand will be oppressively laid upon the States; and the streams that flow down from the mountains within the State may not be used by the people within the States—by the riparian owners, or any other persons—until they come to some bureau here in Washington and get the O. K. of some Government clerk or some official and pay tribute to the Federal Government? Is that this bill?

Mr. NELSON. No; it is not altogether.

Mr. KING. In part?

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to section 27 of the bill, which provides:

SEC. 27. That nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting or intending to affect or in any way to interfere with the laws of the respective States relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation or for municipal or other uses, or any vested right acquired therein.

I will say further——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Colorado will allow me to complete my reply to the Senator from Utah, then I will yield, or if the Senator desires I will yield to him now.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to say to the Senator that not the House only, but the Supreme Court of the United States in some recent decisions has emphasized the authority and jurisdiction of the Federal Government over these streams. I do not think that is good law, or at least I did not think so until the Supreme Court said it was; but, necessarily, I must accept what the Supreme Court of the United States declared to be the law on this and other subjects.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to say in answer to the Senator from Utah that the Committee on Commerce has reported an amendment, which he will find on pages 18 and 19 of the bill, providing that, in lieu of the compensation proposed by the House bill, the Federal Government shall only receive what I may call compensation for its administrative expenses; that is, for examining the plats, supervising the work, and for similar expenses to which it may be put in connection with water-power development; otherwise the Federal Government is not to receive any compensation.

The nearest the Supreme Court has come to rendering a decision along the line referred to by the Senator from Colorado is in a case relating to the use of water power—I do not remember the title of the case——

Mr. LENROOT. The Dunbar case.

Mr. NELSON. The Dunbar case.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the case I had in mind.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Colorado will carefully examine that case, he will find, I think, that it is based on the act of Congress which assumed entire jurisdiction and control over the stream involved, so that the case is not exactly an authority for what the Senator supposes it is. It simply carries out the provisions of a law enacted by Congress authorizing to be done what was done in that case, and expressly on that ground, as the Senator, I think, will see if he will examine the case.

Mr. President, I have only a few words more to say. The pending bill provides for the establishment of a water-power commission, consisting of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of War. It provides also for a secretary to the commission, with a salary, according to the House bill, of $5,000. The Senate committee has increased that compensation to $6,000. The water-power commission thus created is given authority to act within the scope of the bill.

The bill provides, first, for what may be called temporary permits. For instance, if a person desires to investigate and consider the power capacities and possibilities of a given stream and desires time for preparation he may secure a permit for a period not exceeding three years. Before any dam or works for the development of water power can be constructed, however, either by the holder of a temporary permit or by anyone else, application must be made to the commission. In the event application is made, water-power rights can not be granted for a longer period than 50 years. The bill provides also for what is called recapture at the end of 50 years. The Government, upon giving notice or without notice, at the expiration of the period of the permit can take back the property, in which event the bill provides the manner in which the compensation shall be liquidated.

There are many other provisions of the bill, but they are all practically the same as in the original bill to which I have referred, and I do not care about discussing them at this time.

The chief amendment reported by the committee is in reference to the compensation for the use of water. The Supreme Court of the United States held some years ago in a New Jersey case, and ever since has held consistently, to the doctrine that the property rights in navigable waters and streams within the boundaries of the States are in the respective States, or, as the case may be, in the riparian owners, and that the only interest the Federal Government has in any such streams is for the purpose of conserving, protecting, and controlling navigation.

It has said that inasmuch as an applicant is obliged to go to the Government to secure a license or permit to build a dam the Government should have a right to exact full compensation for the use of the water. In one sense we are at the mercy of the Government; but it is wholly inequitable and unjust to compel parties who are building dams with their own money and without expense to the Government to pay compensation to the Federal Government for property that belongs to a State. I think that view of the case has been amply sustained by the decisions of the Supreme Court, and the only answer I have heard to it is that as it is necessary to go to the Government to get a license or permit the Government, therefore, has a right to say on what terms it will grant the permit.

The chief amendment which the Committee on Commerce made in the bill is to carry out the views that the majority of the Senate have held in these matters heretofore; namely, that aside from the expenses to which the Government is put in the matter of examining and investigating the plans and supervising the work and getting compensation for that, the Government is not entitled to any other and further consideration.

This is all I care to say at the present time in reference to the bill. As we go on, I shall try to answer questions as far as I can.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. I am not able to see by what authority the Federal Government, under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, claims the right to go into the States and supervise the construction of dams, and to exact licenses and permits from those who may enter upon streams and utilize the power that may be developed and construct dams therein. It seems to me, if the Senator will pardon me, that the correct and the proper view to take is that if a stream should be entered upon by an individual, under the authority of the State, in such manner that navigation was interfered with, the Federal Government by proper proceedings could have the dam and obstruction abated as a nuisance. It seems to me, however, that for the Federal Government to pass laws embracing the features which I understand from the statement of the Senator this bill provides, authorizing the Federal Government to go into the States and exact licenses of individuals before they may construct a mill upon a stream which may be a long distance from a navigable stream or, indeed, upon a navigable stream, and giving the Federal Government the power of a proprietor or constituting it a sort of a landlord, is inconsistent with our theory of government and destructive of the rights of the States.

I can not understand the justification of legislation of this character.

Mr. NELSON. That has been the contention in both Houses of Congress. The majority of the House has heretofore invariably taken the view that Congress had a right to exact full compensation. A majority of the Senate has taken the other view. There has been a small minority here in the Senate heretofore that has concurred in the views of President Roosevelt and in the view of the minority of the House.

I want to say, in addition, what I omitted to say before. The Senator is aware that there are two general rules in this country in reference to the rights of riparian owners. In the Eastern States and most of the Middle Western States—in fact, in most of the States east of the Rocky Mountains—the principles of the common law prevail as to the use of the water in streams. The fundamental principle of the common law is that each riparian owner is entitled to the use of the water in the stream as it would be in its natural condition, and that no man either above or below him has a right to divert the water in such a way as to deprive the riparian owner of the use of that water. It is also held that if there are two owners, one on each side of the stream, the rights of each one extend to the middle or the thread of the stream.

In the mountain States, the mining States, and in the arid States a different view prevails in reference to the use of water power. There the doctrine of what is commonly called prior appropriation prevails. In some cases it is very radical. In some cases—I think in California and perhaps in one or two other States—there is a modification of it; but, after all, in nearly all of those cases the right to the use of the water is conferred on the first appropriator, subject to certain rights in reference to domestic use, and so forth.

I remember one remarkable case from Arizona as illustrative of the extreme view of that doctrine, where a man had taken water from a stream and run it over the land of the riparian owner, run it back for a good many miles beyond him, and used the water to such an extent that it left nothing for the riparian owner. The courts in the Arizona case held that the man who first appropriated the use of the water, being the first man to use it, was entitled to the use of the water, even though he was remote from the riparian owner, and even though the ditch ran across the land of the riparian owner.

But these questions to which I refer perhaps are not strictly germane to this bill. So far as irrigation is concerned, and so far as the use of water for domestic purposes is concerned, the bill saves to the States all the rights that they have under their State legislation.

There are two classes of dams. Where a dam is constructed by the Federal Government for purposes of navigation, and there is a surplus power to be disposed of that ought to be utilized, in that case the Federal Government having constructed the dam, and by the construction of it having created a water power, manifestly the Government is entitled to full compensation for the use of that power. But where the Government has simply issued a license to a man, giving him permission to build a dam with his own money, his own capital, his own resources; in that case I have always believed, and that has been the view of the majority of the Senate, that the Government is not fairly and equitably entitled to any pay for the use of the water. If any compensation is to be made for the use of the water, it belongs to the States or to the riparian owners.

Here is another element which, to my mind, enters into this question: Whatever cost you add to it, whatever cost you make the licensee pay, will be added to the cost of the power developed, and will be ultimately borne by the consumer. The bigger the compensation you exact the higher will be the charge to the consumer for the use of the power. That is inevitable. Now, if the Federal Government only charges for the expenses of what I call the administration of the matter, the expenses to which it is put in connection with the approval of the plans for the construction of the dam and seeing that all the conditions are complied with, and the State sees fit not to charge anything, it will enable the company to furnish the power to the consumers at a much lower rate.

Mr. President, if you will read the decisions of our Supreme Court on this question, there is no doubt at all but that you will come to the conclusion that outside of the purposes of navigation or commerce, to use the broad term, every other use of the water, every other property in the water in a stream, belongs to the respective States, or in some cases to the riparian owners. The question now before the Senate, and the main question, I take it, in connection with this bill, is upon this amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. President, I shall take up the time of the Senate no further. I shall be glad to answer questions as they occur in the course of the reading of the bill.

Let the reading be proceeded with.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, before the reading of the bill begins I desire to make some general observations.

First, I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota that important as is the amendment that he speaks of, relating to compensation, it is by no means the most important amendment that the committee has reported to this bill. It is by no means the most vicious amendment that the committee has reported to this bill. The amendment that is most important from the public standpoint is the one changing the license under the bill from a 50-year license to a perpetual license, a license that runs on forever, unless the Government itself takes over the property, which I shall be able to show is made practically impossible by the terms of the bill.

The importance of water-power development we all realize. There has been an issue between the House and the Senate for many, many years upon what should constitute a proper water-power policy; and for many years as a Member of the House I was quite active in connection with this legislation in defending as best I could the policy that the House undertook to establish and to which the Senate during all those years never would agree. At the last session of Congress, however, the conferees finally did get together and in the main adopted the policy with reference to water-power legislation that the House had asserted, and it was embodied in the conference report. But this bill, as reported by the Senate committee, in its essential features, so far as the protection of the public interest is concerned, differs as widely from the conference bill that was agreed to by the Senate conferees as night differs from day.

Mr. President, it is estimated that the potential water-power possibilities of this country that could readily find a market if properly developed range anywhere from twenty-five to fifty million horsepower. There are a little over 6,000,000 horsepower developed now; and, of course, whatever may be our views as to the proper policy to be adopted, all of us ought to agree that we should find some means for the development of this water power to save the coal resources and oil resources of our country, so that this power may be developed and used in the public interest; but we also agree that no legislation should be enacted that offers to water-power capitalists greater inducements than are necessary to procure water-power development. The conference bill agreed upon at the last session was one that the water-power financial interests of this country were anxious to have adopted, and they signified their belief that under the provisions of that bill sufficient money could be raised in the United States to develop the water power of this country and save all else for the interest of the public. In the face of that, however, the Senate committee has reported this bill, which, in place of a flat 50-year franchise, as was agreed upon in the conference report, contains an amendment that will give to these water-power interests a perpetual franchise, a little bit concealed in the bill, it is true, but it is there nevertheless.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will refer to section 6 he will find that it reads:

That licenses under this act shall be issued for a period not exceeding 50 years.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does not that meet the objection the Senator is urging?

Mr. LENROOT. It certainly does not. That is the way the Senator from Wisconsin wants it, but if the Senator will turn to page 26, the proviso beginning with line 17, he will find that that is nullified and negatived. The language is, as the Senate committee proposes to amend it—

That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over or does not tender a new license on reasonable terms to the original or a new licensee—which is accepted, then the commission shall issue from year to year an annual license to the then licensee under the terms and conditions of the original license until the property is taken over or a new license is issued.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will ask the Senator just one other question. The bill as it came from the House is in accordance with the conference report of the last Congress?

Mr. LENROOT. It is.

Mr. FLETCHER. And it is the Senate amendment to that bill which the Senator from Wisconsin contends deviates from that report?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. If I understand the Senator's construction of the bill, one of two things must happen in order to terminate a lease: First, the Government of the United States must take it over, or the new lease must be satisfactory to the lessee.

Mr. LENROOT. Exactly; and if it is not satisfactory, all they need to say is, "We do not like the lease that you have tendered us and we will not accept it"; and then they are entitled to an annual renewal of their old franchise so long as time shall run.

Mr. NORRIS. So the result would be that the lessee would never accept the new lease unless it was something that gave him better terms than he had under the old lease.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, he would never accept a new license unless its terms were more liberal to him than the license which is issued under this law. I want to know whether any Senator is going to stand upon this floor and justify that amendment. Let me read it again:

That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over or does not tender a new license on reasonable terms to the original or a new licensee which is accepted, then the commission shall issue from year to year an annual license to the then licensee under the terms and conditions of the original license until the property is taken over or a new license is issued.

If the Senate adopts that amendment, the insertion of those three words, "which is accepted," will change the bill from the grant of a 50-year franchise to a grant of a perpetual franchise, something that the water-power interests themselves did not ask at the last session of Congress, and to my knowledge now some of the water-power interests that I know to be legitimate are not asking it to-day. Who, then, is asking it, and what is the purpose of the committee in granting a perpetual franchise when there is no legitimate investor that I know of that is asking it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHIPPS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to ask the Senator if he does not construe the last words in the amendment which he read a while ago as a modification of the so-called perpetual clause into an annual leasing?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but in its effect it is an annual leasing. It goes on from year to year.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But with the right to the Government at any time within any year to proceed to take it over.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly. But it is rather a curious fact that while it is asserted that that is a substantial right to the Government, it is usually asserted by the very gentlemen who say that anything of that kind savors of socialism, and they would be opposed to it under any circumstances. I will be able to show a little later that while the right does exist for the Government to take over under what is known as the "recapture clause" under a provision in the bill, which is also found in the House bill, it will be impossible for the Government to take it over in the vast majority of cases without paying a great deal more than the net investment of the licensee in the property or the value of the property that is taken over.

I am not going to discuss that at length now. I am only making some general observations concerning the amendments that have been proposed by the Senate committee, which have changed the bill from a bill in the public interest to a bill that is clearly against the public interest and in the interest of private capital, irrespective of the public interest.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator is entirely in error when he says we have made this a perpetual and continuing lease. That was exactly what was done in the conference report. Let me read it to the Senator. I have here the conference report, which states:

SEC. 15. Provided that in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over and does not issue a new license to the original or a new licensee, then the commission shall issue from year to year an annual license to the then licensee under the terms and conditions of the original lease until the property is taken over or a new license is issued as aforesaid.

Now, let me compare that with the language here:

That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over or does not tender a new license on reasonable terms to the original or a new licensee which is accepted—

And, of course, any license which is not accepted would be of no account—then the commission shall issue from year to year an annual license to the then licensee under the terms and conditions of the original license.

In other words, if the time has expired and the Government fails to recapture the property, and there is not a new lease made, the lease is continued from year to year. That was the provision in the conference report and that is the provision in this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. May I just ask the Senator, if he is so sure of that, why the committee—and I am a member of it—offered this amendment, to insert the words "which is accepted"?

Mr. NELSON. That has nothing to do with it. That is with reference to a renewal of the lease under the original license. It does not refer to the lease from year to year. If the Government does not take over the property, it has a right to lease it again. But, of course, no lessee will take it unless he accepts it. That is inevitable. Those words are simply surplusage.

Mr. LENROOT. Then the Senator will not object to the amendment not being agreed to, I take it?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LENROOT. No; I want to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question in reference to what he said.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator has made the statement that because the original lease can be renewed from year to year that is robbing the Government and continuing a perpetual lease, when it is exactly what was in the conference report.

Mr. LENROOT. In the first place, it is not, because the clause "which is accepted" is a Senate committee amendment.

Mr. NELSON. No; let me read it.

Mr. LENROOT. I am familiar with it. The words "which is accepted" are not in the conference report.

Mr. NELSON. It reads:

Provided, That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over and does not issue a new license to the original or a new licensee, then the commission shall issue from year to year a new license to the then licensee under the terms and conditions of the original lease.

If there could be a perpetual lease under this bill, there could be under the conference report that I have just quoted.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator inform the Senate what the purpose of the committee was in offering as an amendment the words "which is accepted"?

Mr. NELSON. No lease can be valid unless accepted. You can not force a lessee to take a new lease unless he accepts it. That is implied in every license.

Mr. LENROOT. Then is it the Senator's position that until the original licensee accepts a new lease he is entitled to a lease from year to year?

Mr. NELSON. Now, here is the alternative——

Mr. LENROOT. Will not the Senator answer the question?

Mr. NELSON. The Senator is again misconstruing the bill. It reads:

That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over—

That is one provision. Then it proceeds:

Or does not tender a new license on reasonable terms to the original or a new licensee which is accepted.

There are two cases. In case the United States does not exercise the right to take over the United States will continue the license from year to year. There are two cases provided for in that provision, and it is not open to the objection the Senator from Wisconsin makes to it.

Mr. LENROOT. Let us see whether it is or not. If the Government does not take it over, then under that language is not the licensee entitled to a renewal from year to year?

Mr. NELSON. Exactly. That is what I said. That is the provision in the original conference report, and the Senator will not state that that was not provided for in the original conference report.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he will permit the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to respond to a question that I desire to address to him, namely, Will the Senator from Minnesota tell the Senate just exactly what is the purpose of the amendment proposed by the committee? In other words, will not the Senator tell us what the difference in meaning is between the original and the text as it is amended? What was the change which the committee intended to accomplish?

Mr. NELSON. I am unable to state of my own knowledge. I was present with the committee, but it was not an amendment offered by myself. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] was present, I think, at the time.

Mr. LENROOT. No; I was not present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. And the Senator from Florida, I think, was present.

Mr. FLETCHER. The idea seems to have been, and I think it is a very reasonable and proper idea, that where the Government fails or refuses to take the property over it is not advisable that it shall go to waste, that it shall absolutely disappear, that the public shall be deprived of the power which has been generated there and actually put in use. The Government ought either to take it over or issue another license. The bill provides for that. All the Government has to do is to take it over at the end of the 50-year period.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Or issue a new license.

Mr. FLETCHER. If it does not want to do that for any reason, then it ought to issue a new license, so that the improvement may be of some advantage and use, so that it shall not go to waste and be dissipated and the power be unutilized. The other provision is that a new license shall issue to the original licensee. But suppose the original licensee does not want it, that he is not, we will say, in a position to carry on the enterprise, and a new licensee says, "I will take it." This bill provided originally that the Government should say to some new licensee, "We will give you this same contract that we had. We will extend this same license, this same permit."

Suppose the new licensee does nothing. Suppose he simply sits idle and does not obligate himself to carry on the work, or to continue the industry or the development, or utilize the power, but simply sits by and does nothing. We thought it well enough to put in here a provision that would oblige him to do something by compelling him to accept that.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. The words "which is accepted" apply to the original licensee.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think they do.

Mr. LENROOT. As well as to the new licensee.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think so.

Mr. LENROOT. Why, language could not be plainer.

Mr. FLETCHER. It says "a new license on reasonable terms to the original or a new licensee which is accepted." The word "license" as written in the bill probably ought to be "licensee." It appears here as "license."

Mr. LENROOT. It should be "licensee."

Mr. FLETCHER. I presume it should be "licensee." The idea was to put the proposition into definite shape where the parties undertaking to continue the enterprise would agree to do it, and not merely issue them a permit which they might or might not exercise and take advantage of.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. So we put it in the bill that the Government must take over the property first, or else if it does not see fit to take over the property it must see to it that the property is utilized in some way by entering into a contract which is accepted by the party, and that means that the party accepting the contract, whether the original licensee or the new licensee, is bound to do something. He is obligated to do something if he accepts it. If he does not accept it he would not be bound to do anything.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator let me ask him a question? If the Government does not take it over, if it does not issue a new license to a new licensee and if the original licensee does not accept the new license, what is the situation?

Mr. FLETCHER. In that situation, then, it goes on under the original issue. He is entitled then to have——

Mr. LENROOT. A year-to-year license.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; under the original terms.

Mr. LENROOT. That is what I have been contending all along. Now, the Senator and I have the same construction and he adopts the perpetual license I spoke of.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I think not. I think the words "which is accepted" apply not only to the original licensee but to the new licensee.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, yes; they do.

Mr. FLETCHER. Therefore the words are worth while. It may not vitally matter, but the words are worth while, because the new licensee might step in and the Government might say, "You do not want to continue, so we will find a man who will and we will issue a permit to him." We say, "You can not do that unless you bind the new licensee himself to do something." He does that when he accepts the new license, not merely sitting there and having one issued to him without actually agreeing to the terms of it.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator has apparently quite agreed with me that if the Government does not take over the property and does not issue a new license to the new licensee and if the original licensee refuses to accept the new license, then he is entitled to go on under his original license from year to year for all time. I want to ask the Senator if he is in favor of that kind of legislation?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am, because I think——

Mr. LENROOT. Very well; I have the Senator's answer.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator, by way of a full answer to his question, that I am, because I think it is the business of the Government and that the obligation rests upon the Government to a certain extent in the public interest to either cancel the license or issue another one.

Mr. LENROOT. But it can not cancel the license. That is the trouble. How can it cancel it or take it away without paying for it in full not only for the time but all time thereafter?

Mr. FLETCHER. It can take it over. I think the Government ought to take over the property——

Mr. LENROOT. Is the Senator in favor of having the Government acquire all the water power and transportation lines in the country and operating them under Government ownership?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I will not say that.

Mr. LENROOT. But that is where the position of the Senator brings him to.

Mr FLETCHER. Not at all, because the obligation of the Congress, it seems to me, is to put this great industry in such position that the public will get benefit from it and that it can not be paralyzed and dissipated merely because the Government, through its officials, fails to do that which it should do. We want to say in the bill that the commission must act, not that they may sit idle and let time go by and pay no attention to these great enterprises all over the country. They must do something.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, of course, nobody is objecting to that, but the Senator wants the licensee to be in a position where he does not have to do anything, and if he sits still and does nothing that goes on forever under his original license. That is the position of the Senator——

Mr. FLETCHER. For a definite time.

Mr. LENROOT. No; an indefinite time—from year to year. I want to say to the Senator very frankly, because I appreciate the position he has taken, that if the Senate adopts these amendments and the House should concur in them the bill will never become a law. I know the bill would be vetoed with any such provision in it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I feel as he does about this matter? I would oppose anything like a perpetual license; but assuming that at the end of the 50-year term under the law as the Senator would have it nothing was done either by the Government or by the licensee, what would happen? Would the lease ex vi termini cease?

Mr. LENROOT. Under the language as I would like to see it it is provided that unless the Government takes it over or gives it to a new licensee under the terms of the bill with full compensation they then must tender a new license to the licensee, and if they do not, then they are entitled from year to year to a license until they do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Under the Senator's contention?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It did seem to me, in reading the provision to which the Senator objects, that it had the effect of enabling the Government, in case of laches on the part of its officials, to proceed within the first year by renewing the license for a year, and if it did not do that within the year of the second lease, then they could proceed. In other words, it seems to me this is a case of the Government simply attempting deliberately to recapture the property at any time.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not object to that feature; in fact, I am in favor of it, but I do not want a vested right in the licensee to refuse to accept a new license, and thus get a perpetual license under the nominal right of an annual licensee from year to year.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. Do I understand the Senator prefers the committee amendment in that it uses the word "tender" in line 19 instead of the word "issue"?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator prefers that?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes. At this point I might as well say that I stated that the conference report was a flat 50-year franchise or right. Senators will remember the circumstances under which the report was made to the Senate and why it was not brought up, but when the conference report was made I did object to the use of the word "issue." I talked with nearly all the conferees and they insisted that the word "issue" in this respect and the word "tender" were synonymous terms. The water-power interests that were looking after their side of it also took the same position. I took such opportunity as I then had to ascertain the legal definition of the word "issue," and I confess that it was somewhat in doubt; but, merely to remove any doubt, I myself proposed the amendment in committee that the word "issue" should be changed to "tender." If that is done and the words "which is accepted" are not adopted as a Senate amendment, the provision will fully protect the public interests in so far as the terms of the licensee are concerned.

I now yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I regret exceedingly that the committee thought it wise by the introduction of the proposed amendment to precipitate again the controversy which has waged between the two Houses for a long period of time and arrest this much-needed legislation. I want to say, however, that I can not think that the amendment proposed reaches the condition suggested by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I likewise feel that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is not quite right in saying that this would establish a perpetual license, because the license only runs from year to year, with the right in the commission to issue a new license at any time.

Mr. LENROOT. But it must be accepted by the licensee?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but that is only in case it is not accepted. The license goes from year to year, but with power in the commission to issue a new license to some one else at any time; so it can not be considered as a perpetual license.

Mr. LENROOT. It is a perpetual license unless the property is taken over and paid for.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Or unless another license is given to some one else.

Mr. LENROOT. Then it must be taken over and paid for.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course; by the new licensee. Of course, some provision should be made for the case of the expiration of a license when the Government does not desire to take it over and no one else wants a new license. That condition should be taken care of, and some provision should be made for it.

Mr. LENROOT. If the proviso of the Senate committee amendment is adopted it will then require the tender of a new license to be made to the original licensee, and if the tender is not made he will be entitled to a license from year to year under the original license grant. There is more than a mere matter of form in connection with this. Why should not the Government be free in this regard? The Government ought to be free at the end of the 50-year term to deal in a given case according as the circumstances of that case may exist at the end of 50 years. Fifty years is a long time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield further to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why should not the commission be required at the expiration of the period to tender? That would solve the situation. Why should it be left to their option to tender a new lease?

Mr. LENROOT. That is the effect, because they are entitled to an annual license, unless they do tender a new one. There is no objection to that. That would bring the tender of a new license, of course, but the difficulty is that the licensee may refuse to accept it, and of course he will refuse to accept it in every instance where the terms of the new license are less liberal than the terms of the original license.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That, of course, is quite obvious.

Mr. LENROOT. The only case under the language of the proposed amendment where the licensee would accept the new license is where the new license was against the public interest and in his favor more than the original license.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me inquire of the Senator whether that is exactly right? A license is tendered to him by the commission very much more onerous than the original license, and he declines to accept it. Under the proposed amendment he would be entitled to a lease only from year to year, but it would be subject to be let to a new licensee at any time. So if he desired to continue the business, in order to insure the continuance of the business in his hands, he might be quite willing to accept one very much more onerous in its terms than the original license, recognizing that new bidders would come in at the end of the year, or sooner, and possibly take the property on the terms offered to him. So it does not seem to me that he would necessarily decline to accept, even though the terms were more onerous than the original lease.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, he would decline to accept for the reason that the new licensee could not get the property on paying the net investment to the original licensee for anything like its worth to him, because there are provisions in the bill which require him, in addition to paying the value of the property, to pay the original licensee what are known as severance damages.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, that is an entirely different feature of the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. It is a different feature of the bill, but it goes to the fact that the provision for a new licensee is no protection to the public in so far as compelling the original licensee to accept a new license tendered by the Government is concerned.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, that is another feature of the bill that we shall have to take up as an independent proposition when we get to it.

Mr. LENROOT. But it has a direct bearing upon this, because it destroys the Senator's argument that it is a protection to the public because a new licensee must take over the property at any time at exactly the net investment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Montana has been making no argument. I have not had the benefit of the consideration of this matter by the committee as has the Senator from Wisconsin; I am very desirous of having a proper bill enacted; and I was endeavoring to elicit information and to ascertain how the Senator's statement that this amounts to a perpetual license is exactly correct. It did not occur to me that it was.

Mr. LENROOT. That it is a perpetual license I think the Senator will agree with me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Montana will rely upon the Senator from Wisconsin with entire confidence in any effort he may make to fix a period for the licenses at not more than 50 years.

Mr. LENROOT. It can be done by refusing to adopt the Senate committee amendment inserting the words "which is accepted" and adopting the amendment inserting the word "tender" instead of "issue," which will make it very clear that it will be a 50-year license and that at the end of the 50 years a new license must be tendered or the property must be turned over either to the Government or to a new licensee or else the original licensee will be entitled to an annual lease until one of those three things is done. That I am in favor of.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. NUGENT. I will say that I am in entire accord with the views expressed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] in respect to the effect of the proviso contained in section 15 of the bill; but I desire to call the Senator's attention to what I believe to be the fact, that there is a direct contradiction as between the provision of the body of the section and that contained in the proviso. In the body of the section it is provided that—

> The commission is authorized to issue a new license to the original licensee upon such terms and conditions as may be authorized or required under the then existing laws and regulations.

Under the proviso it is simply required that in the event the original licensee is not tendered a new license upon such reasonable terms as may be agreeable to him, then the commission shall issue to him under the original terms a license from year to year, utterly regardless of what the law may be at that time.

Mr. LENROOT. Exactly; and that was the next matter I was coming to in the discussion—the inclusion of the word "reasonable" in the amendment. Congress by the enactment of this proposed law would confer jurisdiction upon the courts not alone to determine the constitutionality of the law but to determine the reasonableness of the law itself—something that is entirely unprecedented in legislation; something that I do not think any Senator has ever before heard of in legislation.

The body of the section, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] states, provides that "the commission is authorized to issue a new license to the original licensee upon such terms and conditions as may be authorized or required under the then existing laws and regulations." Then, in the proviso, it is provided, in effect, that those laws and regulations must be reasonable; and it would give the courts the power to set aside a law of the Congress of the United States, not because it was unconstitutional but because, in the opinion of the court, it was unreasonable. So much for that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Before the Senator from Wisconsin passes from that, will he not indicate to the Senate just what changes he would make in the proviso in order to make it conform to his view?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes. I would adopt the committee amendment striking out the word "issue," in line 18, and inserting the word "tender," and refuse to agree to the Senate committee amendment in line 19, inserting the words "on reasonable terms," and the amendment in line 20, inserting the words "which is accepted," so that the proviso would read as follows:

> Provided, That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over or does not tender a new license to the original or a new licensee, then the commission shall issue from year to year an annual license to the then licensee under the terms and conditions of the original license until the property is taken over or a new license is issued as aforesaid.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Should not the word "issue" remain as applied to the new licensee and not simply the word "tender"?

Mr. LENROOT. I think "tender" would cover it. If they do not tender a license to the new licensee, then they can permit the old licensee to operate the property from year to year.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Suppose they do tender it and it is not accepted.

Mr. LENROOT. If it is not accepted, should the original licensee desire so to do, he may continue from year to year.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But if it is tendered to the new licensee and he does not take it the original licensee would not have a right then to operate the plant from year to year. It must be issued to the new licensee in order to make the case.

Mr. LENROOT. I think "tender" makes the case. A tender protects the original licensee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand that; but let me cite a case to the Senator. A new licensee asks for a license and the license is tendered to him, but he does not take it. The conditions now exclude the original licensee from getting his year-to-year license.

Mr. LENROOT. I see the Senator's point. That, however, could, of course, be very easily remedied by making the proviso read "issue to the new licensee or tender to the original licensee."

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator, if there is a tender of a new license to the new licensee, is it not fair to say that that tender of a new license ought to be on reasonable terms? Is there any objection to that?

Mr. LENROOT. It ought to be tendered on such terms as the law may then authorize. The Senator would not say that the courts should have the power to inquire into the reasonableness of the terms authorized by existing law.

Mr. FLETCHER. Suppose the law did not cover that point; suppose the law did not specify what are reasonable terms. The license has expired, the original licensee is not tendered a license, but some new person is tendered a license. If the enterprise is not continued large industries may suffer—those who have been using the power, for instance, may suffer. Ought not that tender of a new license to be upon reasonable terms, irrespective of what the other terms may have been?

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think that the law should be such that the courts should inquire into the reasonableness of the terms of an act of Congress?

Mr. FLETCHER. I should think that might be done in the case of public utilities.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, in my opinion the matters that are being discussed by the Senator from Wisconsin are among the most important in this bill, and it is advisable, in my judgment, that as many Senators as possible should hear the argument. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gronna	Lodge	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Harris	McNary	Smoot
Brandegee	Harrison	Nelson	Spencer
Capper	Henderson	New	Sterling
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Norris	Sutherland
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Thomas
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Trammell
Elkins	Keyes	Phipps	Wadsworth
Fletcher	King	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
France	Kirby	Sheppard
Gerry	Lenroot	Smith, Ga.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], is absent on the business of the Senate. I ask that this announcement hold for the remainder of the week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is not a quorum present. The names of the absentees will be called.

The Chief Clerk called the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. KNOX and Mr. STANLEY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. MYERS and Mr. MCKELLAR entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. ROBINSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in conjunction with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], I have been detained from the Senate Chamber on business of the Senate, being engaged in the conference on the railroad bill.

Mr. CUMMINS and Mr. KELLOGG entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, further as bearing upon the question which I have been discussing, as to this perpetual franchise, and the suggestions which have been made that there was a protection to the Government against any such perpetual franchise, because the Government, under the bill, has a right to take over the property upon paying for it, or if the Government did not see fit to do so, that a new license might be issued to a new licensee, and that, therefore, there would be sufficient pressure or inducement upon the original licensee to accept any reasonable license that might be tendered by the commission, I stated that I would show the difficulty either of the Government taking it over or a new licensee taking it over upon any reasonable terms.

The bill provides, and very properly, that in taking over the property the licensee shall be entitled to secure the net amount of money that he has invested in the property at the end of the term, and that net investment is arrived at by determining the amount of money properly expended in original construction, the amount of money spent in excess of a fair return that is set aside into amortization reserves and deducted from this original investment; and also there is a deduction of the amount of money that may have been set aside in depreciation reserve but not utilized in keeping up the property. Then it is provided that in no case shall the amount paid exceed the value of the property.

Thus far that is entirely fair to the Government and it is entirely fair to the licensee. But section 14 of the original bill as passed by the House goes far beyond that, and, after providing for the payment of these sums, provides for the payment of "the net investment of the licensee in the project or projects taken, not to exceed the fair value of the property taken plus such reasonable damages, if any, to property of the licensee valuable, serviceable, and dependent as above set forth but not taken as may be caused by the severance therefrom of property taken, and shall assume all contracts entered into by the licensee with the approval of the commission."

So, under the terms of the bill, if the Government takes it over, or a new licensee takes it over, it must pay, first, in addition to every dollar that the original licensee has invested in the property licensed, such severance damages as may be caused by the separation of the property.

That becomes very important in connection with the Senate committee amendment to the section that I have been discussing, section 15, because if they have the right to a license from year to year until the property is taken over, or until they see fit to accept a new license, what will be the measure of the severance damages that they will be entitled to receive under this bill and what would a new licensee be compelled to pay, or the Government be compelled to pay, in addition to the amount of money actually invested by the licensee?

Let us assume, Mr. President, that here is a water-power license under the bill producing, we will say, 5,000 horsepower, and that current is transmitted to a general trunk line on which there are 50,000 horsepower transmitted. But the water power in this particular case, with this Government project, has cost the licensee only $10 per horsepower. The other 50,000 may cost them $20 per horsepower and, therefore, if they must supply the current that is leased by the 5,000-horsepower project that is to be taken from them it will cost them twice as much to furnish it as what they are getting it for under the Government project. So their severance damages under the terms of the bill could well be claimed by them to be the difference between the $10 per horsepower that it cost them under the Government project and the $20 per horsepower that it would cost them under a new steam project, perhaps, and therefore they would very likely claim that their damages by reason of the taking of this property were $50,000 per year, for how many years nobody knows. The severance damages might easily be greater than the entire net investment of the licensee; and would any licensee conceivably take over this property when he had to pay every dollar that was invested in it by the original licensee and, in addition, pay these severance damages, which might run into figures higher than the entire cost of the property? Why should he? How could he? If he has to pay as much for this property as it would cost him to install a steam plant, why should he do it? What possible profit could there be for him in taking it over?

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Suppose the paragraph is amended as the Senator suggests—> that in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over or does not tender a new license * * * to the original or a new licensee.

Suppose the United States does not take it over, and suppose the United States does tender a new license to the original licensee or somebody else, and that is not accepted by anybody. What becomes of the water power then? Suppose the United States does not take over the property, and suppose the United States makes a tender to the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from South Dakota, one of whom is the original licensee, and the other is not, and suppose neither of them accepts the tender. What, then, becomes of it? Is the power to remain there idle and in abeyance?

Mr. LENROOT. No; it will not remain idle.

Mr. NELSON. Where will it be, then?

Mr. LENROOT. We will see. I will answer the Senator's question. It will be exactly where it is to-day. Seventy-five per cent of the public-utilities franchises of this country are for a term of years, and usually very much shorter terms than the 50 years that is provided in the bill; and at the end of the term their franchise is gone, of course. They can be ordered to take up their tracks, or remove their works, as the case may be. In this case, if they refuse to accept such a license or lease as the Government tendered them at the end of the 50 years, the Government could say to them, "Take the license upon such terms as we believe to be fair and just, or remove your works," and the Senator knows that the works will not be removed, but they will accept such license as the Government of the United States at that time will deem fair and just and equitable.

Mr. NELSON. But the Senator does not answer the question. Suppose they do not accept. Suppose neither the old licensee nor the new one accepts the tender of the Government for a lease. What becomes, then, of the water power?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Wisconsin will not suppose an impossibility, because the Senator from Minnesota probably can not recall, as I can not recall at present, such a case where a franchise has been terminated. He has had many of them in his own State. He has had them in St. Paul and Minneapolis, where franchises have been terminated. But I have yet to know of a case where they removed their works or ceased operation of public utilities. The result was that at the termination of the franchise the public got a little better terms than they did under the original franchise. That was the result of it, and that would be the result of it in this case without a shadow of a question. But if the licensee should refuse to accept such license as may be tendered him by the Government at the end of the 50 years, the Government should then say to him, "You have had this for 50 years under favorable terms. Accept such a license as we deem fair and just, or you can remove your property." But they will never remove the property. That is the answer which always exists in all these cases.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am sure the Senator from Wisconsin desires nothing but what is fair and just between the public and the licensees. I would like to inquire of the Senator whether the licensee would not, under such circumstances, be under a very powerful constraint to accept any license that might be tendered?

Mr. LENROOT. He would, and he ought to be.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is, he would not be dealing with perfect freedom, because if he did not take the license tendered he would not be entitled, of course, to a license from year to year. He would simply be out of business.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And he would not have an opportunity, of course, to recover any portion of the money put into the plant.

Mr. LENROOT. No.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then, Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator whether it would not be necessary to take that condition into consideration in fixing the charges for the use of the power during the life of the lease; whether the effect of that would not be naturally to fix a higher rate than otherwise would be fixed, looking practically to the amortization of the plant.

Mr. LENROOT. It might be. That brings me to a consideration of that very subject. I admit that it would be an incentive to exact such rates as would secure amortization of the plant, but the Senator knows that in a vast majority of the bond issues now by water-power companies the bond issue itself provides for a sinking fund creating an amortization fund for the wiping out of the indebtedness at the end of the term.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am certain that that is correct, but that is not the theory upon which the bill is drafted.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The theory of the bill is that the property will be taken over by the Government at the end of the 50-year period or by a new licensee, and the original licensee will be reimbursed his net investment, and therefore it will not be necessary to fix charges upon the basis of the amortization of the plant. Notwithstanding the conditions of which the Senator speaks, the bill, as I said, is not framed upon that theory. Otherwise, there would be no provision at all for reimbursement at the end of the 50-year period.

Mr. LENROOT. It does not require amortization, of course.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No. So if we proceed upon that theory, then we should have no provision in the bill which would necessarily impel the imposition of rates during the period of the license which would contemplate an amortization in that way.

Mr. LENROOT. Not at all, because here is the situation, and we might as well be frank about it. Suppose they have actually amortized the value of the plant at the end of the 50 years, and suppose they actually have paid a handsome return to the stockholders during that entire period, does the Senator say that Congress, when that time comes, ought not to have the right to take that into consideration in its laws providing for the tender of a new license to the licensee?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator gets into a very controversial frame of mind, when I am simply endeavoring to bring out the different views about the matter. Congress undoubtedly has the right to take that into consideration. If the conditions about which the Senator speaks exist, namely, that such rates have been exacted as not only to pay the investors a good return upon the money, but also to amortize the plant, then the Government should take it over at the end of the 50-year period without paying a dollar. We are assuming that the bill is framed upon the other principle. The bill is framed upon the principle that the plant will not be amortized. Otherwise the provision for recapture must be remodeled. The Senator will certainly agree to that.

Mr. LENROOT. No; the provisions for recapture would not be modified in the least if it is amortized, because it might not be fully amortized, as the Senator can well realize. It might be amortized in part, and it might be that the Congress then would take all those matters into consideration in the laws which it then would enact providing for a renewal of the license.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The bill does not contemplate at all, as I understand it, the imposition of such rates as will permit of the amortization of the plant. It contemplates that the investor will get his net investment at the end of the period.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, but that is reduced by such amount——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I recognize that.

Mr. LENROOT. The bill does contemplate an amortization fund, because it expressly provides for it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, if it provides for an amortization fund, then the provision under consideration is equally open to criticism.

Mr. LENROOT. There is this difference in providing for an amortization fund between being extremely liberal at the beginning of the 50-year term, because of the uncertainties and hazards of the term, and at the end of the term being able to say what the actual operation was. Of course, the Senator sees very readily that is a very broad distinction. The license itself might provide for amortization, believing that a very large return would be justifiable under certain circumstances. But at the end of the period it might well be that that was very much more liberal than the facts warranted as they developed during the year. If not, Congress would be prohibited, under the language of the bill as the Senate committee reports it, from taking that into consideration at all in the issuing of a new license.

The point which I am discussing is a matter of some importance. I say that the new licensee will not take the property over under the language of the bill; it can not be conceived that he would in any instance take it over, because he will have to pay in addition to the net investment, upon the theory that the original licensee at the end of the 50-year term has a continuing rate and that he then suffers by the severance of his property of which he had a right to have the emoluments.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to inquire of the Senator whether it ought not to be possible and whether would it not be desirable to frame this portion of the bill so that the original licensee would be without constraint at the end of the 50-year period just the same as the new licensee would be without any constraint?

Mr. LENROOT. How would the Senator do it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have not given it any thought yet, but I inquire of the Senator whether it would not be desirable to make it so, and is it desirable from any point of view to have it so framed that the licensee must take whatever is tendered to him or suffer what he believes is a serious loss?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think there is anything unjust at the end of a 50-year term in saying to a licensee that he shall accept such license as the Government under the laws then existing deems fair or remove his property, because we either have to give the advantage to the licensee or to the Government, and as between the two I say if there must be an advantage the advantage ought to lie with the Government.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator takes that position, and I agree with him that it should lie with the Government; but considering the matter from the standpoint of the public interest, why should we take that attitude? We say to the man either take the terms that we tender or the property will lie idle and it will go to waste. It will not be utilized at all and the community will not have the benefit of the operation of the property unless he takes exactly the terms that we propose, which he thinks are entirely unfair. I can not believe that the Senator's sense of justice will quite approve of that.

Mr. LENROOT. I know the Senator has given a great deal of attention to this subject, as I have, and if he can suggest any phraseology that will put the Government and the licensee upon an equality, I shall be glad to welcome such a suggestion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall endeavor to do so.

Mr. LENROOT. I have been struggling with the question for a great many years, and I have never yet seen a suggestion where the advantage was not given to the licensee instead of to the Government.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I can not agree with the Senator about that because he knows that there have been two camps contending in the matter. I quite agree with him that suggestions from certain sources have always been, as I have observed and as he has, favorable to the licensee, but there has been another camp which has been, as I think, sometimes quite unreasonable also in the provisions that they seek to insert in legislation of this character.

Mr. LENROOT. When the Senator offers, if he will be so good as to offer, an amendment which will put them upon an equality I assure him that I shall be very glad to consider it, but I think he will find great difficulty in framing any amendment to the bill that does not give either the Government or the licensee the advantage.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I take this occasion to say that my own judgment about the matter is that the expression "on such reasonable terms" is entirely impracticable.

Mr. LENROOT. I agree, of course.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call attention to the fact that the proviso is worded as the Senator wants it—that in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over or does not tender a new license to the original or a new licensee. Now, the Government need not tender it to the original licensee under that provision. The Government is absolutely left free to freeze out the original corporation. It need not make a tender even to that company. It can make it to a new licensee under the terms of the bill and utterly ignore the old company. If the Government tenders it to anybody else outside of the original corporation, tenders it to A, B, C, or D, just makes a tender, whether the tender is accepted or not, then the thing lapses.

Mr. LENROOT. I stated to the Senator from Montana some time ago that I would have no objection to an amendment providing that in the case of a new licensee it should be accepted by the licensee or a tender made to the original licensee in order to entitle him to a license from year to year, but the difficulty, as the Senator well knows, with the language of the amendment is that unless a tender is made to the original licensee which is accepted, he gets his license from year to year, and it may go on forever and will go on forever, because, as I have just been trying to show, a new licensee will never take over the property under the terms of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator allow me to insert in the RECORD, in my own time, with his permission, the paragraph in the report bearing on the amendment to section 15? It is not a long paragraph, and deals with the subject of the amendment to section 15. If the Senator has no objection, I should like to have it inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. It would be better to have it read now.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is not very long, and I will read it:

> The amendment to section 15, providing that the license tendered in case the United States does not exercise the right to take over the works shall be "on reasonable terms" and "which is accepted" by the original or the new licensee is deemed necessary in the interest of development. This legislation will be useless if capital will not invest under it. It will not do so unless it is reasonably certain of the return of its investment if the works are taken over. It is the opinion of practically all those acquainted with investments of this kind that this language is necessary to insure the investment of capital in these great and much-needed enterprises. The interests of the Government and the public are not impaired. The works must be continued in operation at the end of 50 years in order that the industries created by them and dependent upon them may not suffer. Private capital should not be required to do this upon unreasonable terms, nor should its property be confiscated. Under this provision, if the new license is not accepted, the works will be carried on under the original license from year to year, with the Government free to take it over at any time that it may be prepared to do so or to turn it over to a new licensee upon terms that can be agreed upon. In other words, the Government is free to do what it may desire to do, capital is reasonably sure of the return of its investment, and the public is assured permanent service under its own regulative agencies.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very glad the Senator put that paragraph in the RECORD. It has been some time since I read the report, and that particular paragraph had escaped my notice. I am glad he put it in the RECORD, because it fully sustains my position. Let me again read a part of what the Senator read from the report:

> Under this provision, if the new license is not accepted, the works will be carried on under the original license from year to year, with the Government free to take it over at any time that it may be prepared to do so or to turn it over to a new licensee upon terms that can be agreed upon.

Exactly what I have contended for throughout this discussion, that here is a perpetual license, if the Senate committee amendments be adopted, unless the Government itself either takes the plant over or a new licensee can be found who will take it over, paying the same money that the Government will be compelled to pay for it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Another thought has suggested itself to me, if the Senator will pardon a further interruption. On reflection, I believe that no amendment is necessary; I believe that the matter is well taken care of by the bill as it came from the other House without the provision that has given rise to this discussion. On reflection, I think the constraint about which I spoke probably would not exist. This contemplates that the Government does not want to take the property over; it contemplates that no new lessee comes forward who is willing to take it on the terms proposed by the Government. Undoubtedly industry will be dependent upon the power that has been developed; in many instances great communities will be dependent upon the industries. The Government will, of course, be under some kind and measure of constraint to keep the plant going and will be under an obligation to those who are dependent upon the power to tender a lease so reasonable in its terms as will reasonably insure its acceptance. Then, on the other hand, the original lessee will know that unless he does accept what is tendered, the best he can get will be a lease from year to year and that the property may go to a new lessee at any time, and thus he would be cut off. He will, therefore, be under some measure of constraint to accept the lease which is proposed. So I believe that these conflicting considerations will so operate as to compel the Government to tender a reasonable lease and will equally operate to compel the original lessee to accept whatever reasonable lease is tendered to him. Accordingly I do not think that there is any particular occasion for changing the language of the House bill.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very glad to hear the Senator say that, although I think the Senator will agree with me that there ought not to be any doubt concerning the meaning of the word "issue." It has been assumed that "issue" and "tender" were synonymous terms, and the amendment should be adopted so as to make it clear. Certainly we do not want to go into the courts upon that proposition.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I again suggest to the Senator that the word "tender" should not be applied to a new licensee.

Mr. LENROOT. No; I understand that. I was not referring to that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Accordingly I suggest that the language read "does not issue a license to a new licensee or tender a new license to the original licensee."

Mr. LENROOT. That would be correct. I certainly would agree with the Senator's view upon that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have listened to what has been said by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] with a great deal of interest, but I certainly can not understand the provisions of the bill as construed by the Senator. The object of this legislation is the development of power sites and power plants to furnish power to all parts of the country in which power plants can be successfully established.

In the first place, we have got to pass a law that the people furnishing the money for the establishment of such plant, not 50 years hence but to-day, will feel safe in the investment which they make; and I think if the pending amendment is not agreed to the provisions of the bill will be such that it will be very difficult, indeed, to get any financial assistance in the United States to install power plants under it.

I think this is one of the vital phases of the bill. I do not care how good the legislation may be and how necessary it is for the development of water power—and so far as the provisions of the bill are concerned there are other things in it that I do not like at all, as to which I am perfectly willing to yield my judgment in order to get some kind of a workable bill so that every power site in the United States upon the public lands may be developed—but there is no need of framing the bill in such a manner that it will be impossible to secure the necessary money in order to develop the power plants. I think without the amendment now under discussion, which has been reported by the committee, it will be impossible to finance the projects that are contemplated to be established in this country.

I thank the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Utah, I merely wish to say in reference to the conference report which failed at the last session, that we were then informed by those favoring the legislation that they were satisfied that the money could be obtained to develop the contemplated water-power plants. There was then no thought that the grant of any perpetual franchises was necessary.

Certainly, Mr. President, if we have got to the point where it is necessary to give away forever the one great resource which we have in this country which can be of benefit to the people in order to get development, we had better be a little slow in passing legislation for that purpose. If that is the price we have got to pay for private development of water power in this country we had better develop it by the Government itself.

Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] desires that there be a short executive session, and, as I can not conclude to-day, I shall now yield the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not desire to be understood as stating or even intimating that the amendment which has been offered to the House provision which is now under consideration has in any way a tendency to give away the resources of this country. I do not care whether the Government develops the property or whether it is developed by private initiative and private capital; development will not be undertaken, in my opinion, when upon the face of the act the person or company proposing to furnish the money sees there is no chance of getting the money back. That is just as certain as we live. I think that the provision with the amendment guards every interest of the Government. I can not see that the Government has one chance in ten million of losing anything under the provisions of the amendment to the House bill; but it does hold out a hope, at any rate, to the man who puts up the money that at the end of 50 long years there shall be at least a new license issued upon reasonable terms; and who would want a license otherwise? Who is to decide the terms? It is all in the hands of the Government, and, if this scheme lasts, will be in its hands for 50 years. I think that we ought, at least, if we are going to enact legislation of this character, so word it that we will feel fairly certain that some kind of action will be taken under the law.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to occupy a moment or two, I have been listening with some interest to the views of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. I understand he objects to the amendment, on line 19, page 26, which would insert the words "on reasonable terms," being an amendment offered by the committee. It occurs to me that if those words were not in the provision it would be in the power of the Government to refuse to take over a project at the end of 50 years and to tender a new license so prohibitive and on such unreasonable terms that no one would have it. Then the licensee under the original license would have no power on earth of getting a permit from year to year to conduct the plant which he had erected, but would simply be at the mercy of the Government or anybody who came along and made an offer for the property, and would stand a chance of sacrificing everything that had been put into the plant. I do not believe under those conditions that we could find anybody willing to invest a dollar in a project of this kind. Unless there is some chance of getting the money back at the end of 50 years or getting a continuation of the lease on reasonable terms or getting a license from year to year, I do not believe anybody would ever think of engaging in an enterprise under the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

REPORT OF RECLASSIFICATION COMMISSION.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his motion for a little while in order that I may bring to the attention of the Senate a resolution which I should like to have passed relating to the report of the Reclassification Commission?

Mr. NELSON. Very well. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMOOT. I will assure the Senator from Minnesota that the resolution referred to by the Senator from New Mexico can not be adopted to-night, but if it is desired to have it taken up, very well.

Mr. NELSON. Then I insist on my motion. The Senator from Utah says that it will be impossible to finish the consideration of the resolution to-night.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah desires to discuss the resolution at length, of course I am perfectly willing that he shall have an opportunity to do so, but it is important that the resolution should be considered by the Senate. If the Senator from Utah desires that the Senate shall close its labors to-day at the present time, I am perfectly willing that the consent just asked by the Senator from Minnesota may be granted, and that we may take up the matter to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know just how long I wish to discuss the resolution. I have about come to the conclusion that I will make my statement and then allow the Senate to vote upon the matter, but I do wish the Senate to understand what it means and what is going to follow from the passage of the resolution and from previous legislation which has been enacted upon this subject. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that so far as I am personally concerned I could not get through to-night with what I have to say on the resolution.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then will the Senator consent that to-morrow the bill now before the Senate may be temporarily laid aside and the resolution to which I have referred be taken up for consideration?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senate ought to adjourn to-night and allow morning business to be taken up to-morrow, and during the morning hour I have no objection whatever to the resolution of the Senator from New Mexico being brought up.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I presume that will be the most acceptable course, and I shall not press the matter further at this time, but will ask at the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow morning that the resolution be taken up.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. NELSON. I renew my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 6, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, January 5, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Great Spirit, Father of all good, through whose eternal energy the wheels of time sweep ever onward, to what whitherward we know not, but we aspire, and hope, and pray!

The old is dead. The new is born, token of Thy living presence, promise of Thy loving care. The past is ours by inheritance and by personal experience. Help us, with well-poised minds, brave hearts, earnest endeavors, to meet the future as it unfolds itself day by day.

We have not wings—we can not soar—
But we have feet to scale and climb
By slow degrees—by more and more—
The cloudy summits of our time.

Nor deem the irrevocable past
As wholly wasted—wholly vain—
If, rising on its wrecks, at last,
To something nobler we attain.

The past is replete with mortality. The hand of death has touched this body and deprived it of a great and good man—a servant of his State and Nation—leaving a worthy and enviable record behind him. We mourn his loss and would copy his virtues. Bless those who knew and loved him, and let Thy loving arms be around the stricken wife, to guide her on her way toward that reunion where love shall claim its own, through Him who died that we might know the way, and the truth, and the life. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, December 20, 1919, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I present the Hon. CLYDE B. HOEY, a Member elect from the ninth North Carolina district, and ask that he may take the oath.

Mr. HOEY appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

RATIFICATION OF THE SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the governor of the State of Colorado, announcing the ratification by the legislature of that State of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3327. An act granting certain rights of way and exchanges of the same across the Fort Douglas Military Reservation in the State of Utah.

RESIGNATIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 20, 1919.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to inform you that I have this day transmitted to the governor of Pennsylvania my resignation as a Representative in the Congress of the United States from the third district of Pennsylvania, effective as of January 4, 1920.

Very truly, yours,

J. HAMPTON MOORE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 23, 1919.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg leave to inform you that I have this day transmitted to the governor of the State of New York my resignation as a Representative in the Congress of the United States from the fourteenth district of New York, to take effect at the close of the day of the 31st of December, 1919.

F. H. LAGUARDIA.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE] is entitled to the floor for 15 minutes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE DECLARATION BY THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OF MAINE OF THE ADOPTION OF THE STATE'S CONSTITUTION.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, we read that "no man liveth unto himself." It may with equal truth be asserted that no historical fact can be isolated, can be separated from its causes, or seen apart from its effects. Voltaire expressed this thought when he wrote "Such was the complication of political interests that a cannon shot fired in America could give the signal that set Europe in a blaze." The Seven Years' War, a contributing cause of which was the rivalries of nations in the forests of America, humbled France, gave to England her commanding position in the world's affairs, and to the Colonies the lesson of the value of concerted effort, of unity, which developed into the aspiration for nationality.

These general truths justify us in interrupting our legislative work and in noting here the anniversary of an event of direct interest to the people of two of our States, an event which precipitated the first of those compromises by which the statesmen of the middle years of the last century sought to avoid the inevitable, the irrepressible conflict between the States. One hundred years ago to-day the constitutional convention of Maine, then sitting at Portland, a draft of a proposed constitution having previously been submitted to the voters of the district, canvassed the returns and declared the adoption of the instrument as the State's constitution. This action marked the formal separation of Maine from Massachusetts, and the prompt request for the admission of the new State into the Union furnished the opportunity for the temporary adjustment of the troublesome questions involved in the demands of Missouri for statehood through the adoption of the so-called Missouri compromise.

The student now appreciates that this compromise settled no disputed political or governmental question. It postponed briefly to other times and other occasions the further discussion of the slavery question. The bill for the admission of Missouri as a State came before the House in the winter of 1819. Missouri had been a part of the Louisiana Purchase; she then had 56,000 freemen and 10,000 slaves, and but for the slave question she would have secured immediate admission. Tallmadge, of New York, offered an amendment to the bill for admission providing that all children born in the State after its admission should be free on reaching the age of 25 years and that the further introduction of slavery should be prohibited. The debate upon this amendment in this session and on the resumption of consideration of the question in January, 1820, by the Senate excited the greatest public attention and brought forth a series of speeches never surpassed in eloquence. The oration of William Pinkney was said by Benton to be a "magnificent exhibition, the most gorgeous speech ever delivered in the Senate and the most applauded," and Clay describes it as "a display of astonishing eloquence." Upon the application of Maine for admission, the Tallmadge amendment was forgotten. The Thomas proviso prohibiting slavery in that part of the Louisiana Purchase north of latitude 36° 30′, except in Missouri, was introduced. It was understood that Missouri and Maine should be admitted under this compromise. Maine came in at once, but provisions incorporated in the Missouri constitution resulted in further delay on the part of the House in carrying out the agreed compromise, and it was not until August, 1821, more than a year after Maine's admission, that Missouri became a State. Maine's application for admission contributed to the spirit of compromise with respect to Missouri. It furnished the opportunity for mutual concessions, and even at that day we faced the alternative of concession and compromise or the breach of harmonious relations between the sections. Jefferson wrote, "This momentous question, like a fire bell in the night, awakened and filled me with terror; I considered it the knell of the Union." And Benton said, "Compromise views prevailed and enabled the Union to be saved."

That the compromise was a failure in that it endured neither in terms nor in purpose detracts little from its present-day interest. On the contrary, these results may be said to add to its significance through the emphasis they give to the truth that nothing is settled until it is settled right. This tremendous political controversy thus sought to be adjusted gave to the birth of Maine importance to the sister State of Missouri and to the people of the whole Nation.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to assign the preponderant influence creating the spirit and the desire for separation in the people of the district of Maine. The agitation for the change had well-defined form for nearly 40 years before the consummation of the event. Maine suffered during the early years of the movement from no definite grievances attributable to either the positive act of Massachusetts or the failures of duty of the Commonwealth. There is general agreement that, on the whole, Massachusetts was kindly in her attitude toward the district and governed Maine wisely and well.

There were political and religious differences between the people of the two sections of the State, but they existed within other States in which division was never urged. They were utilized to fan the desire for separation, but they were not the causes for the movement. It had its origin in the physical separation of Maine from Massachusetts by the interposition of New Hampshire; in the restlessness of a frontier people; and in those inconveniences and hardships necessarily incident to the life of those times in localities far removed from the news, the attractions and the comforts of the larger centers of population. But in the latter years of the movement more specific reasons for the desire for separate statehood can be assigned.

Maine was a frontier, a borderland. Her territory was long in dispute. Her coast attracted the earliest voyagers. In 1524 Verrazano visited our waters. Gosnold sailed along our coast in 1602, and on this same voyage landed at and named Cape Cod. Sieur de Mont received a charter from Henry IV in 1603 of all the region between 40° and 46° north, under the name of Acadia. In the following year he built a fort at the mouth of the St. Croix River. George Weymouth came in 1605. In 1606 the Plymouth Co. received a grant of the southwest coast, and in 1607 a colony of 120 established itself at the mouth of the Kennebec River. In 1609 French Jesuits established a mission on the island of Mount Desert. The Council for New England received in 1620 a grant of the country from the fortieth degree to the forty-eighth degree north, between the two seas. In 1622 Ferdinand Gorges and John Mason took by grant from this council, which was the successor to the Plymouth Co., title to the territory between the Merrimac and Kennebec Rivers for 60 miles inland under the name of the Province of Maine. Later, in 1629, they divided their possessions, Gorges taking the portion between the Piscataqua River and the Kennebec. On the surrender of the charter of the Council for New England, Gorges retained the portion previously granted to him, and the region between the Kennebec and the St. Croix and north to the St. Lawrence, although claimed by the French as part of Acadia, was conveyed in 1664 to the Duke of York, afterwards James II of England.

Massachusetts Puritans were as liberal in construing the terms of their Massachusetts charter as they were narrow in other respects. The northern boundary of the Massachusetts grant fixed by the Massachusetts charter at a point 3 miles north of the Merrimac was interpreted by Massachusetts to mean a line run east and west from a point 3 miles north of the source of the Merrimac. This was tantamount to a claim to most of Maine. In time Massachusetts, by a process which must be justified as benevolent assimilation, if it is to be justified at all, extended her authority to the Penobscot River. A descendant of the original Gorges of the grant of 1622 contested the claim of Massachusetts, and the King and Parliament decided in his favor and against the Commonwealth. Massachusetts met this situation by purchasing the Gorges claim, and she then held as proprietor until 1691, when by a new charter Maine was included in Massachusetts, and the boundary was extended to the St. Croix River. Thus was the rule of primogenature disregarded.

The relations between the Province and the State nevertheless were generally friendly. Bitterness never entered into the arguments and the efforts for and against division. Through all the years of discussion temper was rarely displayed on either side. The soil of Maine was a battle ground throughout the French and Indian wars; Maine men led at the capture of Port Royal and of Louisburg; her towns were burned and her territory occupied by the British during the Revolution and during the War of 1812; and there was an undoubted feeling by her people that she suffered from neglect on the part of Massachusetts, but the alleged failure to defend her seems to have occasioned regret rather than resentment.

In 1785–1787 conventions were held at Portland to consider the matter of separation, but the efforts made little headway. At the convention of 1785 there were but 33 in attendance. It appointed a committee to send a letter requesting delegates to meet in convention in January, 1786. This 1786 convention drew up a statement of grievances. They were nine in number, of the most general character, and they might with equal appropriateness have been framed by the people of the "extreme western" part of Massachusetts as by those of Maine.

The convention provided for the calling of another convention, which, when it met, approved the previous statement of grievances and reported that there were others which demanded consideration, but that they could not undertake to enumerate "the multiplicity of them." It declared the remedy to be separation, and requested that a vote be taken by the people on the question. It then adjourned until January, 1787. The vote was taken as provided, but only 970 voters were sufficiently disturbed by the "multiplicity of grievances" to express themselves at all, and separation was beaten 2 to 1. In 1792 another vote was had and separation was again beaten. A like result followed in 1797. In 1807 a large majority was cast against the division sought.

The War of 1812 gave to the friends of separation an opportunity. Maine suffered sadly during the three years of conflict. Her shipping was destroyed. Eastport, Castine, Hampden, Bangor, and Machias were in British hands. The Hartford convention and the attitude of Massachusetts, as understood by the people of Maine, was not approved, and conventions of towns and of citizens in various parts of the Province adopted resolutions declaring it expedient for Maine to be a part of Massachusetts only so long as Massachusetts gave support to the Union. In the years 1814 and 1815 failure to provide for an expression of views on separation strengthened the cause. In 1816 the Massachusetts Legislature passed an act providing for a vote, and in May of that year, for the first time after more than 30 years of controversy, a majority was found to favor the change.

This vote was somewhat of a shock to Massachusetts, and a committee of the Senate reported that it did not give a clear expression of the desires of the people of the district. Another bill was passed providing for a new vote, with a proviso—

That if a majority of 5 to 4 at least of the votes returned are in favor of the district's becoming an independent State, then, and not otherwise, said convention shall proceed to form a constitution as provided in this act.

This act stirred Maine, and for the first time the debate took an acrimonious turn. The vote when taken showed 11,969 yeas and 10,347 nays, or a trifle more than 4 to 5.

In 1819 another vote bill was passed providing that should there be a majority of 1,500 in favor of separation the people should be deemed to have assented to it. The voters assembled on the fourth Monday of July, 1819, and cast 17,091 votes for and 7,132 against separation.

The old grievances of 1786, although somewhat indefinite, still existed, but other considerations had assumed a new importance and greatly affected the result. The people chafed under the alleged failure of Massachusetts to adequately defend her in the War of 1812; there was a growing feeling that Massachusetts was guilty of partiality in matters of education; political considerations influenced the voters; and perhaps as potent as any influence in changing sentiment was a modification in the coastwise laws, as a result of which Maine vessels would not be required to enter and clear from Massachusetts ports in the event Maine became a separate State.

Following the ascertainment by the governor and Council of Massachusetts of the result of this vote, Gov. Brooks, of Massachusetts, issued his proclamation providing for the calling of a convention for the purpose of framing a State constitution.

The convention met at Portland in October, 1819. It was presided over by William King, our first governor. A draft of a constitution was framed, was agreed to by the convention, was subscribed by the president and secretary and by all the delegates but 31, and was then submitted to the people of the State. The convention thereupon adjourned to meet on the first Wednesday in January, 1820. On January 5, 1820, the vote of the inhabitants was examined and declared.

The act of separation had provided that all proceedings under it would be void unless Maine was admitted into the Union prior to March 15, 1820. Because of delay by Congress in acting upon the application of Maine, Massachusetts passed another act providing for an extension of time and for a provisional government for Maine. Congress, however, acted seasonably, and the act for admission was formally approved March 3, 1820. Maine thus became the tenth legislative State and the twenty-third State in the Union.

Through 100 years the two States have gone their way, separate in political organization but united by many bonds of interest and sympathy. With like climate, like soil, like physical characteristics, and like natural advantages and disadvantages, their industrial and commercial development has been along similar lines. The early political differences long ago disappeared and for nearly three-quarters of a century the people of the two States have viewed governmental and public questions in much the same way. The Maine constitution, our statutes, and the decisions of our courts bear striking resemblance to those of the more populous State. Our people are like those of Massachusetts in blood, in thought, and in purpose. It has been said that 300 years ago on the shores of Massachusetts Bay there was a wedding; that the contracting parties were the church and the common school; the welcomed guests, the Puritan fathers and mothers; the unbidden witnesses, the savages lurking in the forest about; that the canopy overhead was the sky studded with God's stars; the music, the surge of old ocean and the song of the night birds; and that from this wedding there came a child, New England civilization, a civilization reared upon the virtues of industry, of thrift, of sobriety, of desire for education, of love of country, and of respect for the divine law. [Applause.] Influenced by these teachings, what a mighty force have the sons and the daughters of Massachusetts and of Maine exerted throughout the Nation! What a story could be told of material accomplishment, of magnificent achievement in science, in literature, in law, and in the problems of government! What an ennobling and uplifting power the children of these sister States have been wheresoever they have gone! [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is entitled to the floor for 15 minutes.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, as a native of Maine, representing a Massachusetts district, it may not be amiss for me to respond with felicitations from the mother State. Such Massachusetts is called, but Maine might almost assert that she is an older sister rather than a daughter. This year and the next, with a great variety of celebrations, we shall commemorate that glorious band of pilgrims who braved the perils of the trackless sea in order that in a new land they might be free to worship God according to the dictates of conscience. They will doubtless be honored as the founders of New England; yet when they set foot on Plymouth Rock, already there were not a few Englishmen dwelling on the coast between Casco and Penobscot Bay. Samoset, the Indian sachem, was able to welcome the newcomers at Plymouth in their own tongue, because he had learned something of their language from the humble, nameless fishermen to the eastward. At the end of that terrible second winter, when the Plymouth colonists came so near starvation, in May of 1622, it was to the fishing vessels about Monhegan that the Plymouth colonists sent Winslow for help. He says the crews gave freely of the food they could spare, "provoking one another to the utmost of their abilities." Thus at the very outset the men of Maine began that record of hospitality for which they have ever since been famous.

The colonists of Maine preceded those of Plymouth by at least a dozen years and perhaps had built their first rude huts before Jamestown was founded in Virginia. If it be asked why they have received no glory as pioneers, the answer must be that they were a simple folk, coming here to get a livelihood, bringing with them no such strength of character and no such moral purpose as enabled the Puritans to make their indelible impress on the institutions of America and no such high spirit and aristocratic tradition as made the founders of Virginia leaders in the southern part of what became the United States. It was to be the lot of Maine that not only her first settlers but also those who for 200 years attacked her pine forests and wrestled with her stony hillsides should be plain people of the sort that make up the great mass of mankind.

After the Revolutionary War settlers emigrated to Maine in great numbers. Naturally they had little of worldly estate. For the most part they carried with them nothing but a few homely utensils and were accompanied or soon surrounded by large flocks of hungry children. The clearing of their farms left them no leisure. All the conditions of their existence were different from those of the older part of the State, where in the course of a century and a half comfort had become well-nigh universal and there was opportunity to cultivate the finer aspects of life. Socially, then, the people of the district of Maine were out of sympathy with those of Boston and thereabouts. This was at once reflected in the politics of the time. The anti-Federalist movement, soon to be known as Republican, found its supporters generally among the poorer people. Their temper appears from the defeat of Gen. Knox in 1804 by Joshua Adams, a blacksmith, the objection to Knox being that he owned too much land. It was said that "a great landholder is a kind of natural aristocrat."

On the other hand, the Federalists of old Massachusetts, with judgment warped by a bitterness of partisanship that has rarely, if ever, since been equaled, saw nothing good in the Republican pioneers of the eastern district. A Boston paper in 1806 asked, "Shall the squatters of Maine impose a governor on Massachusetts?" A Fourth of July toast in Boston in the same year was, "Old Massachusetts—may it soon be purified from the dross of Maine and so become the brightest link in the golden chain of our Union." Maine in retort bemoaned "dependence on a distant territory, whose capital seems devoted to corruption, degradation, and ruin."

With the revolt against political, social, and intellectual leadership of every sort that followed the War for Independence and was heartened by the triumphs of popular power in the French Revolution came a revolt against the accustomed spiritual leadership. This was the cause of the rapid growth of the minor dissenting sects. In Maine the Methodists and the Baptists made rapid headway. The tolerant legislation enacted by the General Court in the brief intervals when the Republicans were in power added to the belief of the masses that the Republicans were the friends of churches struggling against the Congregational control.

With what has been known as the era of good feeling under President Monroe, the sharp lines between the Federal and Republican parties were blunted, and the last few years of the agitation were not so strongly marked by partisanship. At the end the separation came with little ill will.

The long conflict saw one notable step in political development. In its course the people of the district of Maine voted six times on whether they would or would not be set off. Massachusetts precedent had paved the way for this, notably by the submission of the Massachusetts constitution to the people. In the Maine instance, however, appears perhaps the first case of definitely basing the effect of legislative action on the result of a referendum. Through many years the right of a legislature thus to divest itself of any of its responsibility was to be stoutly contested in the courts, and not until our own time was it to be firmly established.

Other landmarks of progress are to be found in the records of the convention that drew up the constitution for the new State. The first earnest discussion came on the religious question. A committee of "the Catholics of Maine" petitioned for equal rights, saying that under the constitution of Massachusetts they were excluded from an equal participation in the benefits of government. That constitution still required all the inhabitants to be taxed "for the support and maintenance of public Protestant teachers of piety, religion, and morality." The people of Maine would have none of this, and the convention even went so far as to refuse by a great majority to copy the declaration of the Massachusetts Bill of Rights, to the effect that it is the duty of all men in society publicly and at stated seasons to worship the Supreme Being. They said that to prescribe the duty would be to authorize the legislature to enforce it. Also they refused to ordain the Sabbath as a day of worship. Massachusetts had required an oath of office renouncing allegiance to any foreign prelate dispensing any power, ecclesiastical or spiritual. Maine, on the contrary, specified that no religious tests whatever should be required for office.

The temper of Maine in these things may be further judged from what happened when Judge Cony suggested to the convention that it would be proper to observe the usual practices and religious observances at the day of election, and therefore moved that an hour be assigned to elect a clergyman to preach the election sermon in the following May. Gen. Wingate asked if they were to have all the parade and pageantry of the government of Massachusetts. He hoped they would be more republican. Judge Thacher retorted that he did not know preaching a sermon was antirepublican. Other States had always practiced it, and it was a good and wholesome custom. Nevertheless the suggestion fell flat, not even a vote being taken.

The convention also went far in advance of the parent State by omitting entirely any property qualifications for suffrage. Such a qualification was not even urged. Also, it refused to disqualify negroes. John Holmes, the guiding spirit of the convention, a Member of Congress, and to become a United States Senator, declared: "I know of no difference between the rights of the negro and the white man—God Almighty has made none."

Only a few months later we find this same John Holmes taking quite other ground on the floor of the House of Representatives at Washington, where the struggle of Maine for independence had been transferred, to become a part of one of the most memorable contests in our national history and to end in the famous Missouri compromise.

It was just 100 years ago last Tuesday when the bill for the admission of Maine came up here for debate. During the next eight weeks or more little else was heard in the two Chambers except discussion of the great question whether Missouri should be admitted with or without slavery. It became so tedious that they called it "the misery debate." There was no objection to the admission of Maine, but the partisans of slavery grasped at their chance to make its admission conditional upon the admission of Missouri without restriction. Henry Clay, Speaker of the House, hinted at this when, on the opening day of the debate, he spoke long and earnestly on the slavery side. He said that the admission of Kentucky had been delayed until Vermont was ready, a novel bit of history that was stoutly denied by the friends of Maine. However, it is undoubtedly true that the South had by this time come to rely upon a program by which the admission of every free State should be offset by the admission of a slave State. There were 11 free and 11 slave States, and the South thought it of paramount importance that the balance should not be disturbed. So when the Maine bill reached the Senate it was promptly referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to amend by adding what was virtually the Missouri bill, with no restriction in the matter of slavery.

One hundred years ago to-morrow the report came into the Senate with the amendment as directed. There it was fought bitterly, stubbornly. The greatest speeches on the southern side were by William Pinkney, of Maryland, a polished orator of high renown. He made one speech of five hours, covering parts of two days, and another of three hours. The champions of the other side against him were Harrison Gray Otis, of Massachusetts, and Rufus King, who, though now a Senator from New York, was born in the district of Maine. Of the many noteworthy achievements of King's life few were more valuable than his defense of freedom against the onslaughts of William Pinkney.

The supporters of slavery controlled the Senate and sent the bill back to the House with Maine and Missouri tied together. There the unholy marriage met with short shrift, for the House quickly refused to agree and resumed its discussion of its own Missouri bill, which it passed on the 1st day of March, with prohibition of slavery in the new State.

Meanwhile the Senate had worked out the compromise idea. Missouri was to be admitted without restriction, but slavery was to be prohibited in other territory of the United States north of the parallel of 36 degrees and 30 minutes. At first the House would not listen to this, but it was driven into the mood of concession partly by the fact that the Massachusetts statute for setting off Maine had named March 4 as the date before which the thing should be accomplished. The approach of that day doubtless led some of the friends of Maine to be more conciliatory. John Holmes, whom we saw in the Maine convention declaring that God Almighty had made no difference between the rights of the negro and the white man, and that he knew of none, was now willing to let a difference be made in a State beyond the Mississippi River, where perhaps he thought there was no God. We find him one of the 18 northerners who were ridiculed by John Randolph as "dough faces," a name by which northern men with southern principles were thereafter stigmatized as long as slavery lasted. The votes of these 18 men put the compromise through the House. The margin was only 3, so that if Holmes and his colleague from the district of Maine, Hill, had stood by what were always Maine convictions, the Missouri compromise of 1820 might have been thwarted.

It was a dangerous hour. To John Quincy Adams the episode appeared a "mere preamble, a title-page to a great tragic volume." Adams was right. Thank God the volume has been closed.

Overshadowed by the tremendous significance of the issue was one feature of the contest that has particular interest for us of Congress to-day. On this occasion, for the first time, the "rider" was firmly seated in the saddle. Riders had not been unknown in colonial days, and their propriety had been thrashed out in Parliament long before. The affixing of the Missouri bill to the Maine bill by way of amendment was, however, an abuse of the amending power by another branch, made so conspicuous by the circumstances of the struggle that it is fair to say the rider here became of age even if its birth must be set at an earlier date. It is an interesting coincidence that one of the modifications of the Massachusetts constitution made by the Maine convention forbade the Senate to add to a bill for raising a revenue any new matter under color of an amendment. All told there are now but half a dozen States without constitutional provisions that directly or indirectly to some degree hamper riders. It will be fortunate, indeed, if we show ourselves willing to profit by their example and if we mark the centennial of the rider in Congress by its utter destruction.

Throughout the hundred years that Maine has enjoyed statehood Massachusetts has cherished for her the warmest affection. Although at the time of the separation there was much regret in the Old Bay State, the division was looked upon as natural and inevitable. So the people for whom I am now venturing to speak have entertained only the kindliest feelings for their brothers down east. They have rejoiced at all that Maine has done for the Union. I may not take the time to enumerate her contributions, but must at any rate recognize what the country owes to her in the way of virility, for Maine's chief gift has been the lavish gift of men. Far the greater number of my listeners will be able to recall natives of Maine who have helped them build up their communities. For a single instance of what Maine has done let me remind you that at one time in Congress were three brothers, all born in the town of Livermore, in Maine, Washburn by name, one of them representing the district where he was born, another coming from Wisconsin, and another from Illinois. Of the same family still another afterwards came here from Minnesota. Of men who remained in the State of their nativity and who rendered great service to the Nation let me recall Hannibal Hamlin, William P. Frye, and Nelson Dingley [applause], and of men who passed the best part of their lives in Maine, William Pitt Fessenden and James G. Blaine. [Applause.] I may no more than mention other gifts of Maine to the world—of writers, Longfellow and Hawthorne; of heroes, Howard and Chamberlain; of singers, Carey and Nordica; of men who have made life happier by their wit, Artemus Ward and Bill Nye.

Those of us who feel we have the right to be proud of our native State for what she has done, after all rejoice the most in what she is. During half the year no corner of the land gives more delight, and if during much of the other half she sleeps under a blanket of snow and ice it is but to gain fresh pleasures with which to welcome us at the coming of each spring. [Applause.]

Keep who will the city's alleys,
Take the smooth-shorn plain,
Give to us the cedar valleys,
Rocks, and hills of Maine.
In our northland, wild and woody,
Let us still have part—
Rugged nurse and mother sturdy,
Hold us to thy heart.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House the gentleman from Ohio is entitled to 20 minutes.

IRELAND AND HER STRUGGLE FOR INDEPENDENCE.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there is an appealing spirit in the air, voiced by all the potentials of democracy, that the commanding genius of our Republic should never be cramped to shore lines; that our mission as a Nation should be to carry the benign doctrine of universal brotherhood and equality to all struggling peoples across the Atlantic. We were the controlling factor in winning the greatest war of all the centuries, inspired solely by the exalting battle cry, to "make the world safe for democracy." It may be too late to achieve results on the Irish question, but it is never too late to express our condolence and sympathy. Our distinguished colleague, WILLIAM E. MASON, of Illinois, formerly United States Senator, has introduced a resolution recognizing the Irish republic as a de facto government. This resolution, if adopted by the House, need not necessarily disturb our friendly relations with the Empire of Great Britain, but would doubtless inspire Premier Lloyd-George to give the largest measure of home rule to Ireland. As an American citizen, with no single drop of Irish blood in my veins, I can make a plea for Ireland without being accused of being pro-Irish. If being born of English and Scotch ancestry is a test of Americanism, then I can pass the acid test, for my ancestors came over in 1632, not in the Mayflower, because the boat was full, but on the next boat.

Ireland has been struggling for autonomy and independence for over 700 years. Ireland is a continental island surrounded on all sides by seas and oceans, and is separated from England by the wide Irish Sea. Hence there can be no dispute over boundaries. In a wide war to make the world safe for democracy, Ireland should have serious consideration. The Irish are a homogeneous people, and no other people in either Europe or Asia or the western continent has ever made such a constant and enduring struggle for autonomy and independence as the Irish race. They hold the undisputed world record for long-continued constancy and courage. Let us not forget that Irish patriots bore an important part in all the struggles of the thirteen American Colonies for independence. Irish blood was shed on every battle field of the Seven Years' War. The first bold utterance, "Give me liberty or give me death," was the Irish voice of Patrick Henry, the most inspiring, all-pervading, and potent of all patriot voices of the epoch.

The first general officer killed in the War of the Revolution was Maj. Gen. Richard Montgomery, born in Donegal, Ireland. The first commander of the American Navy was John Barry, born in County Wexford, Ireland. Let us not forget that it was Maurice O'Brien, born in Cork, Ireland, whose five sons, hearing of the Battle of Lexington, struck the first blow on water for independence—May 11, 1775—by capturing a British armed schooner. John Hancock, first signer of the Declaration of Independence and twice President of the Continental Congress, was the descendant of an Irish emigrant from Ulster. He not only pledged his life and his fortune to the independence of the Colonies, but he gave his fortune to the cause, some $400,000. Charles Thompson, Secretary of the Continental Congress, who made the first copy of the Declaration of Independence, was born in County Derry, Ireland. John Nixon, whose father was born in County Wexford, Ireland, first read the Declaration in public from the steps of the Statehouse in Philadelphia, July 8, 1776.

Among the signers of the Declaration of Independence, 10 were full-bred Irishmen—John Hart, New Jersey, whose father and mother came from Ireland; James Smith, of Pennsylvania, born in Ireland; George Taylor, of Pennsylvania, born in Ireland; George Reed, of Delaware, son of John Reed, was born in Dublin; Thomas McKean, of Delaware, whose father and mother were born in Ireland; Charles Carroll, grandson of Charles Carroll, of Ireland, who came to America in 1689; Edward Rutledge, of South Carolina, grandson of Thomas Lynch, native of Galway, Ireland; Robert Treat Paine, son of Robert O'Neill, born in Ireland, who changed his name to Paine when he emigrated to the American Colonies.

And, lest we forget, it is quite interesting to know that there were 48 full-bred Irishmen in Col. George Washington's regiment of Virginia militia in 1754. Nearly all afterwards served in the Continental Army of the American Revolution. It was Gen. Sullivan's brigade of Irishmen who manned the guns on Dorchester Heights, Boston, that day, ever memorable in heroic history—March 17, 1776—when the British Army, under Lord Howe, evacuated Boston. And when Lord Howe's army sailed past Governors Island an Irish shout went up from Irish throats on Dorchester Heights that made that day one of the most memorable in our history. Gen. Sullivan was the son of Owen Sullivan, born in Limerick, Ireland. Gen. Washington made "St. Patrick" the countersign of the whole Continental Army that night.

Among the first troops sent from France to aid the colonists was a brigade of five full regiments, all Irishmen. In Prof. Fisher's history of the Revolution, he says: "Over 20,000 Irishmen from first to last served the patriotic cause in the Continental Army."

Among the famous minute men of Lexington, Mass., I have the names of 138 Irishmen. When Col. Tilghman, of Maryland, made that far, perilous ride on horseback from Yorktown to Philadelphia, carrying the glorious tidings that Lord Cornwallis and his whole army had surrendered, he rode first to the house of Thomas McKean, the Irish president of the Continental Congress. The private secretary, aid-de-camp, of Gen. Washington during the seven years war was Gen. Reed, a full-bred Irishman. Gen. Reed was not only a gallant soldier but a wise counselor. He was also a member of the Continental Congress. The most signal victory in the South, except Yorktown, was the Battle of Cowpens, S. C., won by Gen. Dan Morgan, with one-third of his command Irish soldiers. The historian, Dr. J. C. O'Connell, in his interesting recital of this signal victory, classes Gen. Morgan as Irish. There is some doubt about this. Morgan is a Welsh name. Gen. Morgan's pedigree has never been established. His father was probably Welsh-Irish and his mother of Irish lineage. In the dreary times of the Revolution no official pedigree of war heroes was ever tabulated. Patriots were estimated by achievement and not by blood lines. All agree, however, that Gen. Dan Morgan, the hero of Cowpens, fought and won the Battle of Cowpens like an Irishman. Gen. Henry Knox, a valued officer of Gen. Washington's Continental Army, was the son of Borton Knox, born in Ireland. Gen. Andrew Lewis, of Donegal, Ireland, was another constant and enduring soldier. Capt. James McHenry, who served on the staff of Gen. Washington and was Secretary of War under President Washington in 1796, was a native of Ireland. Another promising Irish soldier was Gen. William Irving, born in Cork. There are three Cork towns in the United States—in Georgia, Kentucky, and West Virginia—but Gen. Irving was born in Cork, Ireland. Gen. James Clinton, who fought gallantly with Gen. Montgomery before the walls of Quebec, was born in County Longford, Ireland. Brig. Gen. Stephen Moylan, chief of cavalry of the Continental Army, a brave and constant soldier, was born in Cork, Ireland.

When the Continental Army of Gen. Washington was in dire distress, and Congress was unable to afford relief, some 23 patriotic men of Philadelphia put into operation the Bank of Pennsylvania and supplied the suffering army with provisions and clothing. Robert Morris headed the list with a subscription of $50,000. Blair McClenehan, a native of Ireland, subscribed an equal amount, and 21 Irishmen, members of the Sons of St. Patrick, subscribed $350,000 more. All born in Ireland except John Nixon, whose father came from County Rexford, Ireland.

As a patriotic reminder, let me call your attention to an address made in 1828 by George Washington Parke Custis, grandson of Martha Washington. I quote a vital paragraph:

> Ireland, whose generous sons alike in the day of our gloom and our glory shared in our misfortunes and joined in our success, who, with undaunted courage, breasted the storm with aspirations deep and fervent for our cause. Up to the coming of the French Army, Ireland had furnished 100 soldiers to 1 of any other foreign nation.

George Bancroft and other historians tell us that Philadelphia was first settled by Quakers. The immigration record of Philadelphia for the year ending December, 1729, is as follows: English and Welsh, 267; Scotch, 43; German, 243; Irish, 5,655. [Applause.] How often historians are mistaken. Thomas Holme, surveyor general for William Penn, who made the first plat of Philadelphia, was an Irishman born in Waterford, Ireland. Washington Irving, in his history of the War of the Revolution, states that a large majority of the landowners along the Hudson River were Tories during the war. There is not an Irish name in the entire list. The Patricks and Michaels were all in the patriot army.

IRISH BLOOD IN FOUR PRESIDENTS.

I have not forgotten that the father of Gen. Andrew Jackson was Irish born and bred. Gen. Jackson was the most remarkable man of his time; the seventh President of the United States, and the only President, with the exception of Gen. Grant, who served 8 years during the past 85 years. He won the most remarkable victory in the Battle of New Orleans, all circumstances considered, ever won on this continent. While history has said its last word on Andrew Jackson, every 8th of January evokes more eloquent and fervent voices in his honor.

James K. Polk, eleventh President of the United States, born in Mecklenburg County, N. C., was the nephew of Col. Thomas Polk, who was born in Ireland. This is the Col. Thomas Polk who called that remarkable convention of patriots May 19, 1775, which passed the famous Mecklenburg resolution declaring for independence and severing all relations with Great Britain. This bold defy to tyrants was over a year before the Declaration of Independence.

James Buchanan, fifteenth President of the United States, Secretary of State, minister to England, and United States Senator, was the son of a poor Irish emigrant.

Chester Allan Arthur, twenty-first President of the United States, was the son of Rev. William Arthur, who was born in Ireland.

I have not forgotten Dolly Madison, the most gifted and popular woman who ever presided in the White House—a social queen and capable of advising a President in matters of state. She was the granddaughter of William Coles, born in County Wexford, Ireland, one of the early settlers of colonial Virginia.

The mother of Commodore Perry was born in Ireland. The Battle of Lake Erie, fought and won by Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry (28 years old), was the most signal victory ever won on fresh water; won with a force of green volunteers and pickups against a larger force of trained and seasoned veterans of the British Navy, commanded by the experienced naval officer, Capt. Barclay, who won distinction with Lord Nelson at Trafalgar. Commodore Perry's fleet carried 54 guns, while the British fleet carried 63 guns of longer range.

IRISH SOLDIERS AND PATRIOTS IN THE CIVIL WAR.

Maj. Gen. John A. Logan was the most distinguished volunteer soldier and general of the Union Army. His daring and dashing intrepidity saved our Army from defeat in the fierce Battle of Atlanta. He was a soldier in the Mexican War, and was a hero of many battles from 1861 to 1865, always at the front. He was the son of a full-blooded Irishman, Dr. John A. Logan, born in the Emerald Isle and a graduate of the University of Dublin.

The colonel who led the most desperate Cavalry charge of the great Civil War was an Irishman, Col. Keenan, of the Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry. At Chancellorsville, Va., he led a charge of 400 cavalrymen against the advance of Stonewall Jackson's army. This charge stunned the Confederate advance and in the confusion Stonewall Jackson, the greatest general of the Confederacy, next to Gen. Robert E. Lee, was killed.

Gen. Phil Kearny, another great Irish soldier, was the hero of four wars. He was desperately wounded at Cherubusco, Mexico, where he lost his left arm. Gen. Kearny died a hero's death in the desperate Battle of Chantilla, Va., where he rode the battle line with his sword between his teeth. Gen. Kearny fought with the French in the Crimean War, and on account of distinguished service in the signal Battle of Solferino was decorated with the Legion of Honor by Napoleon the Third, the first American soldier who ever received that decoration.

Maj. Gen. James Shields, born in County Tyrone, Ireland, had the most remarkable career of any civilian or soldier since the adoption of the Federal Constitution in 1787. He was made a major general for distinguished services in the Mexican War and complimented in general orders for gallant conduct in the Battle of Cerro Gordo, Mexico. He is the only man in the United States who ever represented three different States in the United States Senate—Illinois, Minnesota, and Missouri. He was also a distinguished soldier in the Civil War, and lost his left arm—shattered by a shell—in the first Battle of Winchester.

The last blow struck in the great Civil War which resulted in the surrender of Lee was by Gen. Phil Sheridan, a full-blooded Irishman, conceded to be the most dashing and successful Cavalry general of the Civil War. He was born in Ireland, of Irish parents, and came to the United States when a baby.

George McCook, who fled from Ireland in 1780, was the ancestor of the fighting McCooks, of Ohio, two of whom gave up their lives on the battle fields of the Republic—Gen. Daniel McCook, on Kenesaw Mountain, and Gen. Robert J. McCook, at Decherd, Tenn.

I remember that in the greatest battle of the Civil War—Gettysburg—the first Union officer to reach "Little Round Top" was Col. Patrick O'Rourk, who was killed at the head of his command.

It was Gen. Joseph B. Carr, the son of Irish parents, who successfully assumed command in the Battle of Chancellorsville after Gen. Berry was killed. He also played the hero's rôle at Gettysburg, where he had a horse shot under him riding the front line of battle. And the most courageous and dashing general of the Confederacy was Gen. Pat Cleburn, born in Cork, Ireland.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I thank the gentleman.

Col. Charles G. Halpine, of the Irish Brigade, Army of the Potomac, was another full-bred Irish soldier. This brigade lost more men killed in battle than any brigade of the Army. It was Col. Halpine who wrote that inspiring soldier's song, We Have Drunk from the Same Canteen, a song that was sung around every camp fire of our armies and is still ringing in mellow memories at every gathering of old comrades in reunion. Let me give you a couplet:

It was sometimes water and sometimes milk,
And sometimes applejack finer than silk,
But whatever the tipple had been,
We shared it together in bane or bliss,
And I warm to you now as I think of this—
We have drunk from the same canteen.

[Applause.]

Another commander of the Irish Brigade was Gen. Kelly, a full-bred Irishman, brave in battle, kindly and companionable when guns were stacked, singing with the boys in blue the alluring war songs around the bivouac fires.

All down the centuries we have records of Irish patriots who have enriched our heroic literature. The Bivouac of the Dead, couplets of which are carved in marble over the gates of all our national soldier cemeteries, was written by Theodore O'Hara, a political exile from Ireland. On Fame's Eternal Camping Ground Their Silent Tents Are Spread, by O'Hara, will be sung by all 100 per cent Americans as long as our flag shall wave over a free people. [Applause.]

Prof. Gilmore, of Peace Jubilee fame, was the world's greatest bandmaster. He was the author of that inspiring war song, When Johnny Comes Marching Home, one of the most rhythmic and cheerful patriotic melodies of the four years' war. Prof. Gilmore was born near Dublin, Ireland, on Christmas night, 1829. His full name was Patrick Sarsfield Gilmore; blood all Irish, performance and patriotism all American.

The most plaintive and inspiring Confederate war song of the Civil War was written by Father Ryan, of Mobile, Ala., The Conquered Banner. Father Ryan was a full-bred Irishman.

I have vivid and sacred memories of the six Irish officers in the regiment I was privileged to command in the Civil War. Two were killed in battle and three others severely wounded. Hence, this appeal of all Irishmen for autonomy and independence appeals to me as a soldier.

Of the 200 and more chaplains who went out from Ohio from 1861 to 1865, only one remains alive and alert, and that is Rev. Patrick O'Brien, of Toledo, Ohio, born in County Wexford, Ireland, still full of patriotic enthusiasm and a leader in all patriotic movements.

Ingratitude is one of the basest of human frailties. The appeal for free Ireland is not a far cry. If we as a Nation believe in our own professions, if the heroic traditions of 1776 have not been effaced, we must hearken to this appeal. We have already established a new and free Poland for the Poles. We have grateful memories of two great Polish soldiers, Kosciusko and Pulaski, who came to us in the stress and travail of the seven years' struggle for independence. Hence, every patriotic American citizen glories in this free and enlarged Poland. Let us glorify ourselves anew by a continental appeal for a free Ireland.

I am for free Ireland for the Irish, for free Poland for the Poles, for Armenia for the Armenians, for Syria for the Syrians, and for all peoples around the world who have shown by fidelity and courage and constancy that they are entitled under God's benign providence to live their own lives. I quote, with wholehearted approval, a paragraph from an eloquent and powerful oration by the Hon. Bourke Cochran:

We stand now in the sunlight, the stream of victory on our banner. Shall we cast under the feet of despotism, of century-old wrong, all that we supposed we had won in the victory that we have achieved? If that purpose is betrayed, woe to civilization, woe to the generations that are to follow us. Who can trust a promise if this one, to redeem which the noblest libation that the earth ever drank was poured out in unmeasured and unstinted volume, shall be abandoned? Let all the world know that when America speaks she speaks the voice of truth, she speaks the judgment of God, exercised to the freest and the noblest people to whom He could ever intrust the design that He means to carry out for the welfare of the world. [Applause.]

MINORITY VIEWS ON BILL TO ABOLISH HALF-AND-HALF PRINCIPLE.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that those members of the Committee on the District of Columbia who desire to do so may have three days in which to file minority views on the bill H. R. 7158, the bill to repeal the half-and-half principle.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that those members of the Committee on the District of Columbia who desire to do so may have three days within which to file minority views on the bill H. R. 7158. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GENERAL PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from consideration of the bill H. R. 9369, to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, to certain widows, former widows, dependent parents and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases, and pass the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from further consideration of the bill H. R. 9369, which the Clerk will report, and pass the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9369) to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, to certain widows, former widows, dependent parents and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases.

Be it enacted, etc., That every person who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, or who, having so served less than 90 days, was discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, and who is now in receipt of or entitled to receive under existing law a pension of less than $50 per month, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

SEC. 2. That every person who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, or who, having so served less than 90 days, was discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, and who is now or hereafter may become, by reason of age and physical disabilities, helpless or blind, or so nearly helpless or blind as to require the constant or regular aid and attendance of another person, shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $72 per month.

SEC. 3. That from and after the approval of this act all persons whose names are on the pension roll, and who, while in the service of the United States in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the Civil War, and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot or been totally disabled in the same, or shall have sustained a disability equivalent thereto, shall receive a pension at the rate of $60 per month; that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or been totally disabled in the same, or shall have sustained a disability equivalent thereto, shall receive a pension at the rate of $65 per month; that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost an arm at the shoulder joint or a leg at the hip joint, or so near the shoulder or hip joint, or where the same is in such condition as to prevent the use of an artificial limb, or shall have sustained a disability equivalent thereto, shall receive a pension at the rate of $72 per month; and that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost one hand and one foot, or been totally disabled in the same, or shall have sustained a disability equivalent thereto, shall receive a pension at the rate of $90 per month.

SEC. 4. That the widow of any person who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War for 90 days or more, and was honorably discharged from such service, or regardless of the length of service was discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, such widow having been married to such soldier, sailor, or marine prior to the 27th day of June, A. D. 1915, shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month. And this section shall apply to all former widows of persons who served for 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War and were honorably discharged from such service, or who, having so served for less than 90 days, were discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, such widow having remarried, either once or more than once after the death of the soldier, sailor, or marine, if it be shown that such subsequent or successive marriage has or have been dissolved, either by the death of the husband or husbands or by divorce without fault on the part of the wife; and any such former widow shall be entitled to and be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month; and any widow as mentioned in this section shall also be paid $6 per month for each child of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow having a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16 years: Provided, That in case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of such child, or during the period of such disability, and this proviso shall apply to all pensions heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted under this or any former statute: And provided further, That in case of any widow whose name has been dropped from the pension roll because of her remarriage, if the pension has been granted to an insane, idiotic, or otherwise helpless child, or to a child or children under the age of 16 years, she shall not be entitled to renewal of pension under this act until that pension to such child or children terminates, unless such child or children be a member or members of her family and cared for by her, and upon the renewal of pension to such widow payment of pension to such child or children shall cease.

SEC. 5. That all Army nurses of the Civil War, and all dependent parents of any officer or enlisted man who served in the Civil War whose names are now on the pension roll, or who are now entitled to pension under any existing law, shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

SEC. 6. That the pension or increase of pension herein provided for, as to all persons whose names are now on the pension roll, or who are now in receipt of a pension under existing law, shall commence at the rates herein provided, from the date of the approval of this act, or under section 2 hereof, when the requisite condition is shown to exist after the approval of this act; and as to persons whose names are not now on the pension roll, or who are not now in receipt of a pension under existing law, but who may be entitled to pension under the provisions of this act, such pensions shall commence from the date of filing application therefor in the Bureau of Pensions in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That as to any former widow as mentioned in section 4 hereof, who since the death of her soldier, sailor, or marine husband has remarried either once or more than once, and such subsequent or successive marriage has been dissolved, either by the death of the husband or husbands, or by divorce without fault on the part of the wife, and who filed her application for pension under the act of September 8, 1916, her pension shall commence from the date when her original application was filed under that act in the Bureau of Pensions, and shall be at the rate in that act provided, with increase at the rate or rates subsequently provided for the widows of Civil War soldiers, sailors, and marines, and by this act from the date or dates when any such subsequent act or acts took effect or may hereafter take effect, it being the intent and purpose to give to any such widow the same status as other widows of Civil War soldiers, sailors, and marines who have not remarried, and from the date of said act of September 8, 1916.

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act contained shall be held to affect or diminish the additional pension to those on the roll designated as "The Army and Navy Medal of Honor Roll," as provided in the act of April 27, 1906, but any increase herein provided for shall be in addition thereto; and no pension heretofore granted under any act, public or private, shall be reduced by anything contained in this act.

SEC. 8. That no claim agent or attorney or other person shall be recognized in the adjustment of claims under this act, except in claims for original pension, and in such cases no more than the sum of $10 shall be allowed for services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any such claim, which sum shall be payable only on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or shall wrongfully withhold from the pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of a pension allowed or due to such pensioner or claimant under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every offense, be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts 20 minutes.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct a misprint in the bill, in respect to a date. On page 6 of the bill, line 22, the figures "1906" should be "1916," and I ask unanimous consent that they be corrected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to amend the bill by correcting a date. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who speak on the bill may have leave to revise and extend their remarks, and that all other Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all Members who speak on the bill may revise and extend their remarks, and that all others may have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks on the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the gentleman will include in his request that the extensions shall consist of the Members' own remarks, and not telegrams and editorials, I shall not object.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts and include it in my request.

The SPEAKER. And that the remarks shall be the remarks of the Members themselves. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask further to correct the bill on page 4, line 23, by inserting the word "been" for the word "be."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to agree to an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 23, strike out the word "be," at the beginning of the line, and insert in lieu thereof the word "been."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There are on the pension rolls now, and there have been for years, thousands of nonresidents of the United States, many of them living in Germany and Austria. Has the gentleman's committee taken steps to cut those parasites off the pension rolls?

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to answer that question now. My time is too limited——

Mr. BLANTON. I think it ought to be answered.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. That may be a subject for another bill. I think I would be in favor of it myself.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. All of the pension laws of the United States require every soldier to be in active duty not less than 90 days, or to have incurred disability in the line of service. Has the gentleman's committee ever considered the question of giving to every soldier a pension, whether he served 90 days or less?

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. That matter is under consideration by the committee, but no report has been made in respect to it.

Mr. ROSE. I consider it decidedly unfair under our present laws, because any man who goes to war never knows whether he will return in 90 days, 9 months, or 9 years. I have always been opposed to the law as it stands. I wondered if the committee had ever considered that feature of the pension law with the view of placing all soldiers upon equal standing as to pension eligibility.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. That has been considered by the committee, but it has not been thought wise to pension those for service only who incurred no disability in the service and whose service was for less than 90 days.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield further. I have not the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in the very brief time allotted under the rule for the discussion of this measure I shall not attempt to make any extended remarks, but shall yield as much time as possible to other Members. Suffice it to say that the bill proposes a too long delayed measure of relief to the surviving veterans of the Civil War of more than half a century ago to whom we owe, as a Nation, a debt that can never be paid in full, and to the widows, still living, of those who have fought their last battle and have gone to their final reward. This Nation has always recognized, and always will recognize, the obligation it owes to those who have borne the battle and to their widows and their orphans; and while new obligations which will be generously met are imposed upon us by the recent World War, we can not and must not forget the debt we still owe to those who risked their lives and their all for the preservation of the Union. What a glorious heritage they have left to us and to all who are to come after us! They are now all old and are fast passing away, and in these times of stress and trial, of the abnormally high cost of all the comforts and necessaries of life, no class of our citizenship has suffered more than the old surviving veterans and their dependents. If every Member of this House could read the appeals that have come to me, and to the other members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, there would not be a vote against this bill. I hope there may not be. You may say the cost is great and we must economize. I admit both propositions; but does anyone deny the debt we owe to those of whom it was said at the time of the grand review, "The only national debt we can never pay is the debt we owe to our victorious Union soldiers, sailors, and marines"? I submit that this great, rich, and prosperous country is not so poor but what it can do justice to those who made it what it is. But what we do must be done quickly. They are all now beyond the allotted age of man, and are passing away by companies and regiments. From the report of the Commissioner of Pensions we learn the startling fact that in the past two years preceding the 30th day of June last, of the veterans and widows of veterans on the pension roll more than 130, on an average, passed away each 24 hours. For God's sake and humanity's sake, let us do now what we can to make the last days of the survivors as comfortable as possible, and so that none need suffer for the necessaries of life. A grateful people will not quibble at the cost, and in half a million homes there will be joy and thankfulness, more comfort, tears of gratitude, and thanks to Almighty God.

Mr. Speaker, I do not care to take up more time, but wish to yield as much as possible to others, as the time is limited. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I also yield the gentleman three minutes of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, ever since I have been in Congress I have been on the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It has been my privilege to vote in that committee upon bills we were about to present to the House and to help present them to the House, among which were a number of important bills for its consideration, which were to help the soldier of the Civil War or his dependents. While supporting each of those bills heartily, I have never felt that any of them did full justice to those gallant men who served this Nation for us in its greatest hour of peril, but it is with some special pride and pleasure this afternoon that I call your attention to the merits of the bill my committee presents to you for the relief of Civil War veterans and their helpless ones. I would here like to insert in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks, a copy of the bill:

A bill (H. R. 9369) to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, to certain widows, former widows, dependent parents and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases.

Be it enacted, etc., That every person who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, or who, having so served less than 90 days, was discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, and who is now in receipt of, or entitled to receive under existing law, a pension of less than $50 per month, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

SEC. 2. That every person who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, or who, having so served less than 90 days, was discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, and who is now, or hereafter may become, by reason of age and physical disabilities, helpless or blind, or so nearly helpless or blind as to require the constant or regular aid and attendance of another person, shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $72 per month.

SEC. 3. That from and after the approval of this act all persons whose names are on the pension roll, and who, while in the service of the United States in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the Civil War, and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot or been totally disabled in the same, or shall have sustained a disability equivalent thereto, shall receive a pension at the rate of $60 per month; that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or been totally disabled in the same, or shall have sustained a disability equivalent thereto, shall receive a pension at the rate of $65 per month; that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost an arm at the shoulder joint or a leg at the hip joint, or so near the shoulder or hip joint, or where the same is in such condition as to prevent the use of an artificial limb, or shall have sustained a disability equivalent thereto, shall receive a pension at the rate of $72 per month; and that all persons who, in such service and in like manner, shall have lost one hand and one foot, or been totally disabled in the same, or shall have sustained a disability equivalent thereto, shall receive a pension at the rate of $90 per month.

SEC. 4. That the widow of any person who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War for 90 days or more, and was honorably discharged from such service, or regardless of the length of service was discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, such widow having been married to such soldier, sailor, or marine prior to the 27th day of June, A. D. 1915, shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month. And this section shall apply to all former widows of persons who served for 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War and were honorably discharged from such service, or who, having so served for less than 90 days were discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in the line of duty, such widow having remarried, either once or more than once after the death of the soldier, sailor, or marine, if it be shown that such subsequent or successive marriage has, or have been dissolved, either by the death of the husband or husbands, or by divorce without fault on the part of the wife; and any such former widow shall be entitled to and be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month; and any widow as mentioned in this section, shall also be paid $6 per month for each child of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow having a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16 years: Provided, That in case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of such child, or during the period of such disability, and this proviso shall apply to all pensions heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted under this or any former statute: And provided further, That in case of any widow whose name has been dropped from the pension roll because of her remarriage, if the pension has been granted to an insane, idiotic, or otherwise helpless child, or to a child or children under the age of 16 years, she shall not be entitled to renewal of pension under this act until that pension to such child or children terminates, unless such child or children be a member or members of her family and cared for by her, and upon the renewal of pension to such widow, payment of pension to such child or children shall cease.

SEC. 5. That all Army nurses of the Civil War, and all dependent parents of any officer or enlisted man who served in the Civil War whose names are now on the pension roll, or who are now entitled to pension under any existing law, shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

SEC. 6. That the pension or increase of pension herein provided for, as to all persons whose names are now on the pension roll, or who are now in receipt of a pension under existing law, shall commence at the rates herein provided, from the date of the approval of this act, or under section 2 hereof, when the requisite condition is shown to exist after the approval of this act; and as to persons whose names are not now on the pension roll, or who are not now in receipt of a pension under existing law, but who may be entitled to pension under the provisions of this act, such pensions shall commence from the date of filing application therefor in the Bureau of Pensions in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That as to any former widow as mentioned in section 4 hereof, who since the death of her soldier, sailor, or marine husband has remarried either once or more than once, and such subsequent or successive marriage has been dissolved, either by the death of the husband or husbands, or by divorce without fault on the part of the wife, and who filed her application for pension under the act of September 8, 1916, her pension shall commence from the date when her original application was filed under that act in the Bureau of Pensions, and shall be at the rate in that act provided, with increase at the rate or rates subsequently provided for the widows of Civil War soldiers, sailors, and marines, and by this act from the date or dates when any such subsequent act or acts took effect or may hereafter take effect, it being the intent and purpose to give to any such widow the same status as other widows of Civil War soldiers, sailors, and marines who have not remarried, and from the date of said act of September 8, 1916.

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act contained shall be held to affect or diminish the additional pension to those on the roll designated as "The Army and Navy Medal of Honor Roll," as provided in the act of April 27, 1906, but any increase herein provided for shall be in addition thereto; and no pension heretofore granted under any act, public or private, shall be reduced by anything contained in this act.

SEC. 8. That no claim agent or attorney or other person shall be recognized in the adjustment of claims under this act, except in claims for original pension, and in such cases no more than the sum of $10 shall be allowed for services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any such claim, which sum shall be payable only on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section or shall wrongfully withhold from the pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of a pension allowed or due to such pensioner or claimant under this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every offense, be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

If you will examine the bill you will see, in the first place, that we give the sum of $50 to every person who served 90 days or more in the Army or Navy or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War, and who has been honorably discharged or who was discharged in a shorter time on account of disabilities received in the service. In the second place, you will see that we have provided that where a person with these qualifications, by reason of age or physical disabilities, becomes helpless or blind, or so nearly so as to require the constant or regular aid or attendance of another person, that he shall receive the sum of $72. In the third place, we have taken care of the maimed soldiers. We have recognized the principle that the soldier who lost his leg or arm in the war, which thereby rendered him helpless, should be given special consideration aside from his age and length of service. In the fourth place, we have recognized that the widow of the Civil War soldier, old and helpless as most of them are, can not live on $25 per month, and we have therefore provided in the bill that she may have $30 per month. In the sixth place, we have broadened the scope of the law so as to be more liberal toward the dependent children of deceased soldiers, and also have included in its provision the pensioning of Army nurses of the Civil War.

I know it will cost this Government a very large increase per capita, but we realize that since we reported this bill out on September 19, 10,000 of these brave men have died, and that before it is passed by the other branch of this Congress and signed by the President there will be many more who will hear the summons of the muffled oar. We do not regard this expenditure as an excessive burden upon this rich Nation; but if it were a burden upon it, I for one would earnestly advocate that this proud Nation should shoulder it gladly.

There are those in this House to-day who will not support this measure. Most of those who vote "nay" are naturally opposed to pensions; yet I venture to assert that every mother's son of them have voted for "compensations" for the young soldier of the late war, which is merely calling a rose by another name. I never have made any apologies for my advocacy of a high rate of pension for war veterans. The end of wars is not yet in sight. It will be a long time before the greed and ambitions and passions of men will be so subdued as to prevent them from settling international differences by physical force. The citizen who really loves his country, who believes in its institutions and form of government, and who appreciates his privilege of citizenship therein, will abandon his "peace at any price" policy, his "turn the other cheek" theory, when he sees his home and country unjustly attacked. Some one must do the fighting. Some one must stay at home. The Nation that fails to take care of and handsomely reward those who offer their lives in defense of it is not worthy of their sacrifices. Occasionally an unworthy one is unduly rewarded. Occasionally help is given to those who do not need help, and sometimes it happens that the Nation's generosity to its needy ones is abused; but, for my part, I would rather this would happen many times than that a single one of my country's defenders should justly feel that the Nation he served had been ungrateful and was leaving him in his old age in destitution.

I know of Civil War veterans who left business opportunities and gave the best years of their lives in the struggle for the Union, who are old and feeble and destitute, who have relied upon the promise of the Nation to keep them from want in their old days, but who now are trying to exist on $30 or $40 per month when the cost of living has advanced to the point where, if they were healthy, needed no doctor, and had no family to support, that sum would hardly keep them in the necessities of life for two weeks. It becomes a question as to whether this Nation means what it says when it has so often declared, "We will see that no defender of our country is ever in want," and while voting on this bill, my colleagues, you must not lose sight of the fact that the soldier of the Civil War, while fighting for the Nation's life, was not given the care and the comforts and the remuneration that the pride of this Nation caused us to bestow upon the heroes of later wars. He was paid $13 per month in a depreciated currency. No bonus was given to him. No insurance at cut-rate figures. No cheapened railroad transportation, vocational training, or extraordinary medical care. No Red Cross, Salvation Army, Y. M. C. A., or Knights of Columbus cheered his homesick heart and administered to his needs. I regret that he was not given these things, and I am proud of the fact that as a Member of Congress I have had the privilege of helping bestow upon his son and his grandson a better recognition of this Nation's gratitude to its defenders, and I want to serve notice on you now that while I am a Member of this House I shall always stand for liberal payment of pensions or compensation, whichever you choose to call it, to the men who offered their lives for our country and endured the hardships of military service.

I do not think this Nation has ever adequately shown its appreciation for the service of the Spanish-American veterans. I believe they have been neglected, and I think this Congress ought to take steps at once to increase the rate of pension to this worthy class of men.

My colleagues, as I said before, we do not know what future strife and conflict this Nation will be required to engage in, but we should be prepared for it, and one form of preparedness, to my way of thinking, consists of the cultivation of a sentiment that the American people will always see to it, come what may, that its defenders will be rewarded for heroic service.

As a member of this committee, gentlemen, I am proud of this bill we present you to-day. While it does not attempt to correct all the errors of the pension system and the inequalities that may exist, it does goes further in that direction, in my judgment, than any bill ever presented in any legislative body in the history of civilization. The jurisdiction of our committee only applies to pension matters growing out of the Civil War, but I sincerely hope that the other committees of Congress which have appropriate jurisdiction may speedily act upon similar questions affecting the soldiers of other wars.

About a year ago I introduced a bill to establish a new committee of this House to consider compensation matters and similar questions affecting the soldiers of the late World War. I believe that there is sufficient business of this character to justify a separate committee for its consideration. I hope that this necessary step in preparing the machinery for future needful legislation will soon be taken.

Now, just one more thought, my colleagues, and I will yield the floor. A month or so ago the Invalid Pensions Committee authorized me, as a member of that committee, to report to this House my bill directing the Bureau of Pensions to pay all pensions monthly and providing the necessary appropriation for additional equipment and expenses in so doing. I reported the bill to the House in accordance with my instructions. So far, the House has not found time to consider it. I know of no reason why the soldiers of the Civil and Spanish-American Wars should be paid once every three months while the soldiers of the late war are paid every month. It seems to me that the older and more helpless the soldier is and the more dependent he is upon his pension, the more he would require a monthly payment. I hope the House will have the opportunity of voting upon my bill at an early date. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the House now having under consideration the bill H. R. 9369, which is the latest legislative effort to equalize rates of pensions to soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, it seems to me that we are proceeding at this time to pay a debt of recognition and a debt of gratitude to those who actually bore the brunt of battle in preserving the Union and their dependent wives and children. It has been my privilege to see and know numbers of those who composed the soldiery of the Union Army, and it is with much regret that one notes, who does see these men and their widows, their frail physical condition. Age has taken a fearful toll, and is taking a fearful toll, and while the Government of the United States has always recognized, and must continue to recognize, these people, it is now doing no more than is proper. The necessary maintenance of those who have passed the meridian of life and are no longer self-supporting should be continued. This Government has long ago established the principle of comforting and protecting the old age of those who defended and preserved its institutions, and the only added principle is that the compensation to be paid as a reward of merit shall be consistent with and commensurate with their necessities.

Therefore it seems to me that this $5 increase of pension for widows over the former pension law is so slight in its general application to the entire country and so beneficial in its particular application to the individual widow there should not be the slightest hesitation in enacting this bill into law. Also the provisions for the care of the children, the provisions for the care of those who by reason of disability in the loss of eyes or arms or legs have been unable to do any work, are manifestly most proper provisions at this time. The bill in its entirety should be passed as a renewed evidence of appreciation of the gallant soldiery of half a century ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if there is one class of legislation that can be brought up in this House without notice and the rules suspended and the legislation passed without any consideration or debate, it is such a bill as this. Numerous bills of this kind have been passed in this manner, both in the Sixty-fifth and, so far, in this Congress. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has marked a new mile post in the history of this House this morning by even demanding a second, because, so far as I can remember, even that little step in delay has never before taken place.

There must be two acts of justice done by this Congress before I shall vote for any pension bill. One is the matter that I called the chairman's attention to a moment ago, of those alien enemies of this Government resident in Germany and Austria who have given of their money and their effects and their time in a war against America. I say before I shall vote for another pension bill in this Congress we must cut these foreign parasites from the pension rolls of this Government.

What steps have been taken? The chairman of the committee will not even answer a question asked him in that respect. I have a bill pending before this committee to accomplish that very purpose—to require a man and woman, when they continue to draw money from this Government, to be citizens of the United States and not the alien enemies, living in Germany and in Austria.

There is one other act of justice. Four members out of eight of the Supreme Court of the United States have held that there is to-day in the Treasury of the United States about $70,000,000 of money that ought not to be there; that was collected from the South improperly and unlawfully through the cotton tax. What steps has Congress taken to do justice with respect to that $70,000,000? Bill after bill has been before the committees here, and year after year no action has been taken. Is there a colleague of mine on this side of the Chamber who yet has in his heart any prejudice that would keep him from doing justice to the South?

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FOCHT. I think I can answer the gentleman by saying as to the money he speaks of, now in the Treasury, that if he will produce anybody who can prove that it belongs to them and that they were loyal during the war, they will get the money.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania knows that that money is in the Treasury; that that money belongs to the South; that that money was collected by this Government unlawfully; that four judges of the Supreme Court have so held, and he knows that there is a proper way to return that money to the Southland of this country.

Mr. FOCHT. I may say to the gentleman that during the Democratic control of this House there was an omnibus bill passed from the War Claims Committee carrying 1,400 bills. Why did not they carry that in it when your party had control?

Mr. BLANTON. I am complaining particularly of the Republicans, because I am here to say that my Republican colleagues are usually fair-minded men——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, in my native town, in my schoolboy days, I was impressed, forever, by a passage in an address of a soldier orator of Illinois, reading as follows:

The past rises before us like a dream. Again we are in the great struggle for national life. We hear the music of the boisterous drum and the silver voice of the heroic bugle. We see thousands of assemblages and hear the appeals of orators. And in those assemblages we see all the dead whose dust we have covered with flowers. We are with them when they enlist in the great army of freedom. We see them part with those they love. Some are walking in quiet, shady places with the maidens they adore. We hear the whisperings, the sweet vows of eternal love as they lingeringly part forever. Some are parting with wives and are bending over cradles kissing babes that are asleep, and some are parting with mothers, who clasp them again and again to their hearts and say—nothing.

"We see them part with those they love"—you may search all the dictionaries, all the concordances, all the encyclopædias, and you can not find words that mean more; you can not beat them—"we see them part with those they love." I have in mind this afternoon, as we sit here in our national prosperity, our country-wide affluence, our boundless resources, and our unparalleled prospects—I have in mind the promises made to those 2,600,000 men who enlisted in 1861 to 1865 and to their dear ones. Oh, the 2,600,000 Union soldiers are reduced to a handful, but at least 2,600,000 sons survive and as many daughters. They know of the promise made in that mighty time. They know it, and will see that it is kept—kept by legislators not faithless, if we who are here fail now to keep the faith. And the more than 2,000,000 who have gone—do they not know? It is recorded in Holy Writ that when the young man had doubts and said "Alas, my Master, what shall we do?" God, at the prayer of a prophet, opened the eyes of the young man, "And behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire, round about Elisha." So, at this hour, I can not fail to believe the millions who have marched to glory are leaning over the battlements of heaven watching us, observing our conduct, as we are now called upon to keep the faith.

They were all assured that their widows and orphans would be protected from want and privation. They did not go into battle—even unto death—thinking about their paltry pay of $13 per month; but they did do battle and dare and die for Union and for Liberty, consoled and comforted by the assurance, pressed warm against their hearts, that no wife or child should ever be neglected by the divinely-guided, the superb, and sublime American people. They had that assurance from Lincoln, and Grant, and Logan, and Sherman, and Sheridan, and Congress after Congress; solemn oaths, made and accepted, in your name and mine. I would put my hand in the fire before I would be recreant to that oath of our fathers.

The obligation can never be paid. The valor of Belleau Wood was valor, indeed; but so was the valor of Shiloh. The valor of Verdun and of the Argonne in 1918 was valor, indeed; but so was the valor of Gettysburg. The valor of the Marne was valor, indeed; but so was the valor of the Potomac. We all realize the meaning of Bunker Hill, and Long Island, and Valley Forge, and Saratoga, and Yorktown; of Winfield Scott at Lundys Lane and Commodore McDonough on Lake Champlain and of old Andrew Jackson behind the cotton bales of New Orleans; of Palo Alto and Resaca; of Buena Vista and Monterey; of Chapultepec and Old Mexico; of George Dewey at Manila, and Sampson and Schley at Santiago, and of the marines at Guantanamo, and of the boys at San Juan Hill; from Bunker Hill to San Juan Hill, I love to call the whole glorious roll; thank God, nobody can call that glorious roll but an American! And we have added our boys' valor in France. But, forget it not, the bravery of Americans at Donelson, and Shiloh, and Vicksburg, and Gettysburg, and along the Potomac, and on the march from Atlanta to the sea wrote the name of American valor so high on the dome of the temple of fame that the kings, and the emperors, and the sultans, and the czars, and the mikadoes have kept off of us for 55 years. And there was valor on both sides, the side of the North and the side of the South. When the determined North fought the fiery South, it was Greek meeting Greek, so to speak—it was fighting, indeed. That fighting I do not refer to from any sectional animosity. If I were to do so at this late day, I should be ashamed of myself. It is too late in the day. But it is not too late to show that we are still grateful. The sacrifices of that day were sublime sacrifices. They were made for you and me. One day years ago an elderly man driving into Chicago from his modest little country cottage took me into his old, rickety cart and drove me into the city. I saw that he drove his mule with his left hand, the right arm was entirely gone, and that he wore in his buttonhole the little brown button of the Grand Army of the Republic. Little by little I got the story; shot down in battle; held a prisoner for a year; kept in hospital another year; discharged with a useless, agonizingly painful, acutely sore arm; carried that arm for 20 years before it was cut off; then for 20 more years lived a one-armed man; that was the story. And when I said, "And you did all this for me, for my children, and my children's children," he replied, "I would do it all again for that up yonder," and he raised his left hand, holding the reins, and pointed to a little red schoolhouse over which streamed the beautiful folds of Old Glory.

How would Washington vote on this question here to-day? How would Lincoln vote? How would Grant and Sherman and Sheridan? I know; and so do you. As for me, I prefer to stand with these men and record their will rather than be deterred by any objection whatever.

If it be true—and it must be, because the distinguished chairman, the careful chairman, of this able committee has said so—that 130 survivors of that struggle will pass away between sunrise and sunset of this day, I for one hope that no one of them has perished from want. I for one on this floor, so long as I remain here, will put aside all other considerations and vote to promote and assure the comfort of these men and women, that none may ever die in want under the American flag that they sacrificed for in the mighty days of old.

Let the American Congress speak with emphasis at such a time as this and with trumpet tones on such a question as this. I am in favor of having the world understand—yes, even if we have to make it understand—that the long arm of American resentment and punishment will surely reach every king and emperor and sultan and czar and mikado, and every red-handed, murdering anarchist, too, who dares to put any American in peril or the rights of any American in peril anywhere in the world. And I am in favor of giving the world to understand, further, that the arm of America's reward is as long as its punishment; that the arm of America's gratitude is not shortened, but can and will and does reach every man who fights for it even unto the third and fourth generation. The surest guaranty that future generations will fight at the drop of the hat, instantly and instinctively, is a demonstration now to 4,000,000 young soldiers and sailors that after 55 years we are still ready to extend and hold up the strong arm of America's gratitude to the survivors and descendants of the men who 55 years ago kept the Stars and Stripes in the sky against the bravest foe that ever assailed any republic—the intrepid South. I repeat, I will allow no argument of false economy or of sectional animosity to keep me from voting for this bill. I should think that any man opposing it would see all around him here the imploring arms of living women and dead men awaiting his help; and I feel, as I vote for the bill, that, as Chairman FULLER has said, we are doing that which will be approved by men and by God himself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAYS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes a general increase in the various classes of Civil War pensions. Some one has suggested that the bill should not pass because of the large amount of money it will require to meet the pension increase.

I stand for rigid economy in administering the affairs of this Government, but I also stand for the passage of this bill. Economy is not measured alone by the amount of money paid out. The justice of the payment and the wisdom of the outlay form a truer test of economy than the number of dollars involved. If the people on the Civil War pension rolls are entitled to more money than they are now getting, we should pass the bill. It is not extravagance to pay our debts.

There scarce can be a doubt as to our debt of gratitude to the gallant soldiers who saved our Union undivided and preserved our flag for posterity. More than 50 years have passed since the close of that momentous conflict. The magnificent Army of that war has dwindled away year by year until but a fraction of its number remains, and those surviving veterans, many of them battle scarred and worn by disease, are nearing the end of their pilgrimage. Their days for earning a livelihood have passed. Exposure endured in the Army, disease contracted in the service, wounds received in battle, and the steady flight of time have all conspired to limit their incomes. The widows and orphans of soldiers left helpless and dependent have even a harder road to travel than the veterans themselves. All of them deserve a greater financial recognition from this Nation than they have yet received.

I do not urge this pension increase from sentimental motives nor as a matter of charity; but, on the other hand, I recognize this increase as the belated payment of a debt long due. Justice to the Nation demands that we go as far as may be to eliminate want and suffering from among our people; justice to the surviving Civil War veterans and to the dependent widows and unfortunate children of their departed comrades demands that we pay such recompense as will let them finish their years in comfort.

The United States has always been a grateful Nation; it has been liberal with its bounty in the past. But the time has now come when the original pensions are insufficient to meet the needs of the people who receive them. In recent years there has been no general increase in pensions, but since 1913 the cost of living has more than doubled. It requires two dollars to-day to buy what one dollar would buy in 1913. For that reason our pension payments should be increased somewhat in accordance with the increased cost of living.

In justice to the men and women on our Civil War pension rolls, I will gladly vote to pass this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the pending bill and am happy indeed to know that Congress has finally come to the consideration of a pension bill for our grand old veterans of the Civil War that seems somewhat commensurate with the needs of our noble heroes and will to some extent meet the pressing wants of many thousands of these white-haired saviors of our country and her institutions.

The high cost of living has made it difficult for many thousands of our Civil War veterans to live with any degree of comfort on their present pensions. The increase contemplated under this bill will mean comfort and happiness in the sunset years to thousands of these men and women who sacrificed so much in order that our Nation might remain an indissoluble Union of States and our institutions of liberty forever endure.

Our Government has ever been mindful and has ever in a generous way provided for the needs of our Civil War veterans, and this bill is only carrying out our continued spirit of gratitude to them and their dependents.

We rejoice to-day over the undying victories wrought by our grand heroes of the late World War over autocracy and tyranny and for the guarantee of liberty and the pursuit of happiness to all mankind. Our hearts swell with pardonable pride as we review the splendid deeds of the boys of 1918, and I believe that we shall soon be ready to remember in a substantial way these brave men for their sacrifices so freely offered and so bravely given on the altar of liberty and civilization. We also recall with pride and tender emotions the sacrifices and victories of the sturdy veterans of the Spanish-American War. But while we remember with sincere devotions these gallant heroes of our two late wars, let us not forget the debt of gratitude we owe to the gallant and brave veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic, who saved this Nation of ours from dismemberment and vouchsafed to us and our posterity a Nation one and inseparable now and forever.

We must extend our help and gratitude soon or the opportunity will not be ours, for by the thousands these heroes pass from our midst each month. Soon—all too soon—the last form clothed in blue will be robed in his victorious garments of white. Soon the last man of the Grand Army of the Republic will respond to his last roll call and final summons.

Let Congress pass this bill now and speedily enact it into law and help make the sunset hours of these remaining grand old veterans of the Civil War happy and comfortable by extending to them this needy increase in their support.

Patriotism has ever been the lifeblood of our Nation. Our Civil War veterans have ever stood and they stand to-day for a patriotism that is vital and that makes our country great through the noble thoughts and great deeds of its people. They have stood for a spirit that is ever vigorous in the defense of truth and virtue, and untarnished in all its acts toward our fellow men and God. They have stood and stand for a patriotism that is not narrow and bigoted, but as broad, deep, and comprehensive as humanity itself. Our hearts are melted in patriotic devotion and consecration as we read the glowing chapters of our boys of the Civil War as they marched from farm, factory, and countingroom into field of battle and did valiant service for our flag and Union. Their spirit to-day teaches us not to merely live and die, but to live nobly and act grandly; to so live and to so labor as to be able to bequeath to posterity rich legacies, legacies that posterity in its turn can bequeath. They helped to create an atmosphere in which the seeds of noble character could blossom into the flower of noble deeds. They taught us that the highest fruitage of our civilization is hope, courage, and liberty builded upon the eternal rock of justice and righteousness. [Applause.]

The spirit of these heroic veterans inspires us to-day to have a higher regard and a deeper veneration for our flag and our American institutions and to endeavor more zealously to eradicate forever from our Nation the disloyalist, the Bolshevist, the I. W. W., the radicals, the "reds," and the anarchists. These have no place in our American life and development. In America we have room for but one flag, and that is the Stars and Stripes; room for but one Government, and that is the American Government, for which our Grand Army of the Republic and Spanish-American War veterans and the veterans of the World War gave freely their blood and sacrifice in order that our glorious flag might float forever unsullied as the emblem of law and order, authority and liberty. [Applause.]

In the present chaotic condition of our social, political, and economic life we must not cater to class legislation, but must listen to the stern voice of justice and mete out a square deal to every individual and to every group. With our faith inspired, our arm nerved, and our convictions determined, we must enlist our powers in the great army of truth, equality, and justice, unwilling to be overridden by the blustering, bragging giants of selfishness and oppression, no matter from what source, without protest and resistance. Congress, as well as the administration of our Government, must not yield to the siren song for legislation for classes or groups, but must insist on the square deal to all. Employers and employees, capital and labor, must learn not to take advantage of each other, but to unite and cooperate for the common good and weal of our Government and its people. We must now learn that the interests of a patient public must be considered, as well as the interests of capital and labor. The Rooseveltian slogan of a square deal to all people must be written in letters of living fire across the sky of our national life if we are to continue long as a free and happy people and enjoy the priceless heritage of justice, liberty, and equality. For this priceless heritage our valiant veterans of the Civil War fought, bled, and died in order that this "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

This bill should pass unanimously. I shall vote for it as a correct and just expression of gratitude to our army of freedom, whose undying heroism and sacrifices has made it possible that the flag they so nobly defended shall forever wave untarnished in an atmosphere of American loyalty and liberty. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, nobody, of course, can gainsay the fact that these worthy veterans are entitled to every consideration that the Congress or the American people may bestow; but I regret that at this particular time I can not give my support to the pending bill.

In the first place, I doubt whether it is wise to attempt to enact general pension legislation upon a schedule of the commodities and the necessities of life, because if you establish that principle we ought to be consistent, and when those commodities and necessaries of life lower in cost we ought to lower the gratuities that we pay to the veterans of the war, or any other gratuities, in the same proportion.

The time is here for real economy. Of course, different political orators have been talking of that for many months, but it is for the American Congress to indicate whether it really believes in economy. I assume that I shall be charged with attempting to practice economy at the expense of the veterans of the Civil War. But, Mr. Speaker, the veterans of that great war are now cared for by both general legislation and hundreds of special acts which we enact during each session of Congress, and I believe that on the whole, throughout the entire country, you will find that in the various communities of the various States there are very few of those veterans or their dependents who are permitted to fall into destitution and want. And while we have attempted to enact legislation that would be fair and equitable, there is some little duty resting upon the municipalities and upon the States. While, of course, I would not advocate letting the veteran, because of the small sum given as gratuity, to come into want and become a public charge, still I believe the evidence, if any, will disclose that those instances do not exist.

I note that this measure seeks to add $65,000,000 to the pension rolls; about that, probably; perhaps a little less and it may be a little more. Now, gentlemen have stated this as being "belated justice." If we are to attempt this at this particular time I doubt if it is entirely fair to the memory of those veterans who have departed this life. You can not by legislation place any money value on the patriotism of those worthy men or upon the patriotism of the young men, the flower of this land, who went across the ocean to fight a foreign foe, and you might just as well make up your minds when you come to legislate that you can not put patriotic service upon any sordid basis of dollars and cents, whether in pay while in the service or in a gratuity after the service has been rendered. Therefore,

Mr. Speaker, it is with regret that I find myself unable to support the pending legislation.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it is my view that at this time it would be wiser to enact legislation increasing pensions for such individual cases as may require relief than to enact legislation general in its scope and which would reach many thousands who undoubtedly do not require this increase. We pass and I have voted for many omnibus pension bills carrying numerous increases in existing pensions. I have gladly introduced and worked for the passage of these bills, and shall in all cases where the facts warrant it advocate the passage of these measures, because I know the careful consideration given them by the committees, and especially the committee so ably presided over by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER].

I appreciate the fact that my attitude will be misunderstood, and probably it will be distorted into unqualified opposition to pensions or increases to surviving veterans of the Civil and Spanish Wars, but my record on pension legislation will show my position on this subject. I repeat that I doubt the wisdom of enacting this legislation at this particular time, and with regret must withhold my approval of the pending measure, and realizing the fact that the rules will undoubtedly be suspended by practically a unanimous vote, I shall vote in the negative, but feel by so doing that I am not belittling the great service rendered by the veterans, nor am I encouraging any mean or ungrateful spirit toward them.

I desire, Mr. Speaker, to ask how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts has seven minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] has two minutes.

Mr. WALSH. How much time did I use?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts used five minutes.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I thought I had more than two minutes——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tally kept at the desk so shows——

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Unless I was charged with more time than I consumed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair only knows that the tally shows that there still remains to the credit of the gentleman from Illinois two minutes. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has used five minutes.

Mr. WALSH. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is not pleasant, and it may be dangerous, to make a speech against a bill of this character.

I have been in this House a few years and have seen a good many acts of pension legislation, increasing pensions from time to time, until now a very large number of people in the United States believe that it is the duty of the General Government to support everyone who goes into a war, and then his family besides. I can not subscribe to that doctrine. I do not believe that the General Government has ever undertaken or ought ever to undertake to say that it will support a man or his family or his widow because he has volunteered for service in time of war. I believe the Government ought to make great financial recompense to those who are injured in war; but the mere fact that a man has served in the Army and in the war and comes out with a whole skin and good health ought not to lead him to believe in the end that if he does not provide anything for his old age it is the duty of the General Government to support him. The worst thing that can happen in this or any other country is to raise up a class of men who believe that the State ought to take care of them. If it is to be done at all it ought to be done for all the ages. You can not pay money out of the Treasury to one man without taking it from another.

The pensions of the United States have been very liberal in the past. Gentlemen talk about "belated justice." The Government has been more than just. It has been liberal in its generosity in the payment of pensions. It will always continue to be so; but when we say now that we will put these men upon the basis of pure charity to support them, I can not subscribe to that doctrine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois two minutes more.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Most of these pensions are paid in the North. Some are paid abroad. Some are paid in the South. Some of the Southern States provide for the payment of pensions, small in amount. The total does not amount to a great deal. We in the North have taught our old soldiers to believe that they need not rely upon self-effort, while the old soldiers of the South were taught to believe that they must rely upon self-effort. So far as my observation goes they have done quite as well or better in private life than our old soldiers in the North have done. If we teach people to be self-reliant, that is the most valuable lesson that can come to mankind. We are proposing not only to pauperize the soldiers of the Civil War, but to advertise to those who served in the recent war that the Government of the United States will support them, and that they do not need to work for themselves. They do not ask for it, but in the course of time, with that education, it has its effect, and it is a bad effect. [Applause.]

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, surely the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] does not mean to apply his arguments of economy and self-help to the old Civil War veterans who are to-day tottering to their graves.

Fifty-five years ago the Civil War came to an end. Fifty-five years ago the Grand Army of the Republic marched down Pennsylvania Avenue, with their gallant and heroic leaders at their head. To-day that army has been conquered by a mightier general than Lee; its legions have bowed before the vanquisher of all men—Death. It could scarcely be otherwise when the boy who was but 15 in that victorious day in 1865 has now reached the threescore and ten years allotted to man.

Mr. Speaker, the few aged and feeble soldiers of the sixties who remain are entitled to everything a grateful nation may do in their behalf. At this late date, a half century and more after their valiant deeds were performed, there can be no extravagance in providing for the wants of these men who made disunion impossible and the Union perpetual. While it is true that no money payment could pay for their patriotic service, it is also true that neglect of their necessities is ingratitude of the basest kind.

The men of the Grand Army hold the promise solemnly made by the Nation's spokesman, Abraham Lincoln, that America "will care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and orphan." They have our obligation of honor which can not be denied. They have just claim on the grounds of justice and common humanity. They must not longer be paid in dollars which have lost half their purchasing power in the past six years. They ask no luxuries in this age of luxury, but they justly claim that the richest Nation on earth shall not permit penury and want to become the portion of the survivors of the army which made this Nation possible.

The men of the Grand Army fought in their day to perpetuate a hundred per cent Americanism. They destroyed dividing lines and established a real Nation, with a national spirit and a patriotism as broad as the Republic. They fulfilled the prophecies of the founders and put realities into the dreams of the builders of America. They decreed on a thousand fields and amid the iron storms of war that the United States are indivisible and inseparable, bound in the links of a common cause and a common destiny. They made it possible for a united America to become a light and beacon for the whole world. They served and sacrificed and suffered, and the Nation they saved became the hope of civilization on the fields of Flanders. Their heroism at Gettysburg and Appomattox made Chateau-Thierry and Argonne Wood possible. They gave their youth and their blood, and this pension measure is not so generous but that their deserving is greater.

The men of the Grand Army upheld and defended the Constitution of the United States at peril of their lives. They kept faith with the ideals of democracy. They offered their all as pledge for the belief that the central fact in popular government is agreement with law. They knew that successful armed rebellion against the law must end in autocracy. They cemented with their blood the stones in the temple of liberty. They rose superior to any test which war could devise in their devotion to America. They set an example for every American in all ages to come, and it will be a sorry day when neglect and indifference is the reward of such patriotism and Americanism as theirs.

The men of the Grand Army gave us a Republic without a serf or slave. They struck the shackles from 4,000,000 bondmen and made true the Declaration of Independence. They destroyed the baleful prejudice that human rights depend on race or color. They secured for every American the right to life and liberty; the right to pursue and preserve happiness. They put new meaning into that flag; its red stripes are encrimsoned with their blood; its blue is brighter because of their steadfast faith; its white gleams purer because of their devotion; its stars sparkle with not a single one missing because these men dared to do or die. When the land was full of tears and liberty full of fears, they rallied to the rescue. Now, when they are approaching their near-by graves, America must rescue them from peril of poverty and want.

Mr. Speaker, every Civil War veteran and every widow provided for in this measure helped to preserve this Nation. Longer delay means that the opportunity goes by forever, for more than a thousand veterans are passing each week to that bourne from which no traveler returns. The enactment of this bill now will brighten the last days of the survivors of the Grand Army of the Republic, whose splendid courage and sublime sacrifices will live as long as the history of this Nation is read by men.

I desired to offer an amendment which would provide that these pensions should be paid by monthly checks, believing that such procedure would add to the benefits of the legislation. I am assured by the chairman of the Pension Committee [Mr. FULLER of Illinois] that there is a bill now on the calendar to cover exactly that requirement and it should be speedily passed also. Let us pass this measure at once and prove that while we can not call back the illustrious dead we can confer these justly won benefits upon the living veterans of the fratricidal war in which America was reborn, to become the exemplar of unity, liberty, and justice for the world. [Applause.]

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I very much regretted to hear the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I think they are both entirely beside the question. In the one instance the gentleman inveighs against the measure on the presumption that this bill is predicated upon the high cost of living, and in the other instance the gentleman talks about making a pensioned class. That is not the case at all. This is a case where men have passed into the evening of life with but a few days of earth remaining. They are the men who for a burning, living principle saved the Union from disintegration, the men who made it possible for us to contribute forty billions of money to bring happiness to foreigners, and to assemble 4,000,000 men to fight for the freedom of the world. And now we are going to continue to provide for these old veterans and their children or widows the necessaries of life. What we want to do is to take care of these old men now, since it was not done long ago. It is not a matter of market prices. It is not a matter of establishing a pension-drawing class or of destroying incentive to individual effort. What we want to do is to discharge a high and sacred and holy obligation, and take care of these noble old men, in whose lives the shadows no longer fall toward the west. Let us do it before the daylight of their honored and enshrined existence passes into eternal eclipse. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has two minutes remaining.

Mr. WALSH. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK].

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there is a Member of this body who knows anything whatever of my record since I came to Congress 13 years ago but knows full well that I have been an insistent and a consistent advocate of liberal pensions for the old soldiers and their dependents. It is not necessary, therefore, for me to tell you that I am strongly in favor of the immediate passage of this bill, and I hope and pray that the Senate will act upon it promptly, so that the beneficiaries of this bill will quickly receive its benefits, which are so badly needed.

As a member of the committee which considered and reported this bill, I am pleased to say that it was unanimously agreed upon by the committee, and while it may have some imperfections, yet in our judgment it was the best bill we could hope to pass. No general law ever worked exact justice to all, and no doubt some criticism can be justly made of the bill now before the House.

In my humble judgment no more meritorious measure was ever proposed. The beneficiaries of this bill are all old and practically all are poor and needy. I am sure that less than 10 per cent of the veterans of the Civil War are to-day able to earn a single dollar by their own manual efforts to support themselves and their families. I am also sure that at least 80 per cent of these old veterans have absolutely no income whatever except the meager pension now paid them by our Government. We have increased the pay of everybody, so far as I know, now on the Government pay roll to meet the high cost of living, and yet no one needs increased compensation so badly as these old pensioners, for they grow less able daily to help themselves, while the cost of living mounts higher and higher.

I am aware that some will say that tax burdens are already resting too heavily upon the people, and there is no denying this charge. But can we afford to economize at the expense of justice and permit these old veterans to die in want and penury? A thousand times no. We must economize, and, for one, I propose to vote against every extravagance and expenditure of the people's money which is not absolutely imperative for the proper conduct of our governmental activities, but no old soldier who risked his life that this Union might endure will appeal to me in vain. These veterans were paid a paltry pittance while in the service, and the purchasing power of the money paid them was worth then just about what it is worth to-day—50 cents on the dollar. They gave up their trades, professions, and business opportunities to preserve this Union of States, and to-day North and South alike thank God the boys in blue were victorious. Shall we permit the remnant of that mighty Army to die for the want of plain food and apparel and the humble home to shelter their poor, tired, and worn-out old bodies, simply because we have had a world's war and created a mighty debt? I am sure the splendid young men of our land who participated in that magnificent and victorious war for all humanity would prefer that Congress first provide for these old soldiers and their feeble and needy widows. All of the khaki boys who are to-day strong and able-bodied would rather their sires and their grandsires be first cared for, and will be content, if need be, to wait until their needs are greater than they are to-day before making demands for their support. We must care for these old heroes and care for them quickly and well, regardless of cost or other demands upon the Treasury. In a very few years not one will remain, but the record of their glorious deeds and achievements will survive to the end of time.

This bill not only cares for the old soldiers but it gives a small and much-needed boost to the soldiers' widows and dependent children. Section 4 and section 6 do the thing I have been working for with all my might and vigor ever since the ruling was made on the Ashbrook widows' pension law which barred widows who contracted more than one marriage from receiving a pension. My bill to amend the Ashbrook law was passed by the House in the Sixty-fifth Congress, but the Senate failed to concur. I have the same bill now on the calendar, but this general bill cares for the old veterans, including the maimed and crippled soldiers, their widows and their dependent children, as well as the Army nurses. It is a big, broad, generous bill, and I am glad to surrender any rights and honor that might be due me for securing the passage of the amendment to the law which bears my name in the interest of this general bill, with the belief that it hastens legislation for not only the widows but the soldiers and their dependents.

Mr. Speaker, the greatest personal pleasure that has come to me during my service here has been the opportunity and privilege it has afforded me to render some slight service to these brave old veterans and their loyal and faithful wives and widows. The tender and beautiful expressions of thanks and sincere gratitude which have come to me not only from my own district but from every State in the Union will cheer and comfort me through all my days. I would rather have their love and gratitude and the consciousness that I have helped just a little to sweeten and to soften their declining days and make more mellow and refulgent the sun fast disappearing over the western horizon than to receive any honor within the gift of man. Let us pass this bill quickly and thank God that it is our privilege to do it. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill with very great pleasure. It proposes a substantial increase in the pensions of the surviving soldiers of the great Civil War. It meets with my hearty approval. My only fear is that the proposed increase will not be sufficient to insure a comfortable living to many of these brave men who more than half a century ago performed such signal service to their country. I do not regard the pensions these men receive as a gift or gratuity. Neither do I regard these pensions as pay in money for services rendered. We can not in mere money compensate them. We can not repay them for their services. We can not, by any grant of money, discharge the debt we owe them. But we can, by liberal pensions, contribute to their well-being, their comfort, and their happiness. We can show our appreciation of their services. We can indicate our admiration for their deeds. We can manifest an interest in their welfare. We can honor them for devotion to their country, for loyalty to the Union, and for the great sacrifices they made in behalf of human liberty. These men did their duty in a great national crisis. They met their responsibilities in an hour of danger and national peril. But the National Congress of the United States will fail to do its duty and meet its responsibilities if it does not make ample and liberal provisions for the care, maintenance, and support of every man who fought in the Union Army during the great Civil War.

I have served in this House for more than 10 years. I have voted for many bills, covering a wide range of subjects. At times I have had doubts in voting for certain bills. I have hesitated in giving my approval to some measures. But I have had no difficulty in giving my support to bills giving additional recognition to the heroes of the great civil conflict which raged from 1861 to 1865. I have voted for these bills without hesitation or doubt. Aye, more than this, I have voted for them with great satisfaction and pleasure.

It has been asserted here that the Federal Government has been liberal in its pensions to the soldiers of the Civil War. That may be true when compared with what other countries have done for their soldiers. But is it true in the light of our ability? Have we really been liberal, in view of the service these men rendered and the wealth we have possessed? Can we say we have been liberal to these men when we consider the debt we owe them? In the hour of the greatest peril it was the courage, the bravery, the loyalty, and patriotism of these soldiers that preserved this Republic. In the preservation of this Union all the world had a deep interest. So these men fought not only for their country, but they fought for the world. They fought for the generations which have followed them to this day and for those who will follow them in the years to come. They richly deserve all we can bestow upon them. This Government can make no better investment than to make liberal provision for these veterans who followed Grant and Sherman and Sheridan and other Union generals to victory. We can not give these men too great recognition; we can not honor them too highly; we can not do too much for them.

It is true this Nation has a stupendous national debt. It is certain that for many years there will be heavy taxation. And we all recognize the necessity of economy in our national expenditures. But we can not justly or wisely begin that economy by withholding what should be freely granted to men who made it possible for this Nation to live. Our country is rich, our people are prosperous, and our citizens are patriotic. Public sentiment will approve this measure. It is right and it is just. Let it become a law at the earliest date possible. It will bring joy, gladness, and happiness to the hearts of many worthy veterans of the great Civil War and strengthen the fabric of the Union their valor preserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Is it necessary that the bill be read under the five-minute rule for amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not. Under a motion to suspend the rules there is no opportunity for amendment.

Mr. LAYTON. Do I understand that there is no opportunity for amendments to this bill?

The SPEAKER. No opportunity. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question being taken, Mr. BLANTON demanded a division.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the House having divided, I make a point of no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members. As many as are in favor of the passage of the bill will, as their names are called, vote yea, those opposed nay, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 233, nays 55, answered "present" 2, not votoing 138, as follows:

On the vote:

Mr. TAGUE (for) with Mr. DUPRÉ (against).

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. TAGUE, and I wish to withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. LANGLEY, is unable to be present. If here, he would vote "aye" on the Fuller bill. I ask unanimous consent that his telegram may be placed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to put in the RECORD a telegram from his colleague, Mr. LANGLEY, explaining his absence. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The telegram is as follows:

LOUISVILLE, KY., January 3.

Hon. J. M. ROBSION,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I deeply regret my inability to be present in the House Monday to cast my vote for the pension bill, but I am detained in Kentucky by some important matters and it will not be possible for me to reach Washington before Tuesday or Wednesday. I do not anticipate any substantial opposition to the bill, but if any opposition develops I shall greatly appreciate it if you will see that I am paired with somebody who is against the bill. In view of the fact that I have taken an active part during all of my service in Congress in support of liberal pension legislation and of the further fact that as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which honor I have had for many years, I aided in the preparation of the bill referred to, I feel that my record on the pension question is sufficiently established to render unnecessary any statement from me at this time regarding the pending bill. At the same time I would like to go on record in this way, being unavoidably absent, as a hearty supporter of the measure and of any similar measure designed to give more liberal consideration to our soldiers and sailors and their dependents, to whom I feel the Republic owes a debt of gratitude which can not ever be fully paid. I desire to add that while I realize the necessity of compromise in many matters of legislation, and which occurred in the framing of this measure, I would, if I could, liberalize some of its provisions; and I still hope that, as one of the conferees on the bill, I may be able to aid in bringing that about. The old heroes of the Civil War will not honor us much longer with their presence, and many of them in these days of the high cost of living are suffering for the actual necessities of life, and we can not be too liberal with them and their widows. I have in mind also the maimed soldiers who incurred their disabilities on the firing line and who have spent all of these years with this handicap in life and without adequate remuneration from the Government, for which they made such sacrifices. I hope that before the bill becomes a law it will be so amended as to carry out the views I am expressing and which are based upon a deep sense of public duty.

JOHN W. LANGLEY.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. The Calendar for Unanimous Consent is now in order, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

LANDS OF THE CROW TRIBE.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2890) to provide for the allotment of lands of the Crow Tribe, for the distribution of tribal funds, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

AUTHORIZING WRANGELL, ALASKA, TO ISSUE BONDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10746) to authorize the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction, enlargement, and equipment of schools, the acquisition and construction of a water-supply system, the construction of a city dock and floating dock, and to levy and collect a special tax therefor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to issue its bonds in any sum, not exceeding $80,000, for the purpose of enlarging its schoolhouse and constructing and equipping schools, for the acquisition and construction of a water-supply system, for the construction of a sewer system, and for the construction of a city dock and also a floating dock.

SEC. 2. That before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the town of Wrangell, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said town of Wrangell. Thirty days' notice of any such election shall be given by publication thereof in a newspaper printed and published and of general circulation in said town before the day fixed for such election.

SEC. 3. That the registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued only upon the condition that a majority of the votes cast at such election in said town shall be in favor of issuing said bonds.

SEC. 4. That the bonds above specified, when authorized to be issued as hereinbefore provided, shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed 7 per cent per annum, payable annually, and shall be sold for not less than their par value, with accrued interest, and shall be in denominations not exceeding $1,000 each, the principal to be due in 20 years from the date thereof: Provided, however, That the common council of the town of Wrangell may reserve the right to pay off said bonds in their numerical order at the rate of $10,000 or less thereof per annum at any interest period: Provided further, That on all bonds paid off the first year after date there shall be paid a premium of 2½ per cent, on all bonds paid off the second year a premium of 2 per cent, on all bonds paid off the third year a premium of 1½ per cent, and on all bonds paid off the fourth year a premium of 1 per cent besides interest. Principal and interest shall be paid in lawful money of the United States of America at the office of the town treasurer of the town of Wrangell, Alaska, or at such other place as may be designated by the common council of said town of Wrangell, the place of payment to be mentioned in said bonds: And provided further, That each and every bond shall have the written signature of the mayor and clerk of said town of Wrangell and also bear the seal of said town.

SEC. 5. That no part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any other purpose than that specified in this act. Said bonds shall be sold only in such amounts as the common council shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed for the purposes herein mentioned and under the order and direction of said common council from time to time as the same may be required for said purposes: Provided, That not to exceed $15,000 of the proceeds of the sale of said bonds shall be expended for the construction, enlargement, and equipment of schools; not to exceed $25,000 thereof shall be expended for the acquisition and construction of a water-supply system; not to exceed $15,000 thereof shall be expended for the construction of a sewer system; and not to exceed $20,000 thereof shall be expended for the construction of a city dock; and not to exceed $5,000 thereof shall be expended for the construction of a floating dock.

SEC. 6. That said town of Wrangell is hereby authorized to annually assess, levy, and collect a special tax, not to exceed 2 per cent of the assessed valuation, upon all the real and personal property situated in said town, and to enforce the collection of the same as other taxes, to provide for the payment of said bonds; such tax, if levied and collected, shall be used exclusively for such purpose and may be administered as a sinking fund therefor.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "its," insert the word "public"; line 6, after the word "equipping," insert the word "public."

Page 2, line 7, strike out the words "30 days' notice" and insert in lieu thereof the word "notice"; line 8, after the word "thereof," insert the words "once a week for four consecutive weeks prior to such election"; line 11, after the word "town," strike out the words "before the day fixed for such election."

Page 3, line 6, after the word "centum," insert the words "besides interest"; line 7, after the word "centum," insert the words "besides interest"; line 8, after the word "centum," insert the words "besides interest."

Page 4, line 4, after the word "of," insert the word "public"; line 13, strike out the word "to," before the word "and," and insert the word "to" after the word "and."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDING FEDERAL FARM-LOAN ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2377) to amend section 1 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, so as to provide for the payment of the expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board and employees by the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS ROCK RIVER, WIS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10135) for the construction of a bridge across Rock River at or near East Grand Avenue, in the city of Beloit, Wis.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Beloit, in the State of Wisconsin, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rock River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the point where East Grand Avenue, in said city of Beloit, crosses the said Rock River, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SWEET, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS NIAGARA RIVER.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3427) to establish a commission to report to Congress on the practicability, feasibility, and place, and to devise plans for the construction of a public bridge over the Niagara River from some point in the city of Buffalo, N. Y., to some point in the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS LUMBER RIVER, N. C.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8661) to authorize the Kingsdale Lumber Corporation to construct a bridge across Lumber River, near the town of Lumberton, N. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Kingsdale Lumber Corporation, its lessees, successors, and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Lumber River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "navigation," insert "near the town of Lumberton, Robeson County, N. C."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MONTAGUE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONFERRING CITIZENSHIP UPON CERTAIN INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 288) for the purpose of conferring citizenship upon certain Indians, segregation of Indian tribal property, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why?

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] is not here. He was here this morning. On a previous occasion when the bill was called up he asked that this be done.

Mr. GARD. I do not understand why it should go over.

Mr. WALSH. Because the gentleman from Oklahoma is not here. On a former occasion he asked that this be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING SIOUX TRIBE TO SUBMIT CLAIMS TO THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1018) authorizing the Sioux Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER, GA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10922) to grant the consent of Congress to the Alfords Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Savannah River.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let us have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Alfords Bridge Co., to be composed of the following members, namely, A. N. Alford, H. I. Alford, and H. B. Alford, of Hart County, Ga., and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Savannah River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Haileys Ferry, which is about 1½ miles from Harpers old ferry above and about 1½ miles from Sadlers Ferry below, both of which ferries have been abandoned, in the county of Hart, State of Georgia, on the west, and the county of Anderson, State of South Carolina, on the east, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to erect any other bridge or ferry between Harpers old ferry above and Sadlers Ferry below Haileys Ferry is hereby prohibited.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In line 9, page 1, strike out the word "which" at the end of the line; also strike out all of lines 10 and 11 and all of line 12 up to the word "in."

Strike out all of section 2, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask whoever has this bill in charge whether the purpose is to incorporate a bridge company so that they can build a toll bridge?

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. BRAND]. He is detained at home on account of illness. He telegraphed me this morning asking that he be given leave of absence on account of the illness of his child. I do not know about the facts of the case. If the gentleman or any other gentleman feels disposed to object, I will ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to grant to the Alfords Bridge Co. the right to construct a bridge. Then, before it goes that far, it provides that the Alfords Bridge Co. be composed of the following members, naming four gentlemen.

Now, whether it is attempting to incorporate a company by this act of Congress I do not know. Whether there is a bridge company now incorporated I do not know. Nothing of that is disclosed here. Whether there is a bridge company which must forever remain composed of four men, any one of whom might die the day after the act was passed, I do not know; but the bill is in such an unusual form that I am not sure, and nobody knows——

Mr. CRISP. I know nothing whatever in regard to the facts of the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know; but I am saying this so that the gentleman who introduced the bill will be able to make an explanation to the House or at least change the form of his bill and grant a right either to the company or to certain individuals with authority to transfer.

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman will yield, does the gentleman think this language, "to be composed of the following members, namely," is sufficient to create an incorporation known as the Alfords Bridge Co.?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I do not know whether it is or not; it might be.

Mr. GARD. I do not think it is sufficient to create a company.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know whether it is or not, but either there is a company or there is not. If there is not a company, and this authority is to be granted to individuals, it ought not to be granted so that they can use the company name. It is no company at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, if it is all mixed up, why not grant the consent that it be passed over?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Nobody has any objection, I think, to that; but I thought it desirable to have the RECORD show this, so that the gentleman in charge of the bill will be prepared to dispose of the matter when it comes up again.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I will say this very question came up before the committee when it was being considered, and it was represented to the members of the committee at that time that the Alfords Bridge Co. was a partnership, that it was not a corporation, that the men named here were the members of the partnership.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Very well, I am perfectly willing, as far as I am concerned, to grant to the partnership here named the right to construct a bridge, but not to grant it under the name of a company, which leads people to believe it is an incorporated company. Representatives of the United States ought not to hold out to people that a certain company is an incorporated company if it is only a partnership.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman will yield to me and consent is given for the consideration of the bill—that it be taken up—I would move to strike out the words in line 4, "to be composed of the following members, namely, A. N. Alford, H. I. Alford, and H. B. Alford, of Hart County, Ga., and their successors and assigns," so that the bill would read:

That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Alfords Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge—

And so forth.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWEET] says this is not an incorporated company. You had better strike out "Alfords Bridge Co., to be composed of," and grant the right to those individuals.

Mr. CRISP. Then I offer this further amendment: "That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Alfords Bridge Co., a partnership composed of" so-and-so.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I do not think we ought to grant a partnership under a name which everybody would suppose was an incorporated company. It is misleading and deceptive.

Mr. SWEET. But I will say to the gentleman from Illinois they want it made to the company——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, yes, of course they do. And then they advertise or incur liabilities under the name of the Alfords Bridge Co., and there is no Alfords Bridge Co. unless it is stated by this act. There is no liability; nobody can sue the Alfords Bridge Co., because there is no such thing unless it is incorporated by this act. While I do not suppose these gentlemen desire to get into that attitude, that is the attitude we put them in.

Mr. SWEET. And the committee does not wish to get into that attitude, either.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, the committee reported that bill.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, then, in the absence of my colleague [Mr. BRAND], who introduced the bill, that it be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

ADDITIONAL TERM OF COURT, RENSSELAER COUNTY, N. Y.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2999) to amend section 97 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, is the only change in the law contemplated in this bill the changing of the date of holding court, or what is it?

Mr. HUSTED. The only change proposed by the bill is to vest in the discretion of the court the right to hold a term in the county of Rensselaer in addition to the other places in the district where courts are now authorized to be held by law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is that in accordance with the bill that the gentleman recently introduced?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And not intended to revise that section? That bill, I think, only fixes the time.

Mr. HUSTED. It does not change the existing law at all, except that it authorizes, in the discretion of the court, the holding of a term in the county of Rensselaer in addition to the other places where the court may now be held. The reason of the amendment is because the Senate bill has some inaccuracies in it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Has the Committee on the Judiciary ever, in the practice it follows in reference to these bills, changed the time of holding court or modified the judicial districts or provided an additional place to hold court? Is it the practice of that committee to revise the section of the judicial title relating to a particular district?

Mr. HUSTED. It certainly was not the intention to do that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is the case here, of course. That is what we are doing here. That is what this bill is.

Mr. HUSTED. This bill simply adds one word to the existing statute. It does not change the statute at all. It simply adds the word "Rensselaer."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand. But this bill is an amendment in form to section 97 of the judicial title relating to the holding of court in this judicial district. Now, is it the practice of the Judiciary Committee to amend the existing statute in that way or to put in an independent statute? Have they in practice——

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman will find on examining the record that the practice of the Judiciary Committee is never to do it twice alike.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think the gentleman is correct. I have examined and read recent reports, and the Judiciary Committee has the craziest methods of transacting business in this regard that I have ever seen.

Mr. WALSH. And I indorse the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There ought to be some systematic method. For years back when the judicial title was passed as a law it was the usual practice to amend the section relating to a district so that if anybody got the statute he could find what it provided for in that district. But now here is a case which is reported from the Judiciary Committee to put one county in Georgia, or in some other of the remote Southern States, into another district, and nobody knows what it means.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; I yield the floor.

Mr. GARD. I think the policy of the Committee on the Judiciary heretofore has rather been that, instead of providing a method such as is incorporated in this bill, it provided for it in a special bill, calling attention to the one place sought to be included in the general law. I am convinced that that possibly is a better way.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This has been the prevailing practice since the judicial title was enacted into law.

Mr. GARD. I am inclined to believe——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It has not been the only practice, however.

Mr. GARD. I am inclined to believe that the amendment to the section includes all of the cities in New York where courts can be held, and therefore it presents it in such a comprehensive way that it is thought inadvisable to make a change.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York what the Committee on the Judiciary has to do with a bill to codify and revise the Statutes of the United States, anyway?

Mr. HUSTED. This bill came from the Senate and was referred by the Speaker to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LITTLE. Why? Have they authority over it?

Mr. HUSTED. I think it has been the uniform practice of the Committee on the Judiciary to exercise jurisdiction over terms of court, the places of holding of court, and the time of holding it.

Mr. LITTLE. The bill says this is "'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911." This bill to codify and revise that you are undertaking to amend was reported from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and when you began to amend it the bill should have been referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. The other day I introduced a bill to revise a law which had been put through by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and asked that it be referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and was told that because the original bill came from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce anything to amend or revise it should go to that committee. If that is correct, and it evidently was, for it went through, then any bill to amend an act to codify and revise should go to the committee which reported that bill when it became a law.

As a matter of fact, any bill to codify or revise should go to the Committee on Revision of the Laws under the rules, and the Committee on the Judiciary has no authority over it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman——

Mr. LITTLE. Let me finish that statement before the gentleman begins.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Kansas is getting into such deep water that the further on he goes the worse off he finds himself.

Mr. LITTLE. I like the deep water, and shall be able to take care of myself in it. The gentleman from Illinois has already done so much for our committee I like to take his advice, but just here is a detail of which I have made a special study. And let me add that the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce are, both of them, continually taking up and reporting bills over which they have no proper jurisdiction whatever. Half the trouble that arises in this House, due to the congestion of legislation, comes from the fact that most of these bills are referred to half a dozen committees and are cluttered up there and never get out. If any other committee gets up a little bill, something which they have studied, on a subject over which they have jurisdiction, you see it referred straightway to the Committee on the Judiciary or the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and it never appears again. That is where about half the stuff goes. Here is one instance where the gentlemen steered it through. The Committee on the Judiciary has no authority over this matter. That is a matter that belongs to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. In a moment. It belongs to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. But I do not think I shall object. The gentleman says it is the usual practice. But I say it is up to the minor committees of this House to see to it that they are allowed to exercise their proper jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Kansas is so far wrong that I think it would take but a moment to convince him of his error. His committee has jurisdiction over revision of the laws, and it has now under consideration a proposition to revise all the statutes of the United States. If his contention be correct, if we pass that bill into a law and then want to amend a section of it we shall have to send all the bills for amendment to the Committee on Revision of the Laws. How absurd that is.

Mr. LITTLE. Does the gentleman think he has convinced me?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It would be the only committee in the House practically. While the gentleman is a distinguished chairman and has an able committee, still the fact that he brings in a bill to revise the laws gives him no jurisdiction, after that bill becomes a law, over a bill to amend a section of the revised law.

Mr. LITTLE. Right now I will take issue with the distinguished parliamentarian about that, not because I think I know more parliamentary law than he, but because I happen to have made a careful study of the rules about this particular parliamentary law and have had a ruling on the point involved. The gentleman from Illinois was the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for some years. After he had gotten down to his work with that committee he succeeded in assimilating about half the important legislation of this House. One reason for it was that he was able to take care of it, and he and his committee wanted to work, and he was smart enough to take over all that business to his committee.

That same committee is now cluttered up with business which it has secured by reason of his mastery of parliamentary legislation. No one has done more to assemble the work of the House in one committee, his own, than this gentleman. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is the greatest master of legislation who ever sat in the House. He drew to his committee a vast amount of work; but because one man could accomplish so much as he did it does not follow that the House work should be done by a few committees. Now, he says he can demonstrate in a minute that I am wrong. I accept his challenge as to what he says is correct. The rules provide that there can be sent to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws any bill, as the gentleman says, to revise the statutes, and that means to amend the statutes, as the dictionary says, and the Committee on the Revision of the Laws is the only committee of the House that has jurisdiction to amend everything.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. LITTLE. In a second. My attention was called to the matter by the most distinguished parliamentarian in the House, perhaps, except the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who is now about to lecture me, I suppose. I shall present to the House before long a long line of decisions, which I think will show that I am right, to the effect that almost any bill could logically and technically be referred to this committee. I do not say that it ought to be done, any more than that it should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary or to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; but it is the only one of all that could technically assimilate them.

Now I will yield for the lecture that is to come from the distinguished gentleman from Missouri. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say at the outset that I am not going to lecture the gentleman, but I want to ask him this one question: If this bill were not referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, what committee could it go to?

Mr. LITTLE. To the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then, after a while you would have jurisdiction of all the bills in the House.

Mr. LITTLE. No. I say this is the only committee that could technically and legally, though I do not think it should.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the gentleman should be back here 20 years from now, he will find that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has grown to abnormal proportions and will have three-fourths of all the important business of this House before it. It has no business with this bill; neither has the committee of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes. The gentleman from Ohio is next on my list. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am only going to ask the gentleman if his committee would have jurisdiction over the revision of the existing tariff, to amend the existing law?

Mr. LITTLE. No; perhaps not. But since the gentleman has put it that way, I will say that the Committee on the Revision of the Laws has authority to act technically upon any bill to amend anything, even a tariff bill perhaps, and that possibly, technically, it might have that right. My attention was called to this rule by one of the most distinguished chairmen the Ways and Means ever had. Unquestionably our committee has much more authority to report this bill, under the rules, than the Committee on the Judiciary has to act upon many bills that are referred to it, or the Interstate Commerce on many that come from it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman construe the terms "revision" and "amendment" as synonymous?

Mr. LITTLE. The dictionary says to "revise" means to "amend."

Mr. WALSH. I am not asking the gentleman about what the dictionary says. I am asking the gentleman whether he contends that the terms "revision" and "amendment" are synonymous?

Mr. LITTLE. I will leave that to the dictionary.

Mr. WALSH. If that is the gentleman's rule, and he insists upon it, we must peruse pretty closely the reports of the gentleman's committee when he reports out the revision of the laws.

Mr. LITTLE. I hope the Members will as fast as the bill appears.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I was wondering whether the last interpretation that the gentleman gave to his committee would indicate that he intends to change its title to that of the "omnibus committee"? [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLE. That is what it was really called at first; something like that. [Laughter.] This committee 54 years ago was named as it is now; but before that time it had some name which was a sort of omnibus name. It was called the Committee on Unfinished Business and Revisal. Is that sufficiently "omnibus"? Everything went in there that they did not know what else to do with.

Mr. KING. Is was an omnipotent committee?

Mr. SWEET. Was it "anonymous" or "omnibus"? [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLE. I will give you the reason why I make this suggestion. The other day a bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and that was done because it was a bill to revise and amend an act that had been put through by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, and they said that because the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had put through the original bill, therefore anything to amend it or revise it had to go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. As a matter of fact, it was a bill with regard to health and had no more to do with interstate commerce than a bill on education.

I did not think it was good logic, and I do not think so now; but if it is going to obtain as the rule of the House, then any bill to revise and amend this judiciary act, which was a bill to codify and revise, should go to the Revision Committee, from which that law came. In other words, if a bill of ours which was turned over to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which did not have any earthly control of it, must go to that committee, because it amends and revises some interstate-commerce law, then this bill, which seeks to revise and amend a bill that our committee reported and put through, should have gone to this committee. The gentleman says that is absurd, but it is no more absurd than the rule that was perpetrated upon us, and we would like to see the same rules applied to all committees.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] suggests that perhaps in a short time three-fourths of all the business of the House will go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Pretty nearly that much goes there now, to that committee and the Judiciary Committee. If you will take the rules of the House and examine them, you will find that half the business that goes to the Committee on the Judiciary and half the business that goes to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce does not belong there at all. Some of our committees take charge of so much legislation that their bills are never ready till the end of the session or never come out of committee, and then we are abused for delay. Other committees are attacked by the charge that they do little. This leaves the principal work of the House to a few, and many have scant opportunity to legislate. The rules of the House should be so adjusted that every committee would be a working committee and every Congressman have a part in the work here. The real truth is, the rules correctly interpreted would greatly lessen the evil and equalize the opportunity. Every committee should insist on having whatever is coming to it. Our committee has in the general revision all it can do, and I am presenting a principle, not arguing for more work. If the principle is adopted, and the House endeavors to distribute its bills in a practical way, each will have some vital duty to perform. Then the big committees will not rush in just as we adjourn and ask us to hustle through legislation that should be studied long and carefully.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. LITTLE. I think it is time that the business of this House should go to the committees which were intended to consider it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LITTLE. I will not object, although I am a little bit tempted to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 97 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and it is, amended so as to read as follows:

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this bill, which proposes to amend section 97 of the Judicial Code, and which occupies four pages of print, is stricken out and an entire new section is reported as an amendment, for the purpose of correcting some typographical or other error. I ask unanimous consent that in lieu of reading the original section 97 as passed by the Senate the Clerk may read the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the committee amendment be read in lieu of the original bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of page 1, after line 6, and all of pages 2, 3, and 4 and insert the following:

"SEC. 97. The State of New York is divided into four judicial districts, to be known as the northern, eastern, southern, and western districts of New York. The northern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Albany, Broome, Cayuga, Chenango, Clinton, Courtland, Delaware, Essex, Franklin, Fulton, Hamilton, Herkimer, Jefferson, Lewis, Madison, Montgomery, Oneida, Onondaga, Oswego, Otsego, Rensselaer, St. Lawrence, Saratoga, Schenectady, Schoharie, Tioga, Tompkins, Warren, and Washington, with the waters thereof. Terms of the district court for said district shall be held at Albany on the second Tuesday in February; at Utica on the first Tuesday in December; at Binghamton on the second Tuesday in June; at Auburn on the first Tuesday in October; at Syracuse on the first Tuesday in April; and, in the discretion of the judge of the court, one term annually at such time and place within the counties of Rensselaer, Saratoga, Onondago, St. Lawrence, Clinton, Jefferson, Oswego, and Franklin, as he may from time to time appoint. Such appointment shall be made by notice of at least 20 days published in a newspaper published at the place where said court is to be held. The eastern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Richmond, Kings, Queens, Nassau, and Suffolk, with the waters thereof. Terms of the district court for said district shall be held at Brooklyn on the first Wednesday in every month. The southern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Columbia, Dutchess, Greene, New York, Orange, Putnam, Rockland, Sullivan, Ulster, and Westchester, with the waters thereof. Terms of the district court for said district shall be held at New York City on the first Tuesday in each month. The district courts of the southern and eastern districts shall have concurrent jurisdiction over the waters within the counties of New York, Kings, Queens, Nassau, Richmond, and Suffolk, and over all seizures made and all matters done in such waters; all processes or orders issued within either of said courts or by any judge thereof shall run and be executed in any part of said waters. The western district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Allegany, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Shemung, Erie, Genesee, Livingston, Monroe, Niagara, Ontario, Orleans, Schuyler, Seneca, Steuben, Wayne, Wyoming, and Yates, with the waters thereof. Terms of the district court for said district shall be held at Elmira on the second Tuesday in January; at Buffalo on the second Tuesdays in March and November; at Rochester on the second Tuesday in May; at Jamestown on the second Tuesday in July; at Lockport on the second Tuesday in October; and at Canandaigua on the second Tuesday in September. The regular sessions of the district court for the western district for the hearing of motions, and for proceedings in bankruptcy and the trial of causes in admiralty, shall be held at Buffalo at least two weeks in each month of the year, except August, unless the business is sooner disposed of. The times for holding the same and such other special sessions as the court shall deem necessary shall be fixed by rules of the court. All process in admiralty causes and proceedings shall be made returnable at Buffalo. The judge of any district in the State of New York may perform the duties of the judge of any other district in such State upon the request of any resident judge entered in the minutes of his court; and in such cases such judge shall have the same powers as are vested in the resident judge."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HUSTED, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS NIAGARA RIVER.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 118, the bill (S. 3427) to establish a commission to report to Congress on the practicability, feasibility, and place, and to devise plans for the construction of a public bridge over the Niagara River from some point in the city of Buffalo, N. Y., to some point in the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes, which was objected to, may remain on the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that Calendar No. 118, which was objected to and went off the calendar, may retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the gentleman will propose that it go to the foot of the calendar, I shall not object. Otherwise I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York ask unanimous consent that the bill go to the foot of the calendar?

Mr. MacGREGOR. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], I suppose I will have to ask that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SILVER STARS TO OFFICERS AND MEN CITED IN ORDERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10331) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to explain the reasonable necessity of passing a bill of this kind on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. SANFORD. The reason why it comes up on the Unanimous Consent Calendar is that that is the quickest way that I know of to get it up. We have tried to get these small bills up on Calendar Wednesday, but have not had any success. Would the gentleman like to know the purpose of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I should like to know the purpose of the bill.

Mr. SANFORD. In the last Army appropriation bill provision was made for awarding distinguished-service medals, and there was a provision that when an officer or a man was cited for gallantry on the field of action; that is, when cited from the headquarters of a brigade—I think that is what the law meant—he should receive a silver star. Now, it happens that the language used in the appropriation bill was peculiar. It said—

When cited from headquarters of a force commanded by a general officer.

It happened in the World War that some brigades were not commanded by generals but by colonels, or possibly by lieutenant colonels. So when an officer received a citation for gallantry on the field of action, if it afterwards happened to be discovered that at that time his brigade was commanded by a colonel, then he could not get his silver star. The purpose of the bill is to correct that obvious injustice and to permit the awarding of these silver stars in all the cases where Congress clearly intended they should be awarded, namely, where soldiers were cited for gallantry in brigade orders.

Mr. GARD. Is there any change in the existing law except providing that the orders shall have been issued from the headquarters of a force which is the appropriate command of a general officer?

Mr. SANFORD. The only change of the existing law is the addition of the words—or which is the appropriate command of.

Mr. GARD. Do I understand that the bill has the approval of the War Department in that respect?

Mr. SANFORD. Certainly. It has the approval of everybody who has read it, I think.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, as constitutes the fifth section under the subheading "Medals of honor, distinguished-service crosses, and distinguished-service medals" (40 Stats. L., p. 871), be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That no more than one medal of honor or one distinguished-service cross or one distinguished-service medal shall be issued to any one person; but for each succeeding deed or act sufficient to justify the award of a medal of honor or a distinguished-service cross or a distinguished-service medal, respectively, the President may award a suitable bar or other suitable device, to be worn as he shall direct. And for each citation of an officer or enlisted man for gallantry in action, published in orders issued from the headquarters of a force commended by, or which is the appropriate command of, a general officer, not warranting the award of a medal of honor or distinguished-service cross, he shall be permitted to wear, as the President shall direct, a silver star three-sixteenths of an inch in diameter."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move that in line 8, page 2, the word "commended" be stricken out and the word "commanded" be inserted.

Mr. SANFORD. I concur in that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are rescinded.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SUMMERS of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CONNECTICUT RIVER, MASS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10558) granting the consent of Congress to the Connecticut River Railroad Co., its lessees, successors, and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Connecticut River Railroad Co., its lessees, successors, and assigns, be, and they hereby are, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Connecticut River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, one end of said bridge being in the city of Holyoke and the other in the city of Chicopee, Mass., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask my colleague if this bridge has already been constructed.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is to repair an existing bridge that can only be used now for one track of the railroad. It is desired to be able to use two tracks. The bill has the approval of the War Department.

Mr. WALSH. I notice that the bill says in line 7 "one end of said bridge being in the city of Holyoke and the other in the city of Chicopee." I suppose that the new bridge that is to be constructed will have its respective ends in the same cities. [Laughter.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, yes; one end in each city.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, what is the reason for inserting the provision in reference to the lessees? It is rather unusual.

Mr. TREADWAY. The Connecticut River Railroad Co. has leased this road to the Boston & Maine. I suppose that is the reason why the phrase is used in that form. The Connecticut River Railroad Co. does not actually carry on the transportation, although it has the original charter. The road has been leased to the Boston & Maine, and, of course, now is in the hands of the Railroad Administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TREADWAY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill H. R. 10331, passed a moment ago, and on that bill I ask unanimous consent to strike out section 2. I do that because the bill carries the words "are rescinded," where it should be "are repealed." I am told that the provision is unnecessary, and I ask unanimous consent to strike out section 2.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Ohio desires to amend the bill as indicated, he can ask unanimous consent that all proceedings with respect to the bill be vacated and ask for a third reading of the bill.

Mr. GARD. I do not desire to embarrass anyone who has charge of the bill. I merely suggest that that should be done.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. GARD. The request is that all proceedings as to H. R. 10331 be vacated and that section 2 as it appears in the bill be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

Mr. SANFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FISHERIES AT PEARL HARBOR, HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10873) to provide for the acquisition by the United States of private rights of fishery in and about Pearl Harbor, Hawaiian Islands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to examine and appraise the value of the privately owned rights of fishery in Pearl Harbor, island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii, from an imaginary line from Kaak Point to Beckoning Point, both within said harbor, to the seaward, and the privately owned rights of fishery in and about the entrance channel to said harbor, and to enter into negotiations for the purchase of the said rights and, if in his judgment the price for such rights is reasonable and satisfactory, to make contracts for the purchase of same subject to future ratification and appropriation by Congress; or, in the event of the inability of the Secretary of the Navy to make a satisfactory contract for the voluntary purchase of the said rights of fishery, he is hereby authorized and directed through the Attorney General to institute and carry to completion proceedings for the condemnation of said rights of fishery, the acceptance of the award in said proceedings to be subject to the future ratification and appropriation by Congress. Such condemnation proceedings shall be instituted and conducted in, and jurisdiction of said proceedings is hereby given to, the district court of the United States for the district of Hawaii, substantially as provided in "An act to authorize condemnation of land for sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved August 1, 1888; and the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated to pay the necessary costs thereof and expenses in connection therewith. The Secretary of the Navy is further authorized and directed to report the proceedings hereunder to Congress.

The following committee amendments were read:

On page 1, strike out the words "Hawaiian Islands" in the title and insert in lieu thereof the words "Territory of Hawaii."

On page 2, in line 13, after the word "hereby," strike out the word "appropriated" and insert in lieu thereof the words "authorized to be appropriated, to be immediately and continuously available until expended."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were 52 ayes and 8 noes.

So the bill was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the acquisition by the United States of private rights of fishery in and about Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii."

On motion of Mr. CURRY of California, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENGRAVED SIGNATURES ON NATIONAL-BANK NOTES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2902) to amend section 5182, Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it national-bank notes are now permitted to have printed signatures rather than written ones, except as to bills of small denomination.

Mr. PLATT. No national-bank notes have engraved signatures; that is, the signatures of the president or vice president. We passed a bill through the House of Representatives in the last Congress, or bills have been passed through the House of Representatives within a few years—I think certainly once, if not twice—to allow engraving of the signatures of the president or the vice president of national banks on bank notes; but those bills, I think, each time have been left over in the Senate at the close of the Congress. I was rather surprised to have this bill come up for passage, because I thought it was already a law.

Mr. WALSH. If this becomes a law it means the end of written signatures on national-bank notes?

Mr. PLATT. Not necessarily. It would depend on the size of the banks. The small banks, I presume, would probably still prefer to sign the notes.

Mr. WALSH. Then this is not compulsory?

Mr. PLATT. No. The bill reads "either written or engraved."

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman states that the bill which we passed here in a previous Congress—I think in the Sixty-fourth—affecting notes of larger denominations was not enacted into law?

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman refer to the bill which was passed just before the recent recess?

Mr. WALSH. It was at the end of the Congress.

Mr. PLATT. We passed a bill with regard to making gold certificates legal tender just before the recess of this Congress a few weeks ago. That bill has already been signed by the President.

Mr. WALSH. And this puts these national-bank notes on the same basis as the Federal reserve notes?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And United States notes?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; it is in some measure a part of the same effort to increase the number of small bills. It is quite a job for the president of a national bank to sign a lot of small bills. The banks are allowed to issue $1 and $2 notes up to $25,000 for each bank, but they do not issue them as a rule. They issue only bills of larger denominations. At the present time most of the small bills are United States notes, Federal reserve bank notes, or silver certificates, and the silver certificates are gradually disappearing.

Mr. WALSH. Will this stimulate the issue of small notes, simply because the presidents of the banks do not have to sign them?

Mr. PLATT. It will have that tendency.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will this help us to get any money in large bunches?

Mr. PLATT. It will, though perhaps not in large amounts. Of course, a bank president can sign a $100 bill very easily, but if he has to sign 100 $1 bills it will take some time.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House we are absolutely unable to hear the discussion that is going on, although we know that it is not only interesting but instructive.

Mr. WALSH. We are talking about national-bank notes, and I would not suppose gentlemen over on the Democratic side would have very much interest in such a thing as that.

Mr. DONOVAN. Oh, the remark of the gentleman from Massachusetts is not becoming, because it seems to me not to be germane. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLATT. I will say to my colleague from New York, if the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit, I suppose the city of New York still has some interest in small bills—ones and twos.

Mr. DONOVAN. Certainly it has.

Mr. PLATT. We do not want to require the bank presidents, who may have more important duties, to sign them all with a pen.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like the assurance of the gentleman that this bill which is now sought to be considered by unanimous consent is identical with the measure which was up in the last Congress, or the one before that, which passed the House, but which failed at the end of the Congress.

Mr. PLATT. I am not certain as to the exact language, but I know it is similar in language.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, my recollection is that we passed an identical bill in the identical language twice in the last five years.

Mr. PLATT. That is my recollection.

Mr. WINGO. This bill does not affect the legal situation at all. It has been held that national banks are liable on their unsigned notes, if they put them out unsigned, and this would simply permit the same method of signatures on national-bank notes that we now use on Treasury notes and on other notes. We now print them at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing instead of having the Treasurer and the register sign them. We propose to simplify the process of putting out national-bank notes, and permit the Government when it prints the notes for the bank to print the signatures at the same time, not letting these gentlemen have the pleasure they used to enjoy of signing their names on a lot of money.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; if I have the floor.

Mr. TILSON. Do I understand the gentleman to say if this becomes a law that these bank officials instead of writing their names will have the names engraved on the small bills, the ones and the twos?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly; on all bills which they issue.

Mr. TILSON. Do banks issue any such denominations as $1 and $2 bills?

Mr. PLATT. The banks are allowed to issue them, but few have been issued. It is a little easier to get the one and two dollar bills if the bank presidents are not required to sign them all with a pen.

Mr. TILSON. That is the size of the bill I usually handle, but it has never been my good fortune to see a national-bank note of the denomination of $1 and $2.

Mr. PLATT. There have been a few issued. My recollection is about $340,000 of $1 notes and about $160,000 of $2 notes.

Mr. TILSON. I was wondering if it was because of the law or because of the inconvenience, and if this will remove the inconvenience hereafter in getting the $1 and $2 bills from the banks?

Mr. PLATT. That is the idea. I will say now to the gentleman from Massachusetts, if he wants further enlightenment on this bill, that it merely adds, in lines 7 and 8, the words "or engraved," and at the beginning of line 12 there are a few words different from the present law to allow the signatures to be made either before or after the receipt of the bills. Of course where they are printed they have to be made before.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5182, Revised Statutes of the United States, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5182. Any association receiving circulating notes under this title may, if its promise to pay such notes on demand is expressed thereon, attested by the written or engraved signatures of the president or vice president and the cashier thereof in such manner as to make them obligatory promissory notes payable on demand at its place of business, issue, and circulate the same as money. Such written or engraved signatures of the president or vice president and the cashier of such association may be attached to such notes either before or after the receipt of such notes by such association. And such notes shall be received at par in all parts of the United States in payment of taxes, excises, public lands, and all other dues to the United States, except duties on imports; and also for all salaries and other debts and demands owing by the United States to individuals, corporations, and associations within the United States, except interest on the public debt, and in redemption of the national currency."

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PLATT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TOMBIGBEE RIVER NEAR IRON WOOD BLUFF, MISS.

The next business in order on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11025) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Tombigbee River near Iron Wood Bluff, in Itawamba County, Miss.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I doubt whether it is wise to attempt to pass this important measure in the absence of the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi who introduced it. Many of us have not heard of the glories of the Tombigbee River——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Where is the Tombigbee River?

Mr. WALSH. I was about to state many of us have not heard of the glories of the Tombigbee River, nor are we quite certain as to its definite location and——

Mr. CRAMTON. It is near Iron Wood Bluff.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Michigan says it is near Iron Wood Bluff. I am sure that——

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. I just received a letter from Mr. CANDLER, who is compelled to remain at home on account of the sickness of his wife, asking that this matter be taken up in order that the work may proceed. Nobody on earth can tell as much about the glories of the Tombigbee River as the gentleman who is absent, but I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts, in his great anxiety to hear something in reference to the Tombigbee River, will not inconvenience him in reference to the passage of this measure on that account, and I assure him he shall have it hereafter, because the gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman assures me we shall hear of the glories of the Tombigbee River hereafter in this life——

Mr. SIMS. I can warrant it——

Mr. WALSH. Then I will not object in view of the absence of the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of supervisors of Itawamba County, Miss., is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tombigbee River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation near Iron Wood Bluff, in Itawamba County, Miss., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

ADMIRAL JELLICOE.

At 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m. Admiral Jellicoe, attended by his staff, entered the Executive gallery amid loud applause, the Members rising.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I know that the Members of the House are greatly interested in the fact that we have the honor of a visit from one of the greatest captains and commanders of the World War. [Applause.] The gentlemen of the House of Representatives have already expressed their appreciation of his presence in the gallery by rising. I suggest that we again rise and thereby further express our appreciation of the very great services to the world, our appreciation of the visit here of the hero of the Battle of Jutland, Viscount John Jellicoe, admiral of the British Fleet. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that when the admiral retires from the gallery he is going to the Speaker's room, where he will be glad to meet any Members of the House who would like to shake hands with him. [Applause.]

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TOMBIGBEE RIVER NEAR IRON WOOD BLUFF, MISS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "an" and insert the word "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WINGO, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] have consent to extend his own remarks upon the bill (H. R. 11025) relative to bridging the Tombigbee River near some bluff.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] have permission to extend his own remarks on the bill referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I object.

DEATH OF HON. WALTER ALLEN WATSON, OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound regret I arise to announce the death of my colleague, Hon. WALTER A. WATSON, the Representative of the fourth Virginia district in this House for the past eight years, who died in the city of Washington on the 24th day of December and was laid to rest at his home in Virginia on December 26, where an enormous concourse of his friends and admirers from all parts of the State had gathered. At another time, Mr. Speaker, I shall ask that a day be set apart on which the Members can pay their tribute of respect to this much-beloved man who so recently was our colleague. I now offer the following resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WALTER ALLEN WATSON, a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet Tuesday, January 6, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statement showing number of employees in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing whose compensation from items carried in sundry civil bill but who are detailed for clerical work in the bureau (H. 20. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, submitting an estimate of appropriation for the payment of military and naval compensation, funeral expenses, services, and supplies, as authorized by law, for the remainder of the current fiscal year (H. Doc. No. 562); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

21. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required for public schools, District of Columbia, fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 563); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10287) granting the consent of Congress to the Interstate Construction Corporation to construct a bridge across the Columbia River, between the States of Oregon and Washington, at or within 2 miles westerly from Cascade Locks, in the State of Oregon, and granting a license to construct and maintain the approach to said bridge over property belonging to the Government of the United States, reported the same without amendment accompanied by a report (No. 530), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MAPES, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7158) to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 531), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11135) granting an increase of pension to August H. Knippenberg; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 5478) granting a pension to James Noe; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 6090) granting a pension to Sophia Doering; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON: A bill (H. R. 11425) to provide for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a public building thereon at Canton, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11426) to provide for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a public building thereon at Flandreau, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CLASSON: A bill (H. R. 11427) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate the claim of any mixed-blood Menominee Indian who participated in the payment of the sum of $40,000 provided for in article 4 of the treaty with the Menominee Indians of October 18, 1848, or any descendant of such Indian, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11428) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, and adjudicate claims which the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BARBOUR: A bill (H. R. 11429) to increase the limit of cost of the post-office building to be erected at Bakersfield, Calif.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 11430) to punish offenses against the existence of the Government of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON: A bill (H. R. 11431) to give the Federal Trade Commission power and authority to allocate and distribute the available supply of print paper; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FERRIS: A bill (H. R. 11432) to prohibit the export of print paper from the United States; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WINGO: A bill (H. R. 11433) to provide for the erection of a public building at Nashville, Ark.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11434) to provide for the erection of a public building at De Queen, Ark.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11435) to provide for the erection of a public building at Van Buren, Ark.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MOORE of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 11436) to provide for the erection of an addition to the post-office building at Alexandria, Va., and for acquiring the land necessary therefor, and for use in connection with the building; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
